THE KING IS COMING.

TUNE—"Tramp, tramp, tramp."

In this weary world we wait,
Looking, blessed Lord, for thee,
And the great and glorious day so soon to come,
When the city's pearly gate,
And the streets of gold we'll see,
And the walls of precious stones—Jerusalem!

CHORUS.—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

We are weary of the world,
Of its trials and its snares,
And we're often almost fainting by the way;
But the saddened eye grows bright,
And the heart beats with delight,
When we think we're near the dawning of the day.

CHORUS.—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

Then with patience we will wait,
For the time draws very nigh,
We can see the day-star shining in the sky;
And we know the night is past,
And the day is hasting fast,
Hear the watchman give the last great warning cry!

CHORUS.—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER TWO.

Ver. 8,—"All these are the beginning of sorrow;" i. e., the beforementioned events are to cluster around the commencement of that long period of papal tribulation which is to come on the church of Christ. It is generally conceded that the twelve hundred and sixty years of persecution had their beginning somewhere in the reign of Justinian, from 529 to 533. And from the foregoing quotation from history, it will be seen that the age of Justinian, more than any other sovereign that ever occupied an earthly throne, was distinguished by famine, pestilence, and earthquakes in divers places; so that it is said that during his reign there was a gradual decrease in the human species.

Ver. 9,—"Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted; and shall kill you, and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." It was in the days of Justinian that the saints were delivered into the little horn power, which was to wear them out for a time, times, and the dividing of time; during which time they were hated of all nations for Jesus' sake. This was not and could not have been fulfilled in the persecutions the Jews were subjected to; for in the room of their being hated for Jesus' sake, they were the most inveterate haters of Christ and his people that could be found, and remain so to this day.

But without any chance to doubt, it refers to Christ's elect. They are the ones who have been hated for the name and sake of Jesus. 1. By the Jews. 2. By the Romans. 3. By the Mahommedans. 4. By the Pagan nations in general, wherever the standard of the cross has been reared. 5. By the apostate christians, all of whom have taken their turn in wreaking their vengeance on the innocent flock of God.

Ver. 10,—"And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another." I understand this to have reference to the age of the church distinguished by the Inquisition; because there is such fitness in the language employed in the prophecy to the facts in history relating to that institution, which has so profusely shed the blood of the saints of the Most High.

It is very evident that the papal tribulation is to be divided into two parts, one of which comes under the special superintendence of the holy office of the Inquisition, as it is called. And this may be seen by reference to the opening of the fourth and fifth seals; bne bringing to view a tribulation from the establishment of the Inquisition until the commencement of the signs which are to precede the second Advent of Christ.

When the sixth seal was opened, the same events are brought to view of which Matthew speaks as taking place immediately after the tribulation of those days, and indicative of the near approach of the end. But as illustrative of the prophecy—"Many shall be offended and hate and betray one another"—having its fulfillment in the Romish Inquisition, we will subjoin the testimony of Dr. Achili, who was once a functionary in the Church of Rome, who, on account of his renunciation of Romanism has made himself an object of inquisitorial hate. In his life and experience he has furnished us facts of a most striking character. He says:—

"The Inquisition declares that in matters of offence against religion, it is the positive and bounden duty of every one to become an accuser. Children may and ought to accuse parents, wives their husbands, and servants their masters. The law is in accordance with the decrees of several popes, that whosoever becomes [illegible] religion, whether from his own knowledge or hearsay, is bound within fifteen days to bring forward his accusation before an inquisitor, or the vicar of the Holy Office, or, where these are not present, before a bishop. The crime, whatever it may be, not only attaches to the principal and the accomplice, but also to every one who knows of it and does not reveal it; so that if you, for example, dear reader, should unfortunately belong to the church of the Inquisition, you would be obliged to accuse, not only me who addresses you, but all those together who with yourself listen to me; and whoever knows that you have listened to my discourses, although he himself may never have heard me, is under obligation to denounce me to the Inquisition.

I will here relate a fact which always pains me to recall to mind, and which, until the present occasion, I have never before spoken about.

During my residence at Viterbo, my native town, where I was public professor and teacher in the school di Gradi, I was one day applied to by a lady of prepossessing appearance, to see me in the sacristry. And as I entered the apartment where she was waiting for me, she begged the sacristan to leave us alone, and suddenly closing the door, presented a moving spectacle to my eyes. Throwing off her bonnet, and letting loose in a moment her long and beautiful tresses, the lady fell upon her knees before me, and gave vent to her grief in an abundance of sighs and tears. On my endeavoring to encourage her, and to persuade her to rise and to unfold her mind to me, she at length, in a voice broken by sobs, thus addressed me:—

'No, father, I will never rise from this position unless you first promise to pardon my heavy transgression.'

Although much younger than herself, she addressed me as father.

'Signora,' replied I, 'it belongs to God to pardon our transgressions. If you have in any way injured me, so far I can forgive; but I confess I have no cause of complaint against you, with whom indeed I have not the pleasure of being acquainted.'

'I have been guilty of great sin, for which no priest will grant me absolution unless you will beforehand remit it to me.'

'You must explain yourself more fully; as yet I have no idea of what you allude to.'

'It is about a year since I received absolution from my confessor, and in the last few days he has entirely forbid me his presence, telling me that I am damned. I have tried others, and all tell me the same thing. One, however, has lately informed me that if I wish to be saved and pardoned I must apply to you, who, after the pope, are the only one who can grant me absolution.'

'Signora, there is some mistake here; explain yourself; of what description is your sin?'

'It is against the Holy Office.'

'Well, but I have nothing to do with the Holy Office.'

'How? are not you Father Achili, the vicar of the Holy Office?'

'You have been misinformed, Signora. I am Achili, the deputy master of the Holy Palace, not Office. You may see my name, with this title prefixed, to all works that are printed here, in lieu of the master himself. I assure you that neither my principal nor myself have any authority in cases which regard the Inquisition.'

The good lady hereupon rose from her knees, arranged her hair, wiped the tears from her eyes, and asked leave to relate her case to me, and having sat down, began as follows:

'It is not quite a year since I was going, about the time of Easter, according to my usual custom, to confess my sins to my parish priest. He being well acquainted with me and our family, began to interrogate me respecting my son, the only one I have, a young man twenty-four years of age, full of patriotic ardor, but with little respect for the priests. It happened that I observed to the curate that notwithstanding my remonstrances, my son was in the habit of saying that the business of the priests was a complete deception, and that the head of all the impostors was the pope himself. Would I had never told him! The curate would hear no further.

"It is your duty," said he, "to denounce your son to the Inquisition."

Imagine what I felt at this intimation. To be the accuser of my own son!

"Such is the case," said he; "there is no help for it. I cannot absolve you, neither can any one else, until the thing is done."'

In carrying out the principles of the Inquisition, as elucidated in the foregoing narrative, can we conceive of a more striking fulfillment of the prophecy,—"Many shall be offended, and shall hate one another, and betray one another." A father and a mother to reveal the thoughts of their own children, so trustingly confided to them; a revelation that may lead to their death. Well did our Savior say, eighteen hundred years since, parents shall betray their children to death, and children shall rise up and cause parents to be put to death, and the time draweth nigh. This crime is to be charged upon the Romish Inquisition.

Ver. 11,—"And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many." These things are peculiar to the time of the end. A false prophet is one who augurs falsely or incorrectly for the future. One who cries peace when God hath not spoken peace, and flatters the multitude with the promise of earthly good, when desolation is about to grasp the enemies of the Lord within the folds of its withering arms. Such were the false prophets of old, who misguided the Jewish nation, and such are the false teachers (prophets) of our own time. They are to be found in church and state; in the sanctuary, and in the legislative assembly.

In the midst of the flaming signals God has hung out in the heavens above, and while the thrones of heavenly potentates are reeling, and republics are being dismembered, the statesman flatters the multitude with the hope of national aggrandizement unparalleled in history, and opportunities for the acquirement of individual wealth such as were never known before. And the professed ministers of Christ, in the room of heralding abroad in thunder tones the coming of the Lord to judge the world in righteousness, to break the nations with a rod of iron and dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel, are also engaged in echoing the cry of peace and safety, saying, "The vision that he seeth is for many days, and he prophesieth of the times afar off." Through these agencies Christ said many would be deceived, and many are being deceived. It is the coming of Christ that constitutes the Day Star of hope to this world. To adopt it as such is that which makes for our peace.

Ver. 15,—"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." How strikingly this is fulfilled at the present time. Turn our eyes which way we will, the apostasy of the heart of the church is evident. It is a time-serving, pleasure-seeking age. For iniquity to abound is for sin and wickedness to go unrestrained, like the breaking loose of the pent up fires of a volcano, or the removal of the embankment of a vast reservoir; the water gushes with an irresistible power, inundating every thing around, bearing upon its bosom the spoils of devastation. So iniquity, loosed from its moorings, goes unrestrained. Licensed and tolerated in church and state, loyalty and conformity to christian principles is slackened, and as a natural result, the love of many waxes cold.

The spirit of the world and the spirit of christians is so averse to each other that any disposition on the part of the church to conform to the spirit and customs of the world, can but have the effect to chill the ardor of her love to Christ. Love to Christ professed, and love to Christ exemplified, are quite two things.

Probably the aggregate number of professed christians never amounted to what it does now at any one time in the past; but does her piety compare with the past? I think not. Her prayer-meetings, which are to be looked upon as the thermometer of the church, have gone down to zero; but few in number and powerless at that. Her reformations, of which she boasts so much, are mere religious spasms. Compare the hundreds reported to have experienced a work of grace in the town of ——, under the labors of Rev. Mr. ——, a popular revivalist, with what we have recorded concerning the labors of the apostles and the effect produced, and there is a wide contrast.

Of the converts of eighteen hundred years ago it is said,—"They turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." Again,—"They continued steadfast in the apostles' doctrine, and in breaking bread and in fellowship." "They came behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

But what can be said of the many who put on the christian profession now? To the fundamental elements of revealed truth, which teach us to look for the revelation of the Son of God from heaven, and to lay hold of the resurrection from the dead as the hope set before us, they seem indifferent and are ignorant of them. Far more pains are taken to gratify a love of pleasure, than to promote the cause of truth.

Says H. Bonar in the London Quarterly, Journal of Prophecy, for January, 1850,—"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict or wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the devil day by day, making us long for resurrection and deliverance—for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's arrival.

"It is a second rate religion; a religion in which there is no largeness, grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fine exterior, but an aching heart; a heart unsatisfied; a soul not at rest; a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings.

"It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times; very different from the indomitable, much enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of the apostolic days, but even of the Reformation.

"It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing. There is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm which drew the bow is paralyzed."

Is not the above, and much more that might be said of this generation, true? Yet how changed the promise.

Ver. 13,—"He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Blessed assurance this to the scattered flock, who are so fearful of stumbling and denying the word of God. Though few in number, they are the chosen ones of the Lord Almighty. They shall be saved. This is the Lord's firm decree.

Ver. 14,—"And this gospel of the kingdom shall first be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." This gospel of the kingdom is to be a sign and witness to all nations that the end of the age is near.

In giving an exposition of this verse, a number of questions may be asked and a number of points considered.

1. What is this gospel of the kingdom?
2. What is "all the world" referred to?
3. Has it been thus preached in all the world for a witness?

1. Dr. Clarke says the word Gospel is of Saxon origin, and signifies good message.—Uangelion is its correspondent in the Greek, which signifies good news, and thus some give it this rendering: "This good news of the kingdom shall first be preached," etc.

The gospel of the kingdom can mean nothing short of a proclamation of the near approach of the kingdom, based upon the signs of the times as its evidences. There can be nothing plainer than this: that the kingdom of God is a future dispensation, and that the setting up of it is to be preceded by signs, and that when these signs are developed, the near approach of the kingdom is to be heralded to the world.

There was something similar to this exhibited at the first advent of Christ. John came from the wilderness preaching the gospel of the kingdom, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Christ, the Redeemer, came in immediate succession, saying, "The time is fulfilled," and "the kingdom of heaven is at hand; repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel." Next, he chose the twelve, and seventy, and sent them into every place whither he himself would come, saying, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel until the Son of man be come," telling them lastly that there were some standing there who should not taste death till they saw the kingdom of God. Now all this movement was confined to the Jewish nation, and they being a typical people, the promise that the kingdom should appear to them was fulfilled by the manifestation of the kingdom to them in its miniature form. The place of its manifestion was the Mount of Olives. The eye witnesses of his Majesty were Peter, James, and John, one of whom (Peter) plainly declared afterwards, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we make known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his Majesty."

Thus we have the gospel of the kingdom preached at the first advent to one nation, as a witness to them, followed by a miniature exhibition of the kingdom to that generation. So there is to be a proclamation of the evidences of the speedy advent and kingdom of the Messiah to all nations as a witness, and this is what we are to understand by this gospel of the kingdom. A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

SOME REASONS

FOR NOT BELIEVING FEET WASHING A RELIGIOUS ORDINANCE.

I rejoice and thank God with all my heart that I am associated with a people who set inestimable value on the WORD of God; who take this word as their guide, ignoring human creeds, so far as they conflict with God's law, making every thing human bow to the Divine. But I regret exceedingly that certain burdens should be imposed on God's people which God never intended his people should bear; burdens, too, calculated to bring scandal on the church, and dishonor to the cause it professes to serve. I allude now to the subject of feet-washing being practised as an "ordinance." I have no desire to sit in judgment on those denominations which practise feet-washing; but when they try to impose it upon us, I demur, yea more, I plainly and positively declare I do not believe that Jesus Christ ever intended his followers should practise it as an ordinance.

My first reason for not believing is, because the apostles, who listened to all Jesus said upon the subject, would have practised it thus, if they had understood it to be an ordinance. But not a chapter or verse, in all the Acts of the Apostles or their epistles, contain any intimation that any church or any company of disciples ever assembled to celebrate the washing of feet, or ever did celebrate such an ordinance when assembled for any other purpose. They often make mention of the Lord's Supper, and of baptism, showing that ALL who gladly received the word were baptized, both men and women; but not a word through the entire writings of the apostles relative to feet-washing as an ordinance. It is mentioned but once in their writings, and then it is plainly apparent an act of hospitality and not a religious ordinance.

In 1 Tim. 5: 10, the apostle enumerates a catalogue of good works the widow who was maintained by the church was in the habit of performing; not a word about ordinances, but GOOD WORKS. She must have passed the age incident to youthful effervescence; she must at least be sixty. "Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet"; and then concludes with—"if she have diligently followed every good WORK." Now for any one to maintain that the apostle here introduces ONE ordinance in this catalogue of good works, to the exclusion of the others, seems the very quintessence of inconsistency. The idea would be then, that if she had diligently followed every good work, and one ordinance, she was a proper subject for the church to maintain. What an absurdity! I think it must appear obvious to all that the apostle did not single out one ordinance and place it in the catalogue of works; but that he recognized the whole list as acts of christian benevolence, instead of any ordinance. And this is the only mention made of it in the apostles' writings.

A second reason why I do not believe feet-washing to be an ordinance is, that an ordinance always typifies something calculated to lead the mind to the great Author of our salvation, and to the atoning sacrifice by which the salvation had been effected. What a lively figure is the Lord's Supper,—to perpetuate the memory of his broken body and spilled blood so freely offered for our salvation. And not less significant is the ordinance of Baptism, by which we show our faith in the death, burial and resurrection of our great Head, and consequently of the whole body. 1 Cor. 15: 12–23.

But what does feet-washing typify relative to the great plan of salvation? Says one, It was designed by our Savior to teach his disciples a lesson of humility. Granted. But was it his intention to have his church perpetuate it as an ordinance? Was it not rather his design to inculcate the principle of equality among his disciples? I feel authorized by the Scriptures to adopt the latter position, because I never find an ordinance given to inculcate a moral precept, or one of the christian graces; but as before mentioned, to point the mind to the grand plan of redemption.

In order to show the design of Christ in washing his disciples' feet, let us look at some incidents prior to this act, which bear a marked affinity to, and, as I understand, set forth the same moral.

It will be recollected that Jesus had discovered a feeling of emulation existing at times among his disciples, and sought immediately to suppress the same by plain precept as well as illustrating acts. Fearing his disciples might be influenced by God's professed church (the Jews), who sought honorary seats and titles of distinction, he cautioned them against taking a title calculated to promote them above their brethren: "Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, and all ye are brethren." He also brought before their mind the manner of the Gentiles, to show them their government should be wholly unlike that of the Gentiles. Said Christ, "The princes and great ones exercise dominion and authority" upon them; but instead of that being the case with his church, the chief should be the greatest servant of all.

There was a time when this spirit of arrogance had become so rife, that the twelve apostles had actually disputed among themselves which should be the greatest. Jesus immediately questions them respecting the matter as they came into his presence, at which they appear disconcerted, for they all observe profound silence. Jesus had before taught them, by precept, that they were to consider themselves on a level; but now he makes use of an illustratory act, to fix the principles of equality upon them He takes a little child and sets him in the midst of his twelve apostles as a pattern of humility, showing them that they should be as free from ambition and lust of power as was this little child; otherwise they forfeited their right and title to the kingdom of heaven. Mark 9: 36.

Now it seems just as proper to continue this act of setting a little child in the midst of the Church or Ministry as an "ordinance," as to wash each other's feet. Or, because Jesus said, 'Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward," we perform this as an ordinance, instead of administering to the necessary wants of God's children. What if I were to offer a cup of cold water to one of God's children when I knew he or she was not thirsty, and at the same time I knew they had need of a piece of bread? Think I should receive the smiles of the Master? No. It is the necessities of God's children we are to give heed to, without regard to position. However rich, refined and learned a position we may have been placed in by Providence, we cannot withhold our services with impunity from the poorest and most illiterate of God's children when in real need. We must not feel above taking the place of a servant in administering to Christ's flock when necessity so requires, seems to be the language or lesson taught in John 13.

And as the latest words and acts of friends, prior to their decease, make the most indelible impression on the memory of living friends, the Master improves the solemn moment just before his betrayal and death, to rivet this principle of condescension and equality among his children when need required. But, says one, was there any necessity about feet-washing? Yes, it was one of the most distinguished acts of hospitality proffered to guests in that country, from the fact that most of their journeyings were performed on foot through the burning sand, either barefoot or only with sandals; hence it was one of the most acceptable refreshments offered the weary guest. Thus thought Abraham, it appears from Gen. 18: 4; when the angels visited him, he treated them with every token of reverence, hospitality, and kindness. After manifesting all the politeness of eastern etiquette, the first refreshment he offers is water for their feet. And when they arrived at Sodom, Lot did the same thing.

According to history, both sacred and profane, it was the place for the lowest servant to wash the feet of the weary guest; hence Christ proved by this act that the chief might be servant of all. Matt. 20: 27. We see that Peter regarded this as a servile act, instead of an ordinance, from the objection he offers. Think you he would have objected to his Lord administering an ordinance to himself and brethren? No; it is quite evident this was regarded as an honor. John objected to administering an ordinance to Christ on the ground of his own inferiority. I presume Peter and all the rest enjoyed Christ officiating in the ordinance of the Supper. I think it obvious, from the tenth verse, that historians and commentators inform us correctly, when they tell us it was the custom to take a thorough bath just before partaking of the paschal meal. As soon as Jesus informs Peter of the necessity of submitting to have his Master wash his feet, he desires him to do more—to wash his hands and head. "Jesus saith to him, he that is washed NEEDETH not, save to wash his feet, for be is clean every whit"; showing by this language he had just bathed, consequently there was no NEED only to bathe his feet, which might have become soiled in walking from the bath.

Then, Master, it is only when feet are soiled, or dirty, and NEED washing, that we are to do it? And when any of the flock are sick, or too weary to perform this act for themselves, those who are hale and hearty should perform it for them. Thus I understand the Master, and thus I will do.

After Christ had washed their feet, he inquired if they knew what he had done to them? They of course knew he had washed their feet. But he would take this opportunity to make them know by questioning them the gist of his teaching. John 6: 6. He does not question them relative to the Supper, because that was an ordinance pointing to the great atoning sacrifice; and that feet-washing was to inculcate, not a single duty, but the whole class of religious hospitalities, involving the principle of benevolence and equality, is evident from his speaking in the plural—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." His closing remarks show that his design was to enforce the spirit of condescension and equality among his disciples. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him."

When Christ came to Peter with his basin and towel, Peter expressed his astonishment, and Christ told him, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." Then Christ did make him understand what he meant, and Peter, like a faithful minister, imparted that instruction to others. But do we ever hear him tell the church that feet-washing is an ordinance they must practice? Nay, verily. Not a word of the kind; not a hint of the existence of such an ordinance in all his teaching; but we often hear him inculcating the same sentiment taught by Christ on that memorable occasion, in such language as the following: "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time."

Again. Paul says he did not shun to declare all the counsel of God. But not a word does he declare about feet-washing being an ordinance; therefore I conclude it is not in the counsel of God. This same apostle says also that he kept back nothing that was profitable to the church; therefore feet-washing as an ordinance cannot be profitable. But to the contrary it is very unprofitable wherever practised.

May God preserve the little flock from scandal and schism. B. MATHEWSON.

LITERALNESS OF THE KINGDOM.

REMARKS UPON MATTHEW 26: 29.

"But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."

This text is considered by Protestants conclusive against the Romish doctrine of transubstantiation; for, although uttered after the consecration or blessing of the cup, the Lord still calls it "this fruit of the vine," and it is perfectly conclusive on this point, if the plain literal meaning of the words is taken. But in this case it follows necessarily that our Lord promises literally to drink wine, "new wine," with his apostles in his Father's kingdom; or, as the corresponding texts in Mark and Luke have it, in "the Kingdom of God." Nor did Jesus stop here; for in the subsequent remarks, recorded by Luke as made on the same solemn occasion, he said, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke 22: 28–30.

The wine to be drunk is called "new," because then all nature is to be renewed. "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." Rev. 21: 5.

Such persons as believe that hereafter we are to be disembodied spirits, or are to possess etherealized bodies so entirely immaterial that it would appear to be quite immaterial whether we have them or not, are shocked at the idea of food and wine being used by us in the kingdom of God, and interpret such passages figuratively, as referring only to spiritual nourishment. But it will never do for them to spiritualize the new wine in this case, or they will lose a proof text, a stronghold against Romish heresy.

Now we know that when God created the world, and placed Adam upon it, made in his own image and after his own likeness, he "saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good."

Adam sinned, and his posterity fell with him, and the ground was cursed for his sake; but when Christ shall again return to earth there is to be a restitution; he will make all things new. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until times of restitution of all things; which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 19–21. Now restitution is the act of restoring or returning to a person something of which he has been deprived; and "the times of restitution of all things" are the times of restoring the original state of affairs which existed when God pronounced it "very good." Then the holy dead are to be raised, the Savior's incorrigible enemies are to be destroyed, Satan is to be chained, and the earth is to be restored to its state of pristine glory and blessedness.

As that eminent scholar, Dr. Trench, Archbishop of Dublin, expresses it: "Beyond the day of resurrection, or it may be contemporaneous with it, a day will come when all nature shall put off its soiled work-day garments, and clothe itself in its holy-day attire, the day of the 'restitution of all things,' Acts 3: 21; of the 'new heaven and the new earth,' Rev. 21: 1; the day of which Paul speaks, as one in expectation of which all creation is groaning and travailing until now. Rom. 7: 21–23."

If Adam had never sinned, and his posterity had also been sinless, there would have been no sorrow, no sickness, no pain, no death. Abundance of food was provided for them by the kindness and bounty of their Maker. And so those who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more," not because they will not require food, but because "the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

When our blessed Lord rose from the grave, he thought proper to prove his materiality, by telling his disciples to handle him, and see that he was not a spirit, but had flesh and bones like themselves. To doubting Thomas he said, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless but believing." With the same purpose he asked them for food, and ate it in their presence; but he did not drink wine with them, for as they well remembered, he had told them he would not do so until they should partake of it together with him in his Father's kingdom. And after this, with the very body which they had seen and handled, he ascended to heaven, and told his disciples that as he ascended, so will he return. He will be glorified when he comes in power with his holy angels; but some of them had seen him glorified before, when, on Mount Tabor, accompanied by Moses and Elijah, "he was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." This did not remove his material body, or render him ethereal and insubstantial. Why should we expect or desire to be different from our Lord? Is it not our blessed hope that "when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is?"

Many good people are perplexed by the idea that because the Bible speaks of heaven as the abode of the saints, our future place of happiness cannot be on earth. The only heaven I can conceive of is the place where Christ is; and when he assumes his kingdom on the earth, earth will be heaven to those who have been redeemed by his blood.

To say that all this is carnal, is begging the question, or, rather, it is disputing about words, not things. In one sense Christ's first advent was carnal, for "the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," he was "God manifest in the flesh." But in the ordinary sense in which it is generally used, there is no more truth nor propriety in saying that these views are carnal, than to denounce as carnal the opinion that if Adam had not sinned, he and his posterity would have been holy and happy in the paradise which God prepared for them. When this earth shall be retored to the condition of Eden, and Satan bound, and sin destroyed, and Christ shall reign among his people king of nations and of saints, carnality in its offensive sense can no more be predicated of his faithful followers than of their Master. What we look for and hope for and pray for and believe we shall see is, "a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—Prophetic Times.

SACRIFICE OF SELF.

"He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal."—JOHN 12. 25.

The Captain of our salvation addresses his soldiers as they are about to meet the foe, and tells them to "fear not them that kill the body." If this command is obeyed, what brave soldiers should we be. But lest this command might not suffice for all, he gives us to understand that if we turn the back to the enemy, we shall surely lose the life which we are in a cowardly manner trying to save. "He that loveth his life shall lose it." And in another place we read, "He that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it." Matt. 10: 39.

How contrary is all this to the wisdom of this world, "where self-preservation is the first law of nature," and where selfishness is the ruling passion. The multitude are laboring for self. It is our duty to labor, but not for self alone. We must labor for others. Not merely for our nearest relatives and friends, for sinners will do as much as that; we must work even for our enemies. Is not this a cross? It is certainly crossing to the natural man, but we must "crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts." Our Savior died for his enemies, and for his sake we must love our enemies; and if we love them, we shall be willing to labor for their welfare. The devoted missionary, as he raises the standard of the cross in far off heathen lands, is laboring for his enemies. And he sometimes loses his life by the hands of those he is trying to save. But he has the blessed promise, "He that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it."

How is it with you, reader, and how is it with me? Are we, like Paul, dying daily? Are we "crucified with Christ"? Are we ready to lay down our life for his sake? Can we bear all the trials, vexations and crosses, and withstand all the temptations that assail us? Some do not. They fall away in time of trial. They do worse than Moses, who "spake unadvisedly with his lips," for they persist in the evil way. But oh, let it not be so with us. Whoever else we may offend, let us never offend Christ. O for more wisdom, even that wisdom that is from above, and patience, meekness, gentleness and love. O to be filled with that love which is the fulfilling of the law.

I have often asked you to pray for me, yet I ask you once again. Pray that I may have a thousand fold more of all the fruits of the Spirit, not for my sake, but that I may sacrifice self for the good of others.

THE KING IS COMING.

TUNE—"Tramp, tramp, tramp."

In this weary world we wait,
Looking, blessed Lord, for thee,
And the great and glorious day so soon to come,
When the city's pearly gate,
And the streets of gold we'll see,
And the walls of precious stones—Jerusalem!

CHORUS.—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

We are weary of the world,
Of its trials and its snares,
And we're often almost fainting by the way;
But the saddened eye grows bright,
And the heart beats with delight,
When we think we're near the dawning of the day.

CHORUS—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

Then with patience we will wait,
For the time draws very nigh,
We can see the day-star shining in the sky;
And we know the night is past,
And the day is hasting fast,
Hear the watchman give the last great warning cry!

CHORUS—Yes, yes, yes, the King is coming!
Cheer up, pilgrim, he will come,
Soon the heavens will pass away,
There will be no more delay,
And our Lord will gather all who love him home.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER TWO.

Ver. 8,—"All these are the beginning of sorrow;" i. e., the before mentioned events are to cluster around the commencement of that long period of papal tribulation which is to come on the church of Christ. It is generally conceded that the twelve hundred and sixty years of persecution had their beginning somewhere in the reign of Justinian, from 529 to 533. And from the foregoing quotation from history, it will be seen that the age of Justinian, more than any other sovereign that ever occupied an earthly throne, was distinguished by famine, pestilence, and earthquakes in divers places; so that it is said that during his reign there was a gradual decrease in the human species.

Ver. 9,—"Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted; and shall kill you, and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." It was in the days of Justinian that the saints were delivered into the little horn power, which was to wear them out for a time, times, and the dividing of time; during which time they were hated of all nations for Jesus' sake. This was not and could not have been fulfilled in the persecutions the Jews were subjected to; for in the room of their being hated for Jesus' sake, they were the most inveterate haters of Christ and his people that could be found, and remain so to this day.

But without any chance to doubt, it refers to Christ's elect. They are the ones who have been hated for the name and sake of Jesus. 1. By the Jews. 2. By the Romans. 3. By the Mahommedans. 4. By the Pagan nations in general, wherever the standard of the cross has been reared. 5. By the apostate christians, all of whom have taken their turn in wreaking their vengeance on the innocent flock of God.

Ver. 10,—"And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another." I understand this to have reference to the age of the church distinguished by the Inquisition; because there is such fitness in the language employed in the prophecy to the facts in history relating to that institution, which has so profusely shed the blood of the saints of the Most High.

It is very evident that the papal tribulation is to be divided into two parts, one of which comes under the special superintendence of the holy office of the Inquisition, as it is called. And this may be seen by reference to the opening of the fourth and fifth seals; bne bringing to view a tribulation from the establishment of the Inquisition until the commencement of the signs which are to precede the second Advent of Christ.

When the sixth seal was opened, the same events are brought to view of which Matthew speaks as taking place immediately after the tribulation of those days, and indicative of the near approach of the end. But as illustrative of the prophecy—"Many shall be offended and hate and betray one another"—having its fulfillment in the Romish Inquisition, we will subjoin the testimony of Dr. Achili, who was once a functionary in the Church of Rome, who, on account of his renunciation of Romanism has made himself an object of inquisitorial hate. In his life and experience he has furnished us facts of a most striking character. He says:—

"The Inquisition declares that in matters of offence against religion, it is the positive and bounden duty of every one to become an accuser. Children may and ought to accuse parents, wives their husbands, and servants their masters. The law is in accordance with the decrees of several popes, that whosoever becomes acquainted with any offence against religion, whether from his own knowledge or hearsay, is bound within fifteen days to bring forward his accusation before an inquisitor, or the vicar of the Holy Office, or, where these are not present, before a bishop. The crime, whatever it may be, not only attaches to the principal and the accomplice, but also to every one who knows of it and does not reveal it; so that if you, for example, dear reader, should unfortunately belong to the church of the Inquisition, you would be obliged to accuse, not only me who addresses you, but all those together who with yourself listen to me; and whoever knows that you have listened to my discourses, although he himself may never have heard me, is under obligation to denounce me to the Inquisition.

I will here relate a fact which always pains me to recall to mind, and which, until the present occasion, I have never before spoken about.

During my residence at Viterbo, my native town, where I was public professor and teacher in the school di Gradi, I was one day applied to by a lady of prepossessing appearance, to see me in the sacristry. And as I entered the apartment where she was waiting for me, she begged the sacristan to leave us alone, and suddenly closing the door, presented a moving spectacle to my eyes. Throwing off her bonnet, and letting loose in a moment her long and beautiful tresses, the lady fell upon her knees before me, and gave vent to her grief in an abundance of sighs and tears. On my endeavoring to encourage her, and to persuade her to rise and to unfold her mind to me, she at length, in a voice broken by sobs, thus addressed me:—

'No, father, I will never rise from this position unless you first promise to pardon my heavy transgression.'

Although much younger than herself, she addressed me as father.

'Signora,' replied I, 'it belongs to God to pardon our transgressions. If you have in any way injured me, so far I can forgive; but I confess I have no cause of complaint against you, with whom indeed I have not the pleasure of being acquainted.'

'I have been guilty of great sin, for which no priest will grant me absolution unless you will beforehand remit it to me.'

'You must explain yourself more fully; as yet I have no idea of what you allude to.'

'It is about a year since I received absolution from my confessor, and in the last few days he has entirely forbid me his presence, telling me that I am damned. I have tried others, and all tell me the same thing. One, however, has lately informed me that if I wish to be saved and pardoned I must apply to you, who, after the pope, are the only one who can grant me absolution.'

'Signora, there is some mistake here; explain yourself; of what description is your sin?'

'It is against the Holy Office.'

'Well, but I have nothing to do with the Holy Office.'

'How? are not you Father Achili, the vicar of the Holy Office?'

'You have been misinformed, Signora. I am Achili, the deputy master of the Holy Palace, not Office. You may see my name, with this title prefixed, to all works that are printed here, in lieu of the master himself. I assure you that neither my principal nor myself have any authority in cases which regard the Inquisition.'

The good lady hereupon rose from her knees, arranged her hair, wiped the tears from her eyes, and asked leave to relate her case to me, and having sat down, began as follows:

'It is not quite a year since I was going, about the time of Easter, according to my usual custom, to confess my sins to my parish priest. He being well acquainted with me and our family, began to interrogate me respecting my son, the only one I have, a young man twenty-four years of age, full of patriotic ardor, but with little respect for the priests. It happened that I observed to the curate that notwithstanding my remonstrances, my son was in the habit of saying that the business of the priests was a complete deception, and that the head of all the impostors was the pope himself. Would I had never told him! The curate would hear no further.

"It is your duty," said he, "to denounce your son to the Inquisition."

Imagine what I felt at this intimation. To be the accuser of my own son!

"Such is the case," said he; "there is no help for it. I cannot absolve you, neither can any one else, until the thing is done."'

In carrying out the principles of the Inquisition, as elucidated in the foregoing narrative, can we conceive of a more striking fulfillment of the prophecy,—"Many shall be offended, and shall hate one another, and betray one another." A father and a mother to reveal the thoughts of their own children, so trustingly confided to them; a revelation that may lead to their death. Well did our Savior say, eighteen hundred years since, parents shall betray their children to death, and children shall rise up and cause parents to be put to death, and the time draweth nigh. This crime is to be charged upon the Romish Inquisition.

Ver. 11,—"And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many." These things are peculiar to the time of the end. A false prophet is one who augurs falsely or incorrectly for the future. One who cries peace when God hath not spoken peace, and flatters the multitude with the promise of earthly good, when desolation is about to grasp the enemies of the Lord within the folds of its withering arms. Such were the false prophets of old, who misguided the Jewish nation, and such are the false teachers (prophets) of our own time. They are to be found in church and state; in the sanctuary, and in the legislative assembly.

In the midst of the flaming signals God has hung out in the heavens above, and while the thrones of heavenly potentates are reeling, and republics are being dismembered, the statesman flatters the multitude with the hope of national aggrandizement unparalleled in history, and opportunities for the acquirement of individual wealth such as were never known before. And the professed ministers of Christ, in the room of heralding abroad in thunder tones the coming of the Lord to judge the world in righteousness, to break the nations with a rod of iron and dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel, are also engaged in echoing the cry of peace and safety, saying, "The vision that he seeth is for many days, and he prophesieth of the times afar off."

Through these agencies Christ said many would be deceived, and many are being deceived. It is the coming of Christ that constitutes the Day Star of hope to this world. To adopt it as such is that which makes for our peace.

Ver. 15,—"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." How strikingly this is fulfilled at the present time. Turn our eyes which way we will, the apostasy of the heart of the church is evident. It is a time-serving, pleasure-seeking age. For iniquity to abound is for sin and wickedness to go unrestrained, like the breaking loose of the pent up fires of a volcano, or the removal of the embankment of a vast reservoir; the water gushes with an irresistible power, inundating every thing around, bearing upon its bosom the spoils of devastation. So iniquity, loosed from its moorings, goes unrestrained. Licensed and tolerated in church and state, loyalty and conformity to christian principles is slackened, and as a natural result, the love of many waxes cold.

The spirit of the world and the spirit of christians is so averse to each other that any disposition on the part of the church to conform to the spirit and customs of the world, can but have the effect to chill the ardor of her love to Christ. Love to Christ professed, and love to Christ exemplified, are quite two things.

Probably the aggregate number of professed christians never amounted to what it does now at any one time in the past; but does her piety compare with the past? I think not. Her prayer-meetings, which are to be looked upon as the thermometer of the church, have gone down to zero; but few in number and powerless at that. Her reformations, of which she boasts so much, are mere religious spasms. Compare the hundreds reported to have experienced a work of grace in the town of ——, under the labors of Rev. Mr. ——, a popular revivalist, with what we have recorded concerning the labors of the apostles and the effect produced, and there is a wide contrast.

Of the converts of eighteen hundred years ago it is said,—"They turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." Again,—"They continued steadfast in the apostles' doctrine, and in breaking bread and in fellowship." "They came behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

But what can be said of the many who put on the christian profession now? To the fundamental elements of revealed truth, which teach us to look for the revelation of the Son of God from heaven, and to lay hold of the resurrection from the dead as the hope set before us, they seem indifferent and are ignorant of them. Far more pains are taken to gratify a love of pleasure, than to promote the cause of truth.

Says H. Bonar in the London Quarterly, Journal of Prophecy, for January, 1850,—"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict or wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the devil day by day, making us long for resurrection and deliverance—for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's arrival.

"It is a second rate religion; a religion in which there is no largeness, grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fine exterior, but an aching heart; a heart unsatisfied; a soul not at rest; a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings.

"It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times; very different from the indomitable, much enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of the apostolic days, but even of the Reformation.

"It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing. There is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm which drew the bow is paralyzed."

Is not the above, and much more that might be said of this generation, true? Yet how changed the promise.

Ver. 13,—"He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Blessed assurance this to the scattered flock, who are so fearful of stumbling and denying the word of God. Though few in number, they are the chosen ones of the Lord Almighty. They shall be saved. This is the Lord's firm decree.

Ver. 14,—"And this gospel of the kingdom shall first be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." This gospel of the kingdom is to be a sign and witness to all nations that the end of the age is near.

In giving an exposition of this verse, a number of questions may be asked and a number of points considered.

1. What is this gospel of the kingdom?
2. What is "all the world" referred to?
3. Has it been thus preached in all the world for a witness?

1. Dr. Clarke says the word Gospel is of Saxon origin, and signifies good message.—Uangelion is its correspondent in the Greek, which signifies good news, and thus some give it this rendering: "This good news of the kingdom shall first be preached," etc.

The gospel of the kingdom can mean nothing short of a proclamation of the near approach of the kingdom, based upon the signs of the times as its evidences. There can be nothing plainer than this: that the kingdom of God is a future dispensation, and that the setting up of it is to be preceded by signs, and that when these signs are developed, the near approach of the kingdom is to be heralded to the world.

There was something similar to this exhibited at the first advent of Christ. John came from the wilderness preaching the gospel of the kingdom, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Christ, the Redeemer, came in immediate succession, saying, "The time is fulfilled," and "the kingdom of heaven is at hand; repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel." Next, he chose the twelve, and seventy, and sent them into every place whither he himself would come, saying, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel until the Son of man be come," telling them lastly that there were some standing there who should not taste death till they saw the kingdom of God. Now all this movement was confined to the Jewish nation, and they being a typical people, the promise that the kingdom should appear to them was fulfilled by the manifestation of the kingdom to them in its miniature form. The place of its manifestion was the Mount of Olives. The eye witnesses of his Majesty were Peter, James, and John, one of whom (Peter) plainly declared afterwards, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we make known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his Majesty."

Thus we have the gospel of the kingdom preached at the first advent to one nation, as a witness to them, followed by a miniature exhibition of the kingdom to that generation. So there is to be a proclamation of the evidences of the speedy advent and kingdom of the Messiah to all nations as a witness, and this is what we are to understand by this gospel of the kingdom. A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

SOME REASONS

FOR NOT BELIEVING FEET WASHING A RELIGIOUS ORDINANCE.

I rejoice and thank God with all my heart that I am associated with a people who set inestimable value on the WORD of God; who take this word as their guide, ignoring human creeds, so far as they conflict with God's law, making every thing human bow to the Divine. But I regret exceedingly that certain burdens should be imposed on God's people which God never intended his people should bear; burdens, too, calculated to bring scandal on the church, and dishonor to the cause it professes to serve. I allude now to the subject of feet-washing being practised as an "ordinance." I have no desire to sit in judgment on those denominations which practise feet-washing; but when they try to impose it upon us, I demur, yea more, I plainly and positively declare I do not believe that Jesus Christ ever intended his followers should practise it as an ordinance.

My first reason for not believing is, because the apostles, who listened to all Jesus said upon the subject, would have practised it thus, if they had understood it to be an ordinance. But not a chapter or verse, in all the Acts of the Apostles or their epistles, contain any intimation that any church or any company of disciples ever assembled to celebrate the washing of feet, or ever did celebrate such an ordinance when assembled for any other purpose. They often make mention of the Lord's Supper, and of baptism, showing that ALL who gladly received the word were baptized, both men and women; but not a word through the entire writings of the apostles relative to feet-washing as an ordinance. It is mentioned but once in their writings, and then it is plainly apparent an act of hospitality and not a religious ordinance.

In 1 Tim. 5: 10, the apostle enumerates a catalogue of good works the widow who was maintained by the church was in the habit of performing; not a word about ordinances, but GOOD WORKS. She must have passed the age incident to youthful effervescence; she must at least be sixty. "Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet"; and then concludes with—"if she have diligently followed every good WORK." Now for any one to maintain that the apostle here introduces ONE ordinance in this catalogue of good works, to the exclusion of the others, seems the very quintessence of inconsistency. The idea would be then, that if she had diligently followed every good work, and one ordinance, she was a proper subject for the church to maintain. What an absurdity! I think it must appear obvious to all that the apostle did not single out one ordinance and place it in the catalogue of works; but that he recognized the whole list as acts of christian benevolence, instead of any ordinance. And this is the only mention made of it in the apostles' writings.

A second reason why I do not believe feet-washing to be an ordinance is, that an ordinance always typifies something calculated to lead the mind to the great Author of our salvation, and to the atoning sacrifice by which the salvation had been effected. What a lively figure is the Lord's Supper,—to perpetuate the memory of his broken body and spilled blood so freely offered for our salvation. And not less significant is the ordinance of Baptism, by which we show our faith in the death, burial and resurrection of our great Head, and consequently of the whole body. 1 Cor. 15: 12–23.

But what does feet-washing typify relative to the great plan of salvation? Says one, It was designed by our Savior to teach his disciples a lesson of humility. Granted. But was it his intention to have his church perpetuate it as an ordinance? Was it not rather his design to inculcate the principle of equality among his disciples? I find authorized by the Scriptures to adopt the latter position, because I never find an ordinance given to inculcate a moral precept, or one of the christian graces; but as before mentioned, to point the mind to the grand plan of redemption.

In order to show the design of Christ in washing his disciples' feet, let us look at some incidents prior to this act, which bear a marked affinity to, and, as I understand, set forth the same moral.

It will be recollected that Jesus had discovered a feeling of emulation existing at times among his disciples, and sought immediately to suppress the same by plain precept as well as illustrating acts. Fearing his disciples might be influenced by God's professed church (the Jews), who sought honorary seats and titles of distinction, he cautioned them against taking a title calculated to promote them above their brethren: "Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, and all ye are brethren." He also brought before their mind the manner of the Gentiles, to show them their government should be wholly unlike that of the Gentiles. Said Christ, "The princes and great ones exercise dominion and authority" upon them; but instead of that being the case with his church, the chief should be the greatest servant of all.

There was a time when this spirit of arrogance had become so rife, that the twelve apostles had actually disputed among themselves which should be the greatest. Jesus immediately questions them respecting the matter as they came into his presence, at which they appear disconcerted, for they all observe profound silence. Jesus had before taught them, by precept, that they were to consider themselves on a level; but now he makes use of an illustratory act, to fix the principles of equality upon them He takes a little child and sets him in the midst of his twelve apostles as a pattern of humility, showing them that they should be as free from ambition and lust of power as was this little child; otherwise they forfeited their right and title to the kingdom of heaven. Mark 9: 36.

Now it seems just as proper to continue this act of setting a little child in the midst of the Church or Ministry as an "ordinance," as to wash each other's feet. Or, because Jesus said, "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward," we perform this as an ordinance, instead of administering to the necessary wants of God's children. What if I were to offer a cup of cold water to one of God's children when I knew he or she was not thirsty, and at the same time I knew they had need of a piece of bread? Think I should receive the smiles of the Master? No. It is the necessities of God's children we are to give heed to, without regard to position. However rich, refined and learned a position we may have been placed in by Providence, we cannot withhold our services with impunity from the poorest and most illiterate of God's children when in real need. We must not feel above taking the place of a servant in administering to Christ's flock when necessity so requires, seems to be the language or lesson taught in John 13.

And as the latest words and acts of friends, prior to their decease, make the most indelible impression on the memory of living friends, the Master improves the solemn moment just before his betrayal and death, to rivet this principle of condescension and equality among his children when need required. But, says one, was there any necessity about feet-washing? Yes, it was one of the most distinguished acts of hospitality proffered to guests in that country, from the fact that most of their journeyings were performed on foot through the burning sand, either barefoot or only with sandals; hence it was one of the most acceptable refreshments offered the weary guest. Thus thought Abraham, it appears from Gen. 18: 4; when the angels visited him, he treated them with every token of reverence, hospitality, and kindness. After manifesting all the politeness of eastern etiquette, the first refreshment he offers is water for their feet. And when they arrived at Sodom, Lot did the same thing.

According to history, both sacred and profane, it was the place for the lowest servant to wash the feet of the weary guest; hence Christ proved by this act that the chief might be servant of all. Matt. 20: 27. We see that Peter regarded this as a servile act, instead of an ordinance, from the objection he offers. Think you he would have objected to his Lord administering an ordinance to himself and brethren? No; it is quite evident this was regarded as an honor. John objected to administering an ordinance to Christ on the ground of his own inferiority. I presume Peter and all the rest enjoyed Christ officiating in the ordinance of the Supper. I think it obvious, from the tenth verse, that historians and commentators inform us correctly, when they tell us it was the custom to take a thorough bath just before partaking of the paschal meal. As soon as Jesus informs Peter of the necessity of submitting to have his Master wash his feet, he desires him to do more—to wash his hands and head. "Jesus saith to him, he that is washed NEEDETH not, save to wash his feet, for he is clean every whit"; showing by this language he had just bathed, consequently there was no NEED only to bathe his feet, which might have become soiled in walking from the bath.

Then, Master, it is only when feet are soiled, or dirty, and NEED washing, that we are to do it? And when any of the flock are sick, or too weary to perform this act for themselves, those who are hale and hearty should perform it for them. Thus I understand the Master, and thus I will do.

After Christ had washed their feet, he inquired if they knew what he had done to them? They of course knew he had washed their feet. But he would take this opportunity to make them know by questioning them the gist of his teaching. John 6: 6. He does not question them relative to the Supper, because that was an ordinance pointing to the great atoning sacrifice; and that feet-washing was to inculcate, not a single duty, but the whole class of religious hospitalities, involving the principle of benevolence and equality, is evident from his speaking in the plural—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." His closing remarks show that his design was to enforce the spirit of condescension and equality among his disciples. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him."

When Christ came to Peter with his basin and towel, Peter expressed his astonishment, and Christ told him, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." Then Christ did make him understand what he meant, and Peter, like a faithful minister, imparted that instruction to others. But do we ever hear him tell the church that feet-washing is an ordinance they must practice? Nay, verily. Not a word of the kind; not a hint of the existence of such an ordinance in all his teaching; but we often hear him inculcating the same sentiment taught by Christ on that memorable occasion, in such language as the following: "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time."

Again. Paul says he did not shun to declare all the counsel of God. But not a word does he declare about feet-washing being an ordinance; therefore I conclude it is not in the counsel of God. This same apostle says also that he kept back nothing that was profitable to the church; therefore feet-washing as an ordinance cannot be profitable. But to the contrary it is very unprofitable wherever practised.

May God preserve the little flock from scandal and schism. B. MATHEWSON.

LITERALNESS OF THE KINGDOM.

REMARKS UPON MATTHEW 26: 29.

"But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."

This text is considered by Protestants conclusive against the Romish doctrine of transubstantiation; for, although uttered after the consecration or blessing of the cup, the Lord still calls it "this fruit of the vine," and it is perfectly conclusive on this point, if the plain literal meaning of the words is taken. But in this case it follows necessarily that our Lord promises literally to drink wine, "new wine," with his apostles in his Father's kingdom; or, as the corresponding texts in Mark and Luke have it, in "the Kingdom of God." Nor did Jesus stop here; for in the subsequent remarks, recorded by Luke as made on the same solemn occasion, he said, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke 22: 28–30.

The wine to be drunk is called "new," because then all nature is to be renewed. "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." Rev. 21: 5.

Such persons as believe that hereafter we are to be disembodied spirits, or are to possess etherealized bodies so entirely immaterial that it would appear to be quite immaterial whether we have them or not, are shocked at the idea of food and wine being used by us in the kingdom of God, and interpret such passages figuratively, as referring only to spiritual nourishment. But it will never do for them to spiritualize the new wine in this case, or they will lose a proof text, a stronghold against Romish heresy.

Now we know that when God created the world, and placed Adam upon it, made in his own image and after his own likeness, he "saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good."

Adam sinned, and his posterity fell with him, and the ground was cursed for his sake; but when Christ shall again return to earth there is to be a restitution; he will make all things new. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until times of restitution of all things; which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 19–21. Now restitution is the act of restoring or returning to a person something of which he has been deprived; and "the times of restitution of all things" are the times of restoring the original state of affairs which existed when God pronounced it "very good." Then the holy dead are to be raised, the Savior's incorrigible enemies are to be destroyed, Satan is to be chained, and the earth is to be restored to its state of pristine glory and blessedness.

As that eminent scholar, Dr. Trench, Archbishop of Dublin, expresses it: "Beyond the day of resurrection, or it may be contemporaneous with it, a day will come when all nature shall put off its soiled work-day garments, and clothe itself in its holy-day attire, the day of the 'restitution of all things,' Acts 3: 21; of the 'new heaven and the new earth,' Rev. 21: 1; the day of which Paul speaks, as one in expectation of which all creation is groaning and travailing until now. Rom. 7: 21–23."

If Adam had never sinned, and his posterity had also been sinless, there would have been no sorrow, no sickness, no pain, no death. Abundance of food was provided for them by the kindness and bounty of their Maker. And so those who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more," not because they will not require food, but because "the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

When our blessed Lord rose from the grave, he thought proper to prove his materiality, by telling his disciples to handle him, and see that he was not a spirit, but had flesh and bones like themselves. To doubting Thomas he said, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless but believing." With the same purpose he asked them for food, and ate it in their presence; but he did not drink wine with them, for as they well remembered, he had told them he would not do so until they should partake of it together with him in his Father's kingdom. And after this, with the very body which they had seen and handled, he ascended to heaven, and told his disciples that as he ascended, so will he return. He will be glorified when he comes in power with his holy angels; but some of them had seen him glorified before, when, on Mount Tabor, accompanied by Moses and Elijah, "he was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." This did not remove his material body, or render him ethereal and insubstantial. Why should we expect or desire to be different from our Lord? Is it not our blessed hope that "when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is?"

Many good people are perplexed by the idea that because the Bible speaks of heaven as the abode of the saints, our future place of happiness cannot be on earth. The only heaven I can conceive of is the place where Christ is; and when he assumes his kingdom on the earth, earth will be heaven to those who have been redeemed by his blood.

To say that all this is carnal, is begging the question, or, rather, it is disputing about words, not things. In one sense Christ's first advent was carnal, for "the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," he was "God manifest in the flesh." But in the ordinary sense in which it is generally used, there is no more truth nor propriety in saying that these views are carnal, than to denounce as carnal the opinion that if Adam had not sinned, he and his posterity would have been holy and happy in the paradise which God prepared for them. When this earth shall be retored to the condition of Eden, and Satan bound, and sin destroyed, and Christ shall reign among his people king of nations and of saints, carnality in its offensive sense can no more be predicated of his faithful followers than of their Master. What we look for and hope for and pray for and believe we shall see is, "a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—Prophetic Times.

SACRIFICE OF SELF.

"He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal."—JOHN 12: 25.

The Captain of our salvation addresses his soldiers as they are about to meet the foe, and tells them to "fear not them that kill the body." If this command is obeyed, what brave soldiers should we be. But lest this command might not suffice for all, he gives us to understand that if we turn the back to the enemy, we shall surely lose the life which we are in a cowardly manner trying to save. "He that loveth his life shall lose it." And in another place we read, "He that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it." Matt. 10: 39.

How contrary is all this to the wisdom of this world, "where self-preservation is the first law of nature," and where selfishness is the ruling passion. The multitude are laboring for self. It is our duty to labor, but not for self alone. We must labor for others. Not merely for our nearest relatives and friends, for sinners will do as much as that; we must work even for our enemies. Is not this a cross? It is certainly crossing to the natural man, but we must "crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts." Our Savior died for his enemies, and for his sake we must love our enemies; and if we love them, we shall be willing to labor for their welfare. The devoted missionary, as he raises the standard of the cross in far off heathen lands, is laboring for his enemies. And he sometimes loses his life by the hands of those he is trying to save. But he has the blessed promise, "He that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it."

How is it with you, reader, and how is it with me? Are we, like Paul, dying daily? Are we "crucified with Christ"? Are we ready to lay down our life for his sake? Can we bear all the trials, vexations and crosses, and withstand all the temptations that assail us? Some do not. They fall away in time of trial. They do worse than Moses, who "spake unadvisedly with his lips," for they persist in the evil way. But oh, let it not be so with us. Whoever else we may offend, let us never offend Christ. O for more wisdom, even that wisdom that is from above, and patience, meekness, gentleness and love. O to be filled with that love which is the fulfilling of the law.

I have often asked you to pray for me, yet I ask you once again. Pray that I may have a thousand fold more of all the fruits of the Spirit, not for my sake, but that I may sacrifice self for the good of others.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

VALUABLE PREMIUMS

For New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

Grover & Baker's ($55) SEWING MACHINE,

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

Mind, Matter, Money, Beauty.

Webster's Quarto Dictionary, as now published, has cost more intellectual labor, more money in its "getting up," and contains more matter, and a larger number of beautiful engravings, than any single volume ever before published for popular use in this or any other country.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

The following are some of the extra qualities of Grover and Baker's machine:—

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew from ordinary spools, and no rewinding of thread is necessary.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

The seams can be removed in altering garments, AFTER PROPER INSTRUCTION, without picking or cutting them.

Watching and varying the tensions upon the threads, necessary in other machines, is unnecessary in this. The tension being once adjusted on the GROVER & BAKER machine, any amount of sewing may done without change.

They will make BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY without any change of arrangement, simply by inserting threads of suitable sizes and colors for this purpose. These are the only machines that both embroider and sew perfectly.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 3, 1866.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

We most heartily wish all our readers a HAPPY NEW YEAR IN THE LORD. How it would rejoice our heart to take you all by the hand, in your happy homes, and express our wish by the living voice; and we imagine we hear a hearty—"Amen! we would gladly welcome you to our cheerful firesides." Please accept the will for the deed. We hope soon to greet you in a far happier home than earth has ever afforded since the sin of Adam.

Shall the coming year be a happy one? This is for us to decide. If we consent to obey the Lord, we shall have a happy year. This is the only way to secure happiness in this life, and a fitness for the one to come.

May the Lord help us all to live entirely to his glory, that this may be the best year we have ever enjoyed. We feel anxious to do all we can to add to the welfare of our friends, by our weekly visits through the "Crisis." Pray for your editor, that he may have special wisdom to conduct the paper to the glory of the Lord, so that it may comfort and strengthen all its readers.

TRY COMPANY.

A word to the "Try company." It has been a long time since we have spoken to the noble youth who have joined the "Try Company" by pledging themselves "to abstain from TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, and ALL INTOXICATING drinks as a beverage."

How glad your editor would be to see you all, and speak words of encouragement; but he hopes you are all true to the pledge. Be firmer this year than ever. Satan will try to persuade you to break your pledge if possible. Instead of yielding, see if you cannot get some of your associates to send their names to the pledge. This is a good time to make an effort, at the beginning of a new year. Come, send us a pile of names. You will be doing a great favor to your companions if you can persuade them to sign and keep the pledge. As this is a "Try Company," let every member TRY and see if he cannot get one at least. TRY. Will you?

The editor intends to try this year and make the Crisis more interesting to the "Try Company" than ever.

ONE TENTH.

We are glad to find a hearty response from some on the subject of systematic benevolence. If each gives one tenth of his income, then all would give the same amount in the sight of the Lord. It will be recollected that the poor widow who gave two mites, gave more than all the rest, for she gave all she had, which no other one had done. The Savior did not mean to say that the actual amount of her two mites was of more value than all that had been put into the treasury by the rich and others; but that she had done all she could do, which was more then any other one had done. On this principle, the one who receives ten cents a year, and gives one cent, does just as well as the one who receives $100,000 a year, and gives $10.000.

If the one who receives ten cents, gives ten, then, if the man who receives $100,000 wishes to do as well, he must give the whole one hundred thousand dollars.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

The subject of Spiritualism is one of deep interest to the people of this generation.—From a small beginning among the Fox girls some seventeen years since, it has spread till it has become world-wide in its influence, numbering among its ardent supporters many of the first men and women of both continents. Ministers, Doctors, Lawyers, Judges, Congressmen, Governors, Presidents, Queens, Kings, and Emperors, of all religions, are bowing to its influence, and showing their sympathy with its teachings. No other system of religion ever made so great progress in so short a time, or ever had a better prospect of bringing the whole world into its embrace. Its doors are open for Catholics and Protestants, Infidels and Atheists, the lewd and the virtuous, Mohammedans, Jews, and Pagans,—all are invited, all are welcome to this "broad church."

Scores of ministers have left their churches to preach this "new gospel of Spiritualism," as it is termed. Large numbers of church members have broken off their former religious associations to mingle with those who teach the "new religion"; and very rarely do they ever return to the Christian Church again.

The question comes before us with much force, What is this "new religion"? whence its origin? what is its object? its tendency and final results? what are its doctrines, morals and precepts? who are they that are performing miracles in all parts of the world, and endeavoring to cause all to adopt this "new religion"? are they good or bad spirits? men or demons? where did they come from? where do they live? how do they perform their wonderful manifestations? Or, is it all mere trickery, humbuggery,—the work of cunning men and women in the flesh? Or can the varied phenomena of Spiritualism be accounted for upon philosophical principles? These and other questions come before us when we would talk about Spiritualism; all of which we purpose to answer, the best we can, in this and the following articles. Please read them all carefully, before you adopt the "new religion."

We purpose to consider the subject of Spiritualism under four heads:

1. The CAUSE of the various phenomena of Spiritualism.
2. Its Morals.
3. Its Doctrines.
4. Its Politics.

1. The CAUSE of the various phenomena of Spiritualism.

Every effect must have a cause adequate to produce that effect; and when we arrive at the true cause of the Spiritual manifestations, it will account for all their phenomena. Various causes have been suggested by different writers and speakers, which have explained some of the phenomena, while they have failed to account for others still more wonderful.

Some have assumed that all the manifestations of Spiritualism were the result of trickery, practised by the mediums and those associated with them. This assumption might have answered very well in the early history of Spiritualism; but he who makes such a statement now, would only show that he knew but little about the facts in the case. We think no one, after a little reflection, would venture to say of the many thousands, and even millions of Spiritualists, among whom are a large number of men and women noted for intelligence, honesty and veracity, that they are only playing tricks on each other; while at the same time they must boldly affirm that they are perfectly sincere in their belief that the manifestations come from the spirits of their friends. Can any one tell what object all these fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, children, dear friends, and loved companions, can have in pretending that they have communications from spirits, when they know at the same time that they are only deceiving each other by means of trickery? We think such a position is but little less than an absurdity, and must be given up by those who would treat the subject with candor.

2. Others have assumed that all the phenomena of Spiritualism can be accounted for upon philosophical principles. This statement, also, might have been satisfactory till facts were multiplied that completely upset such a position, and scattered it to the four winds. Yet, it is true, we think, that the manifestations are governed by certain laws, which regulate, or control, the mental and physical phenomena in Spiritualism, as in Mesmerism; and these laws may be understood and observed, and will assist us very much in obtaining a clear view of the subject under examination.

But what laws of philosophy, either mental or physical, will account for facts like the following:—

In September, 1850, when Mr. Charles Partridge of New York City, was in Rochester, N. Y., he was persuaded to attend a Spiritualist circle. At that time he did not believe in Spiritualism, but went to the circle to please a friend. In the report of the interview, Mr. Partridge says:—

"The mediums, the Misses Fox, did not know me, neither did they know that I ever had a brother, or know his age, time of death, etc., neither did they know that he died in California, neither that I had sent goods there, etc,; but through the raps and the use of the alphabet, his whole history was minutely given me. The day of the month, the day of the week, the hour of the day of his death, were given me; his business and property were disclosed, and every test I was capable of putting was correctly answered. My ability to test him became exhausted, and yet I told him I did not believe he was communicating, but that, by some means, my own knowledge of these facts was reproduced through the raps. He then said, I will communicate to you a matter of business, of which you can have no knowledge, but which will be confirmed to you by next mail. He then said, 'Messrs. Finley, Johnson & Co., of San Francisco, who had your goods for sale, have failed, and will probably not pay one cent on the dollar they owe!' I answered, 'It can not be true; the house is reputed to be very wealthy; and instead of this last communication confirming the claim that the spirit of my brother is present, it makes me, if possible, still wore skeptical, because I feel sure this last communication is not true.' The spirit added further, that he did not think that I should even get an account of the sale of the goods.

The next mail brought letters confirming the failure. I subsequently wrote to the parties several times, requesting account sales, which they did not send. I then sent my account to a house there, to intercede for me to get account sales. They tried to obtain such account, and finally wrote me they could not, and advised me to trouble myself no further about the matter; for if I succeeded in getting account sales the house would not pay one cent on a dollar. And these things I never had the means of knowing, were disclosed to me, and things I did not believe at the time, have been confirmed."

Many similar cases might be given, if it were necessary, which are most fully attested by reliable witnesses. Now, we ask, what philosophy will meet such cases? Some have said the medium reads the inquirer's mind. How could the medium read what was not there? Mr. Partridge did not believe Messrs. Finley, Johnson & Co. had failed, when thus informed by the spirit; consequently knew nothing about the matter before; but when "the next mail" came from California, it confirmed what he received sometime earlier through the medium in Rochester, N. Y. The question arises, how did the medium obtain the information before the arrival of the mail? When we find the true cause of Spiritual manifestations, we shall be able to explain all such phenomena, which are continually multiplying around us.

While we admit the physical and intellectual phenomena of Spiritualism, we do not believe that human spirits have any thing to do with the manifestations. We cannot stop to argue at length this negative point, but will barely quote a few passages of Scripture as a foundation for the assertion. The Bible teaches us that when man is in a state of physical death, "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."—Job 14: 21. This cannot be true, unless the teaching of the spirits is false; because they declare the opposite. Again, Job says:—"When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return." Job 16: 22. But the Bible makes this point still stronger and plainer. When describing the state of man in death, the wise man says, it is one where "there is no work, nor device, NOR KNOWLEDGE, NOR WISDOM;" consequently it is a state where they know not any thing. This is in harmony with the teaching of the Psalmist. He says, "In death there is NO REMEMBRANCE of thee."—Ps. 6: 5. Again he says of man:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day HIS THOUGHT PERISH."—Ps. 146: 4. We do not see how language can be plainer, or more in harmony with common sense, and sound philosophy. Again we read:—"The living know that they shall die, but the dead KNOW NOT ANY THING."—Eccl. 9: 5. When we find the whole Bible harmonious on this point, we are led at once to the conclusion that, as men are wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection, they do not make any communications to their living friends before they are raised from the dead; consequently the spiritual manifestations, now so common, do not come from the human race.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

The church at the corner of Ninth and Spring-garden Sts., Philadelphia, have formed an association for scattering tracts through the city as far as practicable, and are doing a good work. They are trying to awaken a new interest on the subject of the Lord's speedy coming. Their tracts are kept at three stations: 1. Louis Reimer's, No. 809 Coates St. 2. Henry Clegg's, 717 Passayunk Road. 3. Wm. Ashman's, 614 North 3d St.

Will not our Brn. in other cities, villages, and towns, make a similar effort to scatter the light among those sitting in darkness.

QUESTIONS.

Many ask us questions that we cannot answer; hence they must not be grieved if they do not see an answer in the Crisis. We do not like to give speculative expositions of Scripture, for the sake of giving some answer; but prefer to wait for light, till we see clearly, before we attempt to teach others, who may see more light than we do.

A NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new and interesting tract, on the "origin, nature, rank, and titles" of Angels, by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark. It is the best thing we have ever seen on the subject of angels. It contains 46 pp., price 20 cts. For sale at this office, and by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J.

THE GRANT OF PHOCAS.

Some may be interested to read the grant of Phocas, made in A. D. 606, by means of which "THE WHOLE WORLD" became the 'diocese" of the "bishop of Rome." For this reason Dr. Scott and many others date the 1260 years of the Papal supremacy from 606, ending them in 1866.

The following is the record of the grant of Phocas:—"In the year 606 he (Phocas) granted to Boniface III. that he should be held as UNIVERSAL BISHOP of Rome; not only that he should have precedence before the rest in rank and honor, as Justinian gave decree establishing the primacy of the Holy Synods, but that the whole world should be his diocese." [Brightman,]—Revelation Revealed, p. 205.)

"NEXT YEAR."

Under the above heading we find an interesting leading editorial article in the Montreal Witness. The Editor of the Witness is a very prominent man in the religious and temperance meetings among the Protestants in the city of Montreal. When we first went to the city to hold meetings, he was much opposed to the views he now advocates. We have great reason to thank the Lord that light is advancing so rapidly. Many intelligent christian men, who have stood aloof from every thing connected with the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, are now proclaiming it to the church and world with commendable boldness. The very papers that have been used as instruments to oppose our "blessed hope" are now publishing articles in its favor. The world must be warned of its approaching end.

The following is from the Montreal Daily Witness of Nov. 25th, 1865:—

NEXT YEAR.

The year which—dating the commencement of the Papacy from 606—is to terminate the prophetical term of 1260 years, is at hand. It will be remembered that a commentator named Fleming, some two hundred years ago (we quote from memory,) pointed out 1792, 1848, and 1866, as great prophetic epochs in the history of Europe and the Church of Rome. The two first calculations came true. The last is still in the uncertainty of the future.

If there are to be great events in 1866, some of the premonitory symptoms may be expected by this time; though inasmuch as we are taught to believe, that these events, come when they may, will be sudden and unexpected, the symptoms cannot be very obvious. For instance, the Church of Rome, if it be correctly understood as the mystical Babylon of the Apocalypse, is to be strong, fair, and flourishing to the last, and to come suddenly to an end through the action of those who previously supported it.

Are there, then, any symptoms of a crisis in the affairs of that church?

The withdrawal of the French troops from Rome (where they have for many years upheld the Papacy,) which is to take place in 1866, is, to say the least, a remarkable coincidence, and the Fenian movement, which seems to reject and defy the authority of the Church of Rome, as much as it does that of the British Government, may, perhaps, be considered another.

The developments of 1866 will, at all events, be watched with intense interest; and, meantime, there is the following formidable list of troubles on hand in Christendom at the end of 1865:—

1st. Lively struggle concerning the status of the colored race in the States.
2nd. Insurrections and massacres in Hayti and Jamaica.
3d. War between Brazil and Paraguay.
4th. War between Spain and Chili.
5th. Civil war in Peru, and generally throughout Spanish South America.
6th. Civil war to the knife on both sides in Mexico, complicated by relations with France and the United States.
7th. The "Alabama" and "Shenandoah" controversy between the United States and Britain.
8th. The complications in Germany between Austria, Prussia, the Diet, Frankfort, and Schleswig, Holstein.
9th. The Roman question.
10th. The Venetian question.
11th. Fenianism.
12th. The Cholera.
13th. The Rinderpest.

JUDE 14TH VERSE.

"And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."

This passage has perplexed some. They do not see how the Lord can come with his saints, when he is coming to get them, by raising them from the dead; as Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thess. 4: 16. In order to harmonise Jude and Paul, some have resorted to the unscriptural theory that the saints, who are to come with the Lord, are the souls of the righteous, which have been in heaven since the death of their bodies; and that when Paul speaks of those who are "dead in Christ," he means only the bodies of the saints."

Others, with more propriety, have claimed that those who are to come with Christ are those who were raised at the time of his resurrection; but we think the truth in the passage is still more simple and plain when viewed from the right stand-point.

The word rendered saints is hagiais, from hagios, which means "holy, consecrated, pure, sanctified."—Greenfield. It is the word prefixed to Ghost in the phrase "Holy Ghost."

This adjective is also frequently used as a noun to denote the saints; but we think it does not refer to the saints in Jude 14, but to the angels who are coming with Christ to "gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. 24: 31. In Rev. 14: 10, we read of "the holy angels." The word holy in this last example is the same that is rendered saints in Jude 14. The same word occurs in Rom. 1: 2,—"the holy Scriptures."

The passage in Jude is en haliais muriasin, correctly translated in Dickenson's and Thompson's New Testament, and the Emphatic Diaglott, holy myriads." Scarlet renders it,—"Myriads of the holy ones." Wesley,—"ten thousands of his holy ones." Griesbach,—"holy tens of thousands." Kneeland,—"holy myriads of angels." Macknight,—"holy myriads of angels." Who are the "holy myriads"? The American Bible Union, in their new and valuable translation, have given us the correct view of the passage, we think, by rendering it "holy angels."

EVIL MEN.

The Bible teaches us "that in the "last days" "evil men" will "wax worse and worse." If it could be shown that the world was growing better, then one of two things would be true; either that the Bible is false, or that we are not now "in the last days." But the very prophecies that prove the Bible is true, also prove that we are "in the last days," consequently, that we are living in a time when "evil men" will be growing more and more wicked. People are now compelled to admit this as a serious fact, that cannot be disputed.

The following is only a sample of a multitude of cases that might be published, if it were profitable to read such things, any further than to show that "the last days" have really come.

"ENCOUNTER WITH A BURGLAR.—On Saturday night last, Mr. Francis Smith, a provision dealer in Williamsburg, N. Y., counted his receipts for the day, amounting to $1220, in the presence of a number of strangers, and shortly after closed his place of business and went home. About four o'clock Sunday morning he was awakened by the screams of his wife, and on looking up saw a man with blackened face standing at the head of his bed, with a pistol in his hand. As soon as their eyes met, the burglar presented his pistol to Smith's head, saying: 'your money or your life.' Seeing the deadly weapon in such proximity, Smith immediately drew the coverlets over him. The burglar pulled all the covering off the bed. By this action he discovered a brown paper parcel at the foot of the bed, containing the above amount of money, which he immediately seized and started to leave. Mr. Smith, by this time realizing the situation, leaped from the bed and following the burglar to the next room, collared him. Here a desperate struggle ensued. Both men tusseled with the utmost desperation, and at a moment when Mr. Smith, by a herculean effort, succeeded in raising the ruffian from his feet, the latter drew a revolver and fired three barrels of it at him in rapid succession, two bullets taking effect in his body. Thus disabled, Smith sank upon the floor, while his assailant sprang out of the window, reached a piazza or shed, and then jumped a distance of some fifteen or twenty feet and escaped. A surgical examination of Mr. Smith showed that one bullet took effect in the pelvis and lodged some distance further down, where it yet remains; the other entered on the right side of the backbone, and made its way to the centre of the stomach, whence it was extracted. His recovery is doubtful. The burglar left his cap and a piece of his vest behind, which may lead to his identification."—Boston Journal.

For the World's Crisis.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that tracts can go and preach where no one else can? Do you know that many have been converted by reading them? Do you know that many who cannot go to meeting will read them at home? Do you know that many efficient preachers want to carry them, and some do carry them to scatter wherever they preach? Do you know that many tracts old to you are new to other people? Do you know that you can send a dozen sermons in this way to your distant friends for twenty-five cents? Do you know that the Publication Society is making thousands of pounds of the old standard tracts? Do you know that one dollar out of your pocket would buy eighteen hundred pages of them, or ten dollars eighteen thousand pages, or one hundred dollars eighteen hundred thousand pages of them? Do you know that the demand is increasing, the harvest great, and the laborers few? Do you know that greenbacks will perish in the fires of judgment, even if not before? Do you know all these things? If not, it is time you did. If you do know them, then what? H. L. H.

GIVING.

BRO. GRANT:—I was glad to hear from you on the system of giving to the Lord. I had made up my mind, before reading your article, that I would keep the run of my income, the coming year, and give at least one tenth for benevolent purposes. My income is small, compared with that of many others, as I live on a small farm and get my living by farming. I have not kept the run of my income the past year, but I think I have at least given one tenth, and thank the Lord that I have had it to give.

I hope all the readers of the Crisis will adopt this plan, who have not, or are not doing as much for the cause of Christ. Dear brethren and sisters, what we do must be done soon, for the night is soon coming. Let us try and be doing just what we would like to be found doing when our Master comes. How I want to see all the dear brothers and sisters that write for the Crisis. May the Lord bless them and all the waiting ones, is the prayer of your humble servant,

OUR MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

FROM BRO. HIMES' JOURNAL.

Wednesday, Dec. 6. In company with Bro. Flagg left Chicago, on the Chicago, Alton and St. Louis road, stopping at Springfield in the evening to see the brethren there who were desiring help. It was a dark, stormy night, and I knew not the way to the house of any of the brethren. I asked some persons the way to Dr. Helm's residence, but got no intelligent reply. But by continuing my inquiries I was at last directed to Bro. Maxey's son, who sent a colored boy, a freedman, to show us his father's house. On the way, I said to him, "Where are you from?"

"I'se from Tennessee, sir."

"Ah! well, I am going to Tennessee to preach the gospel, and help your brethren to learn to read and write, and otherwise do them good."

"You be? I am a thousand times glad of that. I wish now I was going back. I am glad to see any one who is trying to do my people good. And you are going to Tennessee? I is glad. This is the house, sir. Good night. God bless you. I is glad you is going to Tennessee." . . .

Saturday, Dec. 9. Arrived in St. Louis at 10 o'clock P. M., receiving a cordial welcome from Sr. M. K. Prescott. I find that in the expectation of our visit here, she has opened the way for us, and the probability is we shall have all that we can do; so we have girded ourselves for the work.

This afternoon we have visited a number of the ministers of the colored churches, and have been greeted with a cordial welcome. A wide and, I trust, an effectual door is opened to us for the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom. Praise God!

Sabbath, Dec. 10. A beautiful day. Arrangements were made for me to speak at the Second Baptist church (colored), but the pastor revoked the appointment. He said he "did not hitch with the Adventists." I said to him, "We ought to unite in the great work of elevating the suffering Freedmen." He then asked me if I had any credentials. I told him I had. Said he, "You are from Boston, are you?" "Yes; I have lived in Boston about thirty-five years, till of late, and am somewhat known there, especially to the colored people, with whom I have a high standing as their steadfast friend for the last thirty years." He replied that he came from Boston, but had no knowledge of me.) It is unnecessary to say more than this young pastor is a mulatto, and nearly white. No negro can be found who would act so selfish and sectarian a part, and but few mulattoes of this cast, to the honor of human nature, can be found in these times. I left him to himself, and went to the Sixth street M. E. church, and heard the Presiding Elder on sanctification, from John 17: 17. It was a sound discourse, and much needed. But very few enjoy the blessing, even in that church. They are conformed to the world, and becoming more so: they need another Wesley to wake them up.

In the afternoon I spoke to the African M. E. church in Green street. Dr. Revles is the pastor. He received me with great cordiality. He is a man of great heart, with noble and generous feelings, and commended me to his audience as a minister of Christ, inviting them to hear me with candor, and in the meekness of Christ. The house was crowded, but not more than twenty white persons were present. Most of the colored people had been slaves. When I rose to speak, every eye was fixed upon me, and I had unbroken and undivided attention to the end. I spoke on the "blessed hope," which led me to show that Christ would come to consummate it in the end of the world, in the resurrection of the just, and not at their death. They received it with acclamations of joy. The minister approved it, and wished to hear more, and engaged me to speak the next Sabbath. Said he, "I am inclined that way." One of the good old deacons in the altar said to me, as he left the house, "God bless you, brother; and if we meet no more in this world, I expect to meet you in the kingdom, just as you have said." Said another, "This is the gospel. I like this better than I do what our preachers have told us." This people want the gospel, and I trust will have it."

In the evening I spoke to the African Methodists in Seventh street. The audience was large, and a number of their preachers present. I was warmly greeted, and felt at home, and as if in a free pulpit to speak to them the word of God. I spoke to them on Matt. 5: 5,—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." 1. I described the character of the meek. 2. The nature of the inheritance. 3. The time when we shall come into possession. I treated each of these points in full for over an hour, bringing the Scriptures, chapter and verse, to prove each point. I made it clear to my audience, and got their assent in very hearty amens, and responses in various forms. They drank it down like the thirsty hart panting over the cooling water brooks, and wanted more. "Come again," was the cry. Many of these men and women have been slaves. They cannot read nor write. But they are intelligent, and show a good share of common sense. They feel that they are men, and entitled to the rights that belong to men; and yet they are modest, and demean themselves wisely.

The door is now open to us, and we shall improve it to help the Freedmen and their children, both by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, and by education, as God shall open the way and prosper us.

There is a call for schools among the destitute in the city and neighboring towns, and plenty of work to be done. There are no free schools for the colored people in the city, except those which are provided by benevolence, of which there are many; but still there is a great work to be done in this direction. May the Lord give us wisdom to direct in doing our part of this work.

For the World's Crisis.

DIARY LEAVES.

NUMBER TWO.

Through the mercies of a kind Providence, I was permitted to leave my home in the "City of many things," and visit the northern portion of the Granite State, and to attend meetings in the regions beyond. The Sunday following the time I left, I spent in Lake Village, N. H., and preached in the "free chapel," which the brethren have recently erected.

Monday, in company with Bro. J. Knowls, I started for the mountains. Monday evening, after a very pleasant ride, we had a meeting, and spoke to a small congregation in Holderness, N. H. Found some in this place who are looking for the Lord.

Tuesday, we journeyed as far as Woodstock. Here we found some ardent lovers of Jesus' coming; although but few in number, yet they seemed determined not to give the struggle over until he whose right it is shall come to reign.

This is a mountainous region of country. From Woodstock, the Blue Ridge, Moose Hillock, and the southern portion of the Franconia Range, are in full view. The inhabitants are hemmed in on every side almost by mountains, yet, in the valleys, there are some fertile spots, both of a moral and a physical nature.

Wednesday we started for Franconia, over the road leading through the "Notch" of the Franconia range. The Franconia range connects with the White Mountain range, and they extend some forty miles.

The scenery through the "Notch" was magnificent indeed. After journeying from Woodstock about five miles, we came to the "Flume House," the name of which is familiar to many in our large cities; it being a large, commodious hotel, at which many board who visit the mountains during the summer months. Among other things which attracted our attention, as being high in the scale of sublimity, was the "Flume." This is an excavation made in the solid granite, at the base of the mountain, to the depth of seventy-five feet, and fifteen feet wide, and twenty-five rods in length. This is one of the most beautiful of all the curiosities of nature that our eyes ever beheld. When viewing the massive walls on each side, looking as if they were laid up with human hands, we were reminded of the road that was made through the Red Sea, when ancient Israel passed through it. On beholding this natural cut in the solid granite, and many other wonderful things of nature, we were led to ask, as did the Psalmist of old, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" We could not refrain from kneeling down, while in this attitude of mind, and raising our voices to the Maker of these hills and mountains. We, with Bro. Knowls, enjoyed a very precious season in the bed of the "Flume," in calling on the God of the universe. The walls from the bed of the Flume extend up to an altitude of seventy-five feet, and incline toward each other at the top, between which is suspended a huge rock of one hundred tons, more or less, which renders the scenery doubly interesting to the admiring crowds that visit there from all parts of the world.

VALUABLE PREMIUMS

For New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

Grover & Baker's
($55) SEWING MACHINE,

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

Webster's ($12)
UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of

Cruden's
CONDENSED CONCORDANCE,

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, BUSINESS AGENT.

Mind, Matter, Money, Beauty.

Webster's Quarto Dictionary, as now published, has cost more intellectual labor, more money in its "getting up," and contains more matter, and a larger number of beautiful engravings, than any single volume ever before published for popular use in this or any other country.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

The following are some of the extra qualities of Grover and Baker's machine:—

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew from ordinary spools, and no rewinding of thread is necessary.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

The seams can be removed in altering garments, AFTER PROPER INSTRUCTION, without picking or cutting them.

Watching and varying the tensions upon the threads, necessary in other machines, is unnecessary in this. The tension being once adjusted on the GROVER & BAKER machine, any amount of sewing may done without change.

They will make BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY without any change of arrangement, simply by inserting threads of suitable sizes and colors for this purpose. These are the only machines that both embroider and sew perfectly.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 3, 1866.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

We most heartily wish all our readers a HAPPY NEW YEAR IN THE LORD. How it would rejoice our heart to take you all by the hand, in your happy homes, and express our wish by the living voice; and we imagine we hear a hearty—"Amen! we would gladly welcome you to our cheerful firesides." Please accept the will for the deed. We hope soon to greet you in a far happier home than earth has ever afforded since the sin of Adam.

Shall the coming year be a happy one? This is for us to decide. If we consent to obey the Lord, we shall have a happy year. This is the only way to secure happiness in this life, and a fitness for the one to come.

May the Lord help us all to live entirely to his glory, that this may be the best year we have ever enjoyed. We feel anxious to do all we can to add to the welfare of our friends, by our weekly visits through the "Crisis." Pray for your editor, that he may have special wisdom to conduct the paper to the glory of the Lord, so that it may comfort and strengthen all its readers.

TRY COMPANY.

A word to the "Try company." It has been a long time since we have spoken to the noble youth who have joined the "Try Company" by pledging themselves "to abstain from TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, and ALL INTOXICATING drinks as a beverage."

How glad your editor would be to see you all, and speak words of encouragement; but he hopes you are all true to the pledge. Be firmer this year than ever. Satan will try to persuade you to break pour pledge if possible. Instead of yielding, see if you cannot get some of your associates to send their names to the pledge. This is a good time to make an effort, at the beginning of a new year. Come, send us a pile of names. You will be doing a great favor to your companions if you can persuade them to sign and keep the pledge. As this is a "Try Company," let every member TRY and see if he cannot get one at least. TRY. Will you?

The editor intends to try this year and make the Crisis more interesting to the "Try Company" than ever.

ONE TENTH.

We are glad to find a hearty response from some on the subject of systematic benevolence. If each gives one tenth of his income, then all would give the same amount in the sight of the Lord. It will be recollected that the poor widow who gave two mites, gave more than all the rest, for she gave all she had, which no other one had done. The Savior did not mean to say that the actual amount of her two mites was of more value than all that had been put into the treasury by the rich and others; but that she had done all she could do, which was more than any other one had done. On this principle, the one who receives ten cents a year, and gives one cent, does just as well as the one who receives $100,000 a year, and gives $10.000.

If the one who receives ten cents, gives ten, then, if the man who receives $100,000 wishes to do as well, he must give the whole one hundred thousand dollars.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

The subject of Spiritualism is one of deep interest to the people of this generation.—From a small beginning among the Fox girls some seventeen years since, it has spread till it has become world-wide in its influence, numbering among its ardent supporters many of the first men and women of both continents. Ministers, Doctors, Lawyers, Judges, Congressmen, Governors, Presidents, Queens, Kings, and Emperors, of all religions, are bowing to its influence, and showing their sympathy with its teachings. No other system of religion ever made so great progress in so short a time, or ever had a better prospect of bringing the whole world into its embrace. Its doors are open for Catholics and Protestants, Infidels and Atheists, the lewd and the virtuous, Mohammedans, Jews, and Pagans,—all are invited, all are welcome to this "broad church."

Scores of ministers have left their churches to preach this "new gospel of Spiritualism," as it is termed. Large numbers of church members have broken off their former religious associations to mingle with those who teach the "new religion"; and very rarely do they ever return to the Christion Church again.

The question comes before us with much force, What is this "new religion"? whence its origin? what is its object? its tendency and final results? what are its doctrines, morals and precepts? who are they that are performing miracles in all parts of the world, and endeavoring to cause all to adopt this "new religion"? are they good or bad spirits? men or demons? where did they come from? where do they live? how do they perform their wonderful manifestations? Or, is it all mere trickery, humbuggery,—the work of cunning men and women in the flesh? Or can the varied phenomena of Spiritualism be accounted for upon philosophical principles? These and other questions come before us when we would talk about Spiritualism; all of which we purpose to answer, the best we can, in this and the following articles. Please read them all carefully, before you adopt the "new religion."

We purpose to consider the subject of Spiritualism under four heads:

1. The CAUSE of the various phenomena of Spiritualism.
2. Its Morals.
3. Its Doctrines.
4. Its Politics.

1. The CAUSE of the various phenomena of Spiritualism.

Every effect must have a cause adequate to produce that effect; and when we arrive at the true cause of the Spiritual manifestations, it will account for all their phenomena. Various causes have been suggested by different writers and speakers, which have explained some of the phenomena, while they have failed to account for others still more wonderful.

Some have assumed that all the manifestations of Spiritualism were the result of trickery, practised by the mediums and those associated with them. This assumption might have answered very well in the early history of Spiritualism; but he who makes such a statement now, would only show that he knew but little about the facts in the case. We think no one, after a little reflection, would venture to say of the many thousands, and even millions of Spiritualists, among whom are a large number of men and women noted for intelligence, honesty and veracity, that they are only playing tricks on each other; while at the same time they must boldly affirm that they are perfectly sincere in their belief that the manifestations come from the spirits of their friends. Can any one tell what object all these fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, children, dear friends, and loved companions, can have in pretending that they have communications from spirits, when they know at the same time that they are only deceiving each other by means of trickery? We think such a position is but little less than an absurdity, and must be given up by those who would treat the subject with candor.

2. Others have assumed that all the phenomena of Spiritualism can be accounted for upon philosophical principles. This statement, also, might have been satisfactory till facts were multiplied that completely upset such a position, and scattered it to the four winds. Yet, it is true, we think, that the manifestations are governed by certain laws, which regulate, or control, the mental and physical phenomena in Spiritualism, as in Mesmerism; and these laws may be understood and observed, and will assist us very much in obtaining a clear view of the subject under examination.

But what laws of philosophy, either mental or physical, will account for facts like the following:—

In September, 1850, when Mr. Charles Partridge of New York City, was in Rochester, N. Y., he was persuaded to attend a Spiritualist circle. At that time he did not believe in Spiritualism, but went to the circle to please a friend. In the report of the interview, Mr. Partridge says:—

"The mediums, the Misses Fox, did not know me, neither did they know that I ever had a brother, or know his age, time of death, etc., neither did they know that he died in California, neither that I had sent goods there, etc,; but through the raps and the use of the alphabet, his whole history was minutely given me. The day of the month, the day of the week, the hour of the day of his death, were given me; his business and property were disclosed, and every test I was capable of putting was correctly answered. My ability to test him became exhausted, and yet I told him I did not believe he was communicating, but that, by some means, my own knowledge of these facts was reproduced through the raps. He then said, I will communicate to you a matter of business, of which you can have no knowledge, but which will be confirmed to you by next mail. He then said, 'Messrs. Finley, Johnson & Co., of San Francisco, who had your goods for sale, have failed, and will probably not pay one cent on the dollar they owe!' I answered, 'It can not be true; the house is reputed to be very wealthy; and instead of this last communication confirming the claim that the spirit of my brother is present, it makes me, if possible, still wore skeptical, because I feel sure this last communication is not true.' The spirit added further, that he did not think that I should even get an account of the sale of the goods.

The next mail brought letters confirming the failure. I subsequently wrote to the parties several times, requesting account sales, which they did not send. I then sent my account to a house there, to intercede for me to get account sales. They tried to obtain such account, and finally wrote me they could not, and advised me to trouble myself no further about the matter; for if I succeeded in getting account sales the house would not pay one cent on a dollar. And these things I never had the means of knowing, were disclosed to me, and things I did not believe at the time, have been confirmed."

Many similar cases might be given, if it were necessary, which are most fully attested by reliable witnesses. Now, we ask, what philosophy will meet such cases? Some have said the medium reads the inquirer's mind. How could the medium read what was not there? Mr. Partridge did not believe Messrs. Finley, Johnson & Co. had failed, when thus informed by the spirit; consequently knew nothing about the matter before; but when "the next mail" came from California, it confirmed what he received some time earlier through the medium in Rochester, N. Y. The question arises, how did the medium obtain the information before the arrival of the mail? When we find the true cause of Spiritual manifestations, we shall be able to explain all such phenomena, which are continually multiplying around us.

While we admit the physical and intellectual phenomena of Spiritualism, we do not believe that human spirits have any thing to do with the manifestations. We cannot stop to argue at length this negative point, but will barely quote a few passages of Scripture as a foundation for the assertion. The Bible teaches us that when man is in a state of physical death, "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."—Job 14: 21. This cannot be true, unless the teaching of the spirits is false; because they declare the opposite. Again, Job says:—"When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return." Job 16: 22. But the Bible makes this point still stronger and plainer. When describing the state of man in death, the wise man says, it is one where "there is no work, nor device, NOR KNOWLEDGE, NOR WISDOM;" consequently it is a state where they know not any thing. This is in harmony with the teaching of the Psalmist. He says, "In death there is NO REMEMBRANCE of thee."—Ps. 6: 5. Again he says of man:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day HIS THOUGHT PERISH."—Ps. 146: 4. We do not see how language can be plainer, or more in harmony with common sense, and sound philosophy. Again we read:—"The living know that they shall die, but the dead KNOW NOT ANY THING."—Eccl. 9: 5. When we find the whole Bible harmonious on this point, we are led at once to the conclusion that, as men are wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection, they do not make any communications to their living friends before they are raised from the dead; consequently the spiritual manifestations, now so common, do not come from the human race.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

The church at the corner of Ninth and Spring-garden Sts., Philadelphia, have formed an association for scattering tracts through the city as far as practicable, and are doing a good work. They are trying to awaken a new interest on the subject of the Lord's speedy coming. Their tracts are kept at three stations: 1. Louis Reimer's, No. 809 Coates St., 2. Henry Clegg's, 717 Passayunk Road. 3. Wm. Ashman's, 614 North 3d St.

Will not our Brn. in other cities, villages, and towns, make a similar effort to scatter the light among those sitting in darkness.

QUESTIONS.

Many ask us questions that we cannot answer; hence they must not be grieved if they do not see an answer in the Crisis. We do not like to give speculative expositions of Scripture, for the sake of giving some answer; but prefer to wait for light, till we see clearly, before we attempt to teach others, who may see more light than we do.

A NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new and interesting tract, on the "origin, nature, rank, and titles" of Angels, by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark. It is the best thing we have ever seen on the subject of angels. It contains 46 pp., price 20 cts. For sale at this office, and by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J.

THE GRANT OF PHOCAS.

Some may be interested to read the grant of Phocas, made in A. D. 606, by means of which "THE WHOLE WORLD" became the 'diocese' of the "bishop of Rome." For this reason Dr. Scott and many others date the 1260 years of the Papal supremacy from 606, ending them in 1866.

The following is the record of the grant of Phocas:—"In the year 606 he (Phocas) granted to Boniface III. that he should be held as UNIVERSAL BISHOP of Rome; not only that he should have precedence before the rest in rank and honor, as Justinian gave decree establishing the primacy of the Holy Synods, but that the whole world should be his diocese." [Brightman,]—Revelation Revealed, p. 205.)

"NEXT YEAR."

Under the above heading we find an interesting leading editorial article in the Montreal Witness. The Editor of the Witness is a very prominent man in the religious and temperance meetings among the Protestants in the city of Montreal. When we first went to the city to hold meetings, he was much opposed to the views he now advocates. We have great reason to thank the Lord that light is advancing so rapidly. Many intelligent christian men, who have stood aloof from every thing connected with the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, are now proclaiming it to the church and world with commendable boldness. The very papers that have been used as instruments to oppose our "blessed hope" are now publishing articles in its favor. The world must be warned of its approaching end.

NEXT YEAR.

The year which—dating the commencement of the Papacy from 606—is to terminate the prophetical term of 1260 years, is at hand. It will be remembered that a commentator named Fleming, some two hundred years ago (we quote from memory,) pointed out 1792, 1848, and 1866, as great prophetic epochs in the history of Europe and the Church of Rome. The two first calculations came true. The last is still in the uncertainty of the future.

If there are to be great events in 1866, some of the premonitory symptoms may be expected by this time; though inasmuch as we are taught to believe, that these events, come when they may, will be sudden and unexpected, the symptoms cannot be very obvious. For instance, the Church of Rome, if it be correctly understood as the mystical Babylon of the Apocalypse, is to be strong, fair, and flourishing to the last, and to come suddenly to an end through the action of those who previously supported it.

Are there, then, any symptoms of a crisis in the affairs of that church?

The withdrawal of the French troops from Rome (where they have for many years upheld the Papacy,) which is to take place in 1866, is, to say the least, a remarkable coincidence, and the Fenian movement, which seems to reject and defy the authority of the Church of Rome, as much as it does that of the British Government, may, perhaps, be considered another.

The developments of 1866 will, at all events, be watched with intense interest; and, meantime, there is the following formidable list of troubles on hand in Christendom at the end of 1865:—

1st. Lively struggle concerning the status of the colored race in the States.
2nd. Insurrections and massacres in Hayti and Jamaica.
3d. War between Brazil and Paraguay.
4th. War between Spain and Chili.
5th. Civil war in Peru, and generally throughout Spanish South America.
6th. Civil war to the knife on both sides in Mexico, complicated by relations with France and the United States.
7th. The "Alabama" and "Shenandoah" controversy between the United States and Britain.
8th. The complications in Germany between Austria, Prussia, the Diet, Frankfort, and Schleswig, Holstein.
9th. The Roman question.
10th. The Venetian question.
11th. Fenianism.
12th. The Cholera.
13th. The Rinderpest.

JUDE 14TH VERSE.

"And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints."

This passage has perplexed some. They do not see how the Lord can come with his saints, when he is coming to get them, by raising them from the dead; as Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thess. 4: 16. In order to harmonize Jude and Paul, some have resorted to the unscriptural theory that the saints, who are to come with the Lord, are the souls of the righteous, which have been in heaven since the death of their bodies; and that when Paul speaks of those who are "dead in Christ," he means only the bodies of the saints."

Others, with more propriety, have claimed that those who are to come with Christ are those who were raised at the time of his resurrection; but we think the truth in the passage is still more simple and plain when viewed from the right stand-point.

The word rendered saints is hagiais, from hagios, which means "holy, consecrated, pure, sanctified."—Greenfield. It is the word prefixed to Ghost in the phrase "Holy Ghost."

This adjective is also frequently used as a noun to denote the saints; but we think it does not refer to the saints in Jude 14, but to the angels who are coming with Christ to "gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. 24: 31. In Rev. 14: 10, we read of "the holy angels." The word holy in this last example is the same that is rendered saints in Jude 14. The same word occurs in Rom. 1: 2,—"the holy Scriptures."

The passage in Jude is en haliais muriasin, correctly translated in Dickenson's and Thompson's New Testament, and the Emphatic Diaglott, holy myriads." Scarlet renders it,—"Myriads of the holy ones." Wesley,—"ten thousands of his holy ones." Griesbach,—"holy tens of thousands." Kneeland,—"holy myriads of angels." Macknight,—"holy myriads of angels." Who are the "holy myriads"? The American Bible Union, in their new and valuable translation, have given us the correct view of the passage, we think, by rendering it "holy angels."

EVIL MEN.

The Bible teaches us "that in the "last days" "evil men" will "wax worse and worse." If it could be shown that the world was growing better, then one of two things would be true; either that the Bible is false, or that we are not now "in the last days." But the very prophecies that prove the Bible is true, also prove that we are "in the last days," consequently, that we are living in a time when "evil men" will be growing more and more wicked. People are now compelled to admit this as a serious fact, that cannot be disputed.

The following is only a sample of a multitude of cases that might be published, if it were profitable to read such things, any further than to show that "the last days" have really come.

"ENCOUNTER WITH A BURGLAR.—On Saturday night last, Mr. Francis Smith, a provision dealer in Williamsburg, N. Y., counted his receipts for the day, amounting to $1220, in the presence of a number of strangers, and shortly after closed his place of business and went home. About four o'clock Sunday morning he was awakened by the screams of his wife, and on looking up saw a man with blackened face standing at the head of his bed, with a pistol in his hand. As soon as their eyes met, the burglar presented his pistol to Smith's head, saying: 'your money or your life.' Seeing the deadly weapon in such proximity, Smith immediately drew the coverlets over him. The burglar pulled all the covering off the bed. By this action he discovered a brown paper parcel at the foot of the bed, containing the above amount of money, which he immediately seized and started to leave. Mr. Smith, by this time realizing the situation, leaped from the bed and following the burglar to the next room, collared him. Here a desperate struggle ensued. Both men tusseled with the utmost desperation, and at a moment when Mr. Smith, by a herculean effort, succeeded in raising the ruffian from his feet, the latter drew a revolver and fired three barrels of it at him in rapid succession, two bullets taking effect in his body. Thus disabled, Smith sank upon the floor, while his assailant sprang out of the window, reached a piazza or shed, and then jumped a distance of some fifteen or twenty feet and escaped. A surgical examination of Mr. Smith showed that one bullet took effect in the pelvis and lodged some distance further down, where it yet remains; the other entered on the right side of the backbone, and made its way to the centre of the stomach, whence it was extracted. His recovery is doubtful. The burglar left his cap and a piece of his vest behind, which may lead to his identification."—Boston Journal.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that tracts can go and preach where no one else can? Do you know that many have been converted by reading them? Do you know that many who cannot go to meeting will read them at home? Do you know that many efficient preachers want to carry them, and some do carry them to scatter wherever they preach? Do you know that many tracts old to you are new to other people? Do you know that you can send a dozen sermons in this way to your distant friends for twenty-five cents? Do you know that the Publication Society is making thousands of pounds of the old standard tracts? Do you know that one dollar out of your pocket would buy eighteen hundred pages of them, or ten dollars eighteen thousand pages, or one hundred dollars eighteen hundred thousand pages of them? Do you know that the demand is increasing, the harvest great, and the laborers few? Do you know that greenbacks will perish in the fires of judgment, even if not before? Do you know all these things? If not, it is time you did. If you do know them, then what? H. L. H.

GIVING.

BRO. GRANT:—I was glad to hear from you on the system of giving to the Lord. I had made up my mind, before reading your article, that I would keep the run of my income, the coming year, and give at least one tenth for benevolent purposes. My income is small, compared with that of many others, as I live on a small farm and get my living by farming. I have not kept the run of my income the past year, but I think I have at least given one tenth, and thank the Lord that I have had it to give.

I hope all the readers of the Crisis will adopt this plan, who have not, or are not doing as much for the cause of Christ. Dear brethren and sisters, what we do must be done soon, for the night is soon coming. Let us try and be doing just what we would like to be found doing when our Master comes. How I want to see all the dear brothers and sisters that write for the Crisis. May the Lord bless them and all the waiting ones, is the prayer of your humble servant,

OUR MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

FROM BRO. HIMES' JOURNAL.

Wednesday, Dec. 6. In company with Bro. Flagg left Chicago, on the Chicago, Alton and St. Louis road, stopping at Springfield in the evening to see the brethren there who were desiring help. It was a dark, stormy night, and I knew not the way to the house of any of the brethren. I asked some persons the way to Dr. Helm's residence, but got no intelligent reply. But by continuing my inquiries I was at last directed to Bro. Maxey's son, who sent a colored boy, a freedman, to show us his father's house. On the way, I said to him, "Where are you from?"

"I'se from Tennessee, sir."

"Ah! well, I am going to Tennessee to preach the gospel, and help your brethren to learn to read and write, and otherwise do them good."

"You be? I am a thousand times glad of that. I wish now I was going back. I am glad to see any one who is trying to do my people good. And you are going to Tennessee? I is glad. This is the house, sir. Good night. God bless you. I is glad you is going to Tennessee." . . . .

Saturday, Dec. 9. Arrived in St. Louis at 10 o'clock P. M., receiving a cordial welcome from Sr. M. K. Prescott. I find that in the expectation of our visit here, she has opened the way for us, and the probability is we shall have all that we can do; so we have girded ourselves for the work.

This afternoon we have visited a number of the ministers of the colored churches, and have been greeted with a cordial welcome. A wide and, I trust, an effectual door is opened to us for the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom. Praise God!

Sabbath, Dec. 10. A beautiful day. Arrangements were made for me to speak at the Second Baptist church (colored), but the pastor revoked the appointment. He said he "did not hitch with the Adventists." I said to him, "We ought to unite in the great work of elevating the suffering Freedmen." He then asked me if I had any credentials. I told him I had. Said he, "You are from Boston, are you?" "Yes; I have lived in Boston about thirty-five years, till of late, and am somewhat known there, especially to the colored people, with whom I have a high standing as their steadfast friend for the last thirty years." He replied that he came from Boston, but had no knowledge of me! It is unnecessary to say more than this young pastor is a mulatto, and nearly white. No negro can be found who would act so selfish and sectarian a part, and but few mulattoes of this cast, to the honor of human nature, can be found in these times. I left him to himself, and went to the Sixth street M. E. church, and heard the Presiding Elder on sanctification, from John 17: 17. It was a sound discourse, and much needed. But very few enjoy the blessing, even in that church. They are conformed to the world, and becoming more so: they need another Wesley to wake them up.

In the afternoon I spoke to the African M. E. church in Green street. Dr. Revles is the pastor. He received me with great cordiality. He is a man of great heart, with noble and generous feelings, and commended me to his audience as a minister of Christ, inviting them to hear me with candor, and in the meekness of Christ. The house was crowded, but not more than twenty white persons were present. Most of the colored people had been slaves. When I rose to speak, every eye was fixed upon me, and I had unbroken and undivided attention to the end. I spoke on the "blessed hope," which led me to show that Christ would come to consummate it in the end of the world, in the resurrection of the just, and not at their death. They received it with acclamations of joy. The minister approved it, and wished to hear more, and engaged me to speak the next Sabbath. Said he, "I am inclined that way." One of the good old deacons in the altar said to me, as he left the house, "God bless you, brother; and if we meet no more in this world, I expect to meet you in the kingdom, just as you have said." Said another, "This is the gospel. I like this better than I do what our preachers have told us." This people want the gospel, and I trust will have it."

In the evening I spoke to the African Methodists in Seventh street. The audience was large, and a number of their preachers present. I was warmly greeted, and felt at home, and as if in a free pulpit to speak to them the word of God. I spoke to them on Matt. 5: 5,—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." 1. I described the character of the meek. 2. The nature of the inheritance. 3. The time when we shall come into possession. I treated each of these points in full for over an hour, bringing the Scriptures, chapter and verse, to prove each point. I made it clear to my audience, and got their assent in very hearty amens, and responses in various forms. They drank it down like the thirsty hart panting over the cooling water brooks, and wanted more. "Come again," was the cry. Many of these men and women have been slaves. They cannot read nor write. But they are intelligent, and show a good share of common sense. They feel that they are men, and entitled to the rights that belong to men; and yet they are modest, and demean themselves wisely.

The door is now open to us, and we shall improve it to help the Freedmen and their children, both by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, and by education, as God shall open the way and prosper us.

There is a call for schools among the destitute in the city and neighboring towns, and plenty of work to be done. There are no free schools for the colored people in the city, except those which are provided by benevolence, of which there are many; but still there is a great work to be done in this direction. May the Lord give us wisdom to direct in doing our part of this work.

For the World's Crisis.

DIARY LEAVES.

NUMBER TWO.

Through the mercies of a kind Providence, I was permitted to leave my home in the "City of many things," and visit the northern portion of the Granite State, and to attend meetings in the regions beyond. The Sunday following the time I left, I spent in Lake Village, N. H., and preached in the "free chapel," which the brethren have recently erected.

Monday, in company with Bro. J. Knowls, I started for the mountains. Monday evening, after a very pleasant ride, we had a meeting, and spoke to a small congregation in Holderness, N. H. Found some in this place who are looking for the Lord.

Tuesday, we journeyed as far as Woodstock. Here we found some ardent lovers of Jesus' coming; although but few in number, yet they seemed determined not to give the struggle over until he whose right it is shall come to reign.

This is a mountainous region of country. From Woodstock, the Blue Ridge, Moose Hillock, and the southern portion of the Franconia Range, are in full view. The inhabitants are hemmed in on every side almost by mountains, yet, in the valleys, there are some fertile spots, both of a moral and a physical nature.

Wednesday we started for Franconia, over the road leading through the "Notch" of the Franconia range. The Franconia range connects with the White Mountain range, and they extend some forty miles.

The scenery through the "Notch" was magnificent indeed. After journeying from Woodstock about five miles, we came to the "Flume House," the name of which is familiar to many in our large cities; it being a large, commodious hotel, at which many board who visit the mountains during the summer months. Among other things which attracted our attention, as being high in the scale of sublimity, was the "Flume." This is an excavation made in the solid granite, at the base of the mountain, to the depth of seventy-five feet, and fifteen feet wide, and twenty-five rods in length. This is one of the most beautiful of all the curiosities of nature that our eyes ever beheld. When viewing the massive walls on each side, looking as if they were laid up with human hands, we were reminded of the road that was made through the Red Sea, when ancient Israel passed through it. On beholding this natural cut in the solid granite, and many other wonderful things of nature, we were led to ask, as did the Psalmist of old, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" We could not refrain from kneeling down, while in this attitude of mind, and raising our voices to the Maker of these hills and mountains. We, with Bro. Knowls, enjoyed a very precious season in the bed of the "Flume," in calling on the God of the universe. The walls from the bed of the Flume extend up to an altitude of seventy-five feet, and incline toward each other at the top, between which is suspended a huge rock of one hundred tons, more or less, which renders the scenery doubly interesting to the admiring crowds that visit there from all parts of the world.

The next place we visited was the Pool, another of nature's grand exhibitions. This body of water is hemmed in on every side by the granite ledge. The craggy ledge with which this Pool is surrounded extends up to an altitude of seventy-five feet, or more, making it wonderful to the beholder. From here we journeyed to what is called Jacob's Ladder, but we did not see any angels ascending or descending.

The next of nature's wonders to which our attention was directed, was the "Old Man" of the mountain, so called because of a rock presenting the form of a human face.

After leaving the mountains for a more even surface, we passed through the town of Bethlehem to Whitefield, the place of our destination, where our quarterly conference was to be held. On our arrival we found many kind friends, who administered to our wants after a godly sort, in being welcomed to their homes, and sharing of hospitalities. Whitefield is quite a flourishing village, embracing several stores and mills, also a large hotel. There are three religious societies here, the Adventist, F. W. Baptist, and Methodist. The latter two unite and hold but one meeting.

The Advent church is one of our best churches in New Hampshire. It is under the pastoral charge of Bro. J. A. Cleaveland; and through the faithfulness of his labors many accessions have been made to their numbers. Our meeting commenced with a deep, devotional feeling, and increased in interest until its close.

We were happy to meet Brn. J. Couch and L. C. Glazier at this meeting. Expected to have seen Bro. T. W. Piper, of Melvin Village, N. H., and others, but did not. We stopped with Bro. I. M. Aldrich during our stay in Whitefield, and found his home a pilgrim's tavern indeed. May God's blessing be on the church in Whitefield. More anon.

NEW SOCIAL ORDER.

BRO. GRANT:—It becomes us to give all the evidence of the coming kingdom. Here is an extract, which may show all people which way the world is drifting. From former precedents, of the seed sown in a community there is sure a crop. Now if the condition of things shall obtain in the community mentioned, what will be the condition of society when a crop is perfected? There will be men who will acknowledge no woman as his wife, women who have no husbands. Moral restraint is removed; they fear not, they care not for the remarks of moral people; all are independent as people are at the Five Points in N. Y. Children grow up without parents that have no natural affection; for it would appear that such are to be "void of natural affection." Thus this Sodom-like society is in progress, without priest or king, or any functionary, free toleration of any lust imaginable, and this state of things to be advocated by one who proclaims himself "second Christ." I cannot but think that some of these persons were once enlightened, and have turned away from God, and now propose to walk according to the flesh, in open violation of all laws, God's or man's. Rejoice, ye that are in the grace of God; keep yourselves from the snares of the evil one; his time is short; his bounds run up to the kingdom of God; beyond that he cannot go. The redeemed of the Lord shall inherit the kingdom for ever. Look up, ye heirs with the King; the inheritance you will soon possess.

W. C. STONE.

"A man named Thomas Cook, living at Huntsville, Ind., has established a new socialistic community at that place. It is styled 'The Independent Order of Free and Independent Men and Women,' and declares all its members independent and free of all external powers, such as human rulers and human governors, so far as it is possible for human souls at present to be. There will be no priest, king, president, governor, or functionary, no master and slave, no husband and slave, no husband and wife, no landlord and tenant. The children, in a certain sense, will be given 'the democratic power of choosing their own parents.' Mr. Cook has began the publication of a journal denominated the True Union, or Scientific Socialist, supporting these principles, and proclaims himself as the second Christ, regularly succeeding Jesus of Nazareth."

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Our conference at North Searsport commenced Thursday eve, Nov. 23d. Sermon by Bro. N. G. Read. Friday forenoon, prayer and conference. Sermon at two o'clock by Bro. T. Smith. Sermon in eve by Bro. F. A. Baker. Saturday forenoon, prayer and conference. Sermon at two by Bro. N. G. Reed; and in the eve by Bro. F. A. Baker. Sabbath morn, prayer and conference. Sermon at ten by Bro. N. G. Reed. At two by Bro. T. Smith. In eve by Bro. F. A. Baker, also administration of the sacrament.

Our conference proved a profitable meeting; interest at its commencement good, and increased with every meeting. The preaching was spiritual, earnest, and effective; well applied and well received. Backsliders were reclaimed; some rose for prayer. Interest was such as to warrant a continuance of the meeting, and a letter just received from Bro. Baker says the meetings have been protracted with good effect. Many have been made happy in Jesus' love, and the prospect is good that many more will yield to the Savior. Pray that the revival may continue.

ATTENTION!

Who feels an interest in extending the circulation of the Crisis and who also desires to aid me in procuring a sewing machine for family use? I wish a few more names to add to the number I already have, to make out a club and get a sewing machine. Brother, sister, in Western N. Y., who read this, can't you procure the name of some one to take the Crisis, and then send me the name and money to add to my list? Some are doing this. I want my list to be made out by Feb. 1st., '66, Who will help?

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Alling.

BRO. GRANT:—The past few weeks has been a season of very much interest to our little church, and I trust good has been accomplished, both in bringing souls to Christ, and in the revival of the christian graces in the hearts of our members.

Some three weeks ago, Bro. J. Wendell commenced a series of meetings, which continued about two weeks, during which time quite a number manifested their determination to serve the Lord; they were baptized, and ten were added to our church, mostly upon their late profession of faith. The ordinance of baptism was administered by Bro. J. M. Judson in the evening, at the close of a religious service. Bro. Judson is now laboring in this field in dispensing the good word of life, as opportunity offers. The right hand of fellowship was extended by Bro. G. W. Stetson, who was providentially present on that occasion.

Bye the bye, this brother is about to visit Clinton county, N. Y., and would esteem it a privilege to become acquainted with brethren of like precious faith in his travels thither, and in that region, and it is with pleasure I commend him to their consideration, believing his labors would prove a blessing to those who see fit to give him a call. (See his notice in this paper.)

The interest of the meeting was much increased by the unexpected appearance at that time of our beloved bro. Cook, who continued here and at Berlin until last evening, when he also bid us a hearty farewell, and this morning started for his home at Binghamton, N. Y., with the blessing of the brethren resting upon him. As there may be some who would be glad to hear more definitely from Bro. Cook, I will say, his entire being seems swallowed up in understanding and proclaiming to all who have an eye to see, the great and all-absorbing truths of these last days. His physical strength is weak, and, to all human appearance, his testimony and labors of love are drawing to a close; still he entertains strong hopes of continuing till the glory and the crown are revealed. God grant that his faith may be realized.

Bro. Wendell is now laboring in his former field, at Edinboro', Pa., and vicinity.

The brethren generally, and particularly our ministers, are becoming deeply imbued with the belief that redemption is at hand. Evidence seems to dispel all unbelief in every mind open to its reception. It is becoming a reality, and not a therory, and I trust is exerting a salutary influence upon us as a people, and tells upon the heart of the ungodly. All feel it to be a duty to come up upon higher ground, and live for God and the judgment.

Norwalk, O. P. ALLING.

From Bro. R. J. Page.

BRO. GRANT:—Yesterday, and one week ago yesterday, I had the pleasure of listening to the gospel trump, as blown by Bro. P. A. Smith. Bro. Smith has been laboring in the town of Murray for the past two weeks, and his labors have not been in vain. He has been instrumental in awakening quite an interest, although being opposed by his chief enemy, "Satan," who has left no means untried to hinder the spread of truth.

Yes, Satan has been at work. His agents (being mighty men of war) have not slept, but have been up and doing, and being aided and assisted, not by Satan alone, but by the strong ones of those on board their sectarian-clad craft, have kept many from rejoicing in the truth as it is in Jesus.

But, thank the Lord, quite a number have had the scales knocked from off their eyes, and from the darkness of infidelity and sectarian fog, have been made to rejoice in a crucified and risen Savior. Oh, it was sweet to hear them publicly express their faith in him, and a hope of life and immortality at his coming and his kingdom. Their countenances beaming and eyes sparkling with the light and love of the truth, buckling on the christian armor, ready and willing to fight manfully the battles of the Lord. Entreating and pleading for others to come and go with them, for their Leader and his army were sure to come off victorious, and would soon, very soon, unfurl their banner to the breeze, encamped upon the earth made new. God grant that we, with them, may ever be good and true soldiers, never desert our Leader, ever stand firm in the ranks, is the prayer of a private. Bro. Smith, keep on recruiting; your reward will come by and by.

R. J. PAGE.

Knowlesville.

From Bro. S. Hale.

BRO. GRANT:—I have not remained silent because I have slackened my efforts, or abated my zeal in the good cause. I have no hobby to ride. I love truth in all its different aspects; and I feel as though they all had their appropriate place, and it only needs that wisdom that cometh from God alone to rightly divide the word, and give to every one a portion in due season. I have earnestly plead with God that he might give to me that wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, which would enable me to be always ready to give a reason of the hope that I have, with meekness and fear. My Heavenly Father has heard and answered my prayer.

When I embraced the glorious and blessed truths of the soon coming of Jesus, my heart was filled with joy and gladness. I remember well the Sabbath in December, 1853, when you preached in Newark, N. J. As I heard the sweet words of promise breathing forth, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according" to his deeds, they gave a new impetus to my christian experience. I have blessed the day many times, and have felt that it was a God-send your coming there. I began from that time to search the Scriptures as I never had before. I only partially severed my connection with the Baptist church.

In the spring of 1854, I removed to Collinsville, Ct., and there I again heard you, and never before felt more fully the importance of truth, and of being sanctified through the truth, that the truth might make me free, than I did then. It was then I was fully resolved, by the help of the Lord, that I would never more turn to the right hand or to the left, but press onward toward the mark, for the prize. It seemed that a new life had sprung up in my soul, and I could adopt the language of Peter, when he fully realized the mission of Jesus, and how life and immortality were brought to light by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Oh! I never loved the Bible so well before, and it has grown better ever since. How true it is, "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." It has been so in my experience. And it has been with me a constant joy and peace in believing. My heavenly Father has so often verified his promise to me, that I have very much desired to know the Lord more perfectly, whom to know aright is life and peace.

Bro. Wise, of Collinsville, Ct., was a true and faithful brother to me, pointing out to me the way, and presenting words of encouragement to me, drawn from the words of Jesus. God help him with all needed grace, is my earnest prayer. May the Lord continually bless you, Bro. Grant, in the good work in which you are engaged.

Your brother in Christ,

Troy, N. H. SOLOMON HALE.

From Sr. M. M. Weaver.

DEAR PILGRIMS:—Away here among strangers, I find the friendship of Jesus as true as truth itself. I have not the society of those of "like precious faith" (excepting a call from a passing pilgrim, now and then), yet I find "peace in believing," and have "joy in the Holy Ghost."

"O, what has Jesus bought for me!" my soul exclaims to-night, as I think of the glories of the world to come. The future life, O how blessed to contemplate immortality! How comforting to think of the land of peace and pleasure promised to the faithful! And when I count the many delightful things connected with that life and land, I can but ask,

"O what are all my sufferings here,
If, Lord, thou count me meet
With that enraptured host to appear,
And worship at thy feet."

Hallelujah! my heart longs to be there singing victory over sin, sinners, and Satan, tasting of the rich provisions of Paradise, delighting in the beauties of Eden, safe over the river of life and time, beyond the tomb, away from earthly care, where tears, temptation and death can never come!

And I may be there! Weak, worthless, faithless and frail as I am, I may be an heir of glory, a jewel of the Lord, a star in the firmament of the kingdom of God's dear Son! This is because "salvation's free."

Dear brethren and sisters, be faithful. Be true. Be prudent. Preserve a healthy influence among all classes. Watch your words. O how much harm is done by a few careless words spoken by those who want to be good. Friends are made enemies by wrong thoughts, evil surmisings, and misrepresented words. How cunning Satan is. How many ways he has to destroy souls. How he loves to set people to whispering. He makes them say things about others, and then says, "Don't let them know it." Why not be honest, and tell people their faults face to face. I'll do it, even if they lie about that. It is my duty.

I bear witness to-night that I have no hard feelings toward the worst enemies I have. God bless them, as he knows how to bless.

I wish Jesus would come, for I want to see him. Let time roll on, it can't fly too fast. But while he delays wisdom prompts us to be preparing for him who "shall sit upon his throne." Ah! I know his face will shine as the sun, and his words be full of the melody of heaven. It seems as though I can hear the sweet tones of his voice, saying, "Come, ye blessed." May I hear it said to me.

Pray for me, if any have faith, for I want to be faithful to God and man. I often pray for the pilgrims that dwell in solitary places, where the true gospel is not preached. May God give them light and understanding. By and by, if faithful, you will have the society of all God's holy ones, in the kingdom of glory. Be of good courage, and bear the cross till the Savior comes with your crown.

Yours in the Gospel,

Westfield, Mass. MARIA M. WEAVER.

From Bro. J. C. Wheeler.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to say through the Crisis, that Bro. Charles Goodrich has visited us here in Carthage of late; appointment given by Bro. Munger, to whom we are much obliged. Bro. Charles is a faithful laborer in the vineyard, one worthy of recompense, both in temporal and spiritual things. He presents the truth in its simplicity and fullness, and rounds no corners; and when he comes among a people, he knows nothing but Christ and him crucified; not a mischief-maker, but a peace-maker. He strives to build up instead of tearing down. There are some of the other class, but we have no business for them in this region, and hope they will keep away. Sinners want to be saved, and they know enough about mischief now. They want to learn of a better way. There are laborers enough, but the Lord will be best pleased with true ones, and I think the people will. We have many brethren in this region, and they are good; we love them as ourselves, and wish to have them build up instead of tear down. The judgment is just before us. Let us mind the things of God. Brethren, let us strive to be good and humble, not great.

Carthage, Me. J. C. WHEELER.

From Sr. O. N. Morse.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that these are truly "perilous times," for the love of many is getting cold. The promise is only to those that continue faithful to the end. The time was with us in Springville, Wis., that we had preaching from Adventists and four other denominations; but now we have no preaching of any kind. When the wicked rule, the people mourn, and the heart of the righteous is made sad. O that some of the watchmen that are on the walls of Zion would come this way and sound the alarm—"Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him," and wake up the people, for the day of the Lord hasteth greatly.

I know I love the people of God, and I want to love his appearing. I feel as if I needed more love for the coming of Christ, that the love of the world may have no share of my affection. I have been for twenty-two years numbered with those that have been looking for Christ to appear the second time, without sin unto salvation, and am still trying to run my race with patience, ever looking unto Jesus, who is the author of my faith. I believe soon "the kingdoms of this world" will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." I remain your sister in Christ,

O. N. MORSE.

BRO. GEO. SMITH, Montreal, C. E., writes: "We in Montreal are still pressing on to the kingdom; and, by the help of the Lord, we intend to continue to the end; for unto such is the promise of salvation, through our blessed Savior, unto eternal life.

It does appear to me that 'the end of all things' is near, for wickedness of all kinds is abounding more and more. How little of the fear of the Lord is before men's eyes; and how little of true piety is found in the churches in general. While attending a Bible class last Lord's day, in the young men's Christian Association, I could not help noticing especially that the younger men are almost Spiritualists, or infidels altogether; and still puffed up to think that they have attained to great knowledge of the Scriptures.

How thankful we ought to be to our heavenly Father that we have seen so much of the truth as we have; and let us pray that we may be kept humble, that he may be enabled to give us more light and knowledge of his word, for he delights to please the humble and contrite soul."

Obituaries.

MORRIS. Died in Springwater, Liv. Co., N. Y., April 18th, 1865, of typhoid pneumonia, Bro. Lyman Morris, aged sixty-four years.

Bro. Morris was well known in all this section as one of those staunch, reliable, gospel advocates, of which there have been but few at any time, and which Satan would gladly make less in number. His home was that of the pilgrim; his greeting was that of a christian; his life was that of a saint. He loved and longed for the coming of Christ in his kingdom. He did much to keep the truth before the people, and for a long time has the grove on his place resounded with the songs of the saints who came up yearly to worship there. He died in faith, sleeps in Jesus, and in the morn of glory will awake to immortality. His funeral sermon was preached by the Presbyterian clergyman, because of my absence from home at the time.

AUSTIN. Died at West Winsted, Conn., Dec. 15th, 1865, of diphtheria, little Lillia Bell Austin, daughter of John F. and Susan Austin, aged two years and three months.

Lillia was a sweet, bright child, and used to climb on the writer's knee and talk like one of maturer years; but Lillia's voice is hushed in death, and those little hands once so active are crossed over that once beating heart, now still in the cold embrace of death. The sweet flowers of earth wither only to bloom again in the paradise of God.

The writer tried to comfort them from words found in 1 Thess. 4: 13. May the God of all grace be their comfort and solace until he shall call his children home.

SAWTELL. Died in Bradford, N. H., Sept. 13th, 1865, of diphtheria, Willie A., youngest son of Silas and Susan F. Sawtell, aged seven years and six days.

Cease your weeping, dearest father,
Mother, brothers, dry your tears;
Willie sleeps, but Christ will wake him,
When in glory he appears.

Awake to die again? no, never!
He will gain a heavenly home;
Chant immortal praises ever,
In a world where death's unknown.

MARSH. Died at Unionville, Conn., Dec. 8th, 1865, after a long illness, Emma Jane Marsh, wife of George Marsh, aged twenty-six years.

Our dear Emma was one of the little ones who with a lowly spirit abode in Christ from day to day. She has left an affectionate companion and two sisters to tread life's weary way a little longer, looking for Jesus, the resurrection and the life.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Dec. 13th, Queenstown 14th.

The London Observer says Napoleon is apprehensive that Maximilian will follow his Empress to Europe, and has prevailed upon the Mexican Minister at Paris to proceed to Mexico to endeavor to persuade Maximilian from abdicating. He would sail on the 15th. The Observer thinks he will not be in time and that Maximilian will be in Europe before New Year's.

It was reported that France had given the Queen of England the six months' notice to terminate the extradition treaty, because of the strict formalities required before French offenders can be given up.

THREE DAYS LATER.

The King of Belgium was buried yesterday. The new King has taken the oaths of office.

The message of President Johnson has been favorably received and is regarded as friendly, and United States bonds improved after its reception.

It is stated that Spain has accepted the mediation of England in Chilian affairs.

DOMESTIC.

INTENSE COLD IN MINNESOTA.—The Wilton (Minnesota) News of Dec. 7th says Mr. H. G. Green of Alden township, Freeborn county, gives us the following sorrowful news of the probable death of four men in his county, by freezing, on Tuesday, the 12th inst:

"Three brothers, whose names he had not learned, started together from Moyer's grocery, at White Walnut lake, in the edge of Faribault county, for their home in Rice Lake Township, Freeborn county, five miles distant, since which time they have not been heard from. They have been searched for in every direction in vain. The supposition is that they got lost, and perished with cold, and now lie buried in the snow on the prairie.

A Mr. James Wood of Rice Lake Township, between three and four o'clock P. M. of the same day, started to go to a neighbor's, where his wife was visiting, a mile away, but did not reach the place. Mr. Wood has been tracked a distance of some twelve miles, but not found. His neighbors tracked him, first, in a southwest direction, next, in a northeast direction, and finally in a southeast direction to Zumbro Creek, where all trace of him was lost.

Mr. Twist of Carlstown township, in the same county, had one hundred and forty sheep caught out in the same storm, and entirely drifted under. In digging them out he has found twenty-five dead, and there are a number not yet found.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.—The Superintendent of the Atlantic Telegraph has written to the London Times, stating that the Great Eastern steamship is chartered to go to sea in June, 1866, for the double purpose of laying an entirely new cable, and of raising the broken end of the one thousand and one hundred miles of cable laid this year, so as to splice additional cable thereto, and thus, if successful, furnish to the public a second means of communication. This one thousand one hundred miles of submerged cable, the Superintendent says, is ascertained to be in the most perfect order by daily tests taken from the time it broke, and still continued daily. The buoys at the end of it are washed away, but this is of no consequence, as they were intended only for a temporary purpose, the spot for grapneling having been laid down by solar observations, so that a good navigator can at any time sail to within half a mile of the broken cable.

RELIGIOUS ESTABLISHMENTS OF ITALY.—The progressive or liberal Italians propose to improve the financial condition of the nation by suppressing the religious orders, and assuming the salaries of the regular clergy. There are eighty-four of these establishments, of which eighty possess property to the amount of $8,000,000. The monasteries contain 15,494 clerical, and 4466 lay members, who are men, and nearly 20,000 women. The annual incomes of the property holding orders are estimated at $3,000,000, and the capital from which this income arises is valued at $75,000,000. The regular clergy in 229 dioceses, with their bishops and archbishops, have a revenue of $13,000,000, which, so far as salaries are concerned, is very unequally distributed. The proposed measure, therefore, if it does not find active friends, has some passive supporters, even among the church party.

SIZE OF THE WEST.—Illinois would make forty such States as Rhode Island, and Minnesota, sixty. Missouri is larger than all New England. Ohio exceeds either Ireland or Scotland, or Portugal, and equals Belgium, Scotland and Switzerland together. Missouri is more than half as large as Italy, and larger than Denmark, Holland, Belgium and Switzerland. Missouri and Illinois are larger than England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

☞ A petition to Congress, now being circulated for signatures, commences as follows: "The undersigned, women of the United States, respectfully ask an amendment of the Constitution that shall prohibit the several States from disfranchising any of their citizens on the ground of sex."

☞ It is reported that $60,000 worth of arms were lately shipped from New York to Vera Cruz for Maximilian.

THE WORLD THE FIELD.—The whole number of missionary societies in the world is eighty-five. These are of all degrees of magnitude, from that of the American Board and the British Wesleyan Society, down to those which support a single missionary. The number of British Societies is twenty-two, of American twenty, of German thirteen (mostly small), of Dutch nine (mostly among their own possessions in the Pacific), of Scandinavian seven, of French one, and of Colonial seven. In the magnitude of operations the United States stand second only to England. The oldest society is an English one, that for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, founded in 1701. Its sphere of operations is still extensive. Three societies were formed in England before the work began with us.

A SERIOUS BLOW TO ROMANISM.—The Italian Parliament has passed a law making marriage a civil rite, and leaving the parties to seek ecclesiastical benediction at the hands of a Catholic priest or a Protestant minister, as they choose, thus stripping the Romish priests of a powerful monopoly.

☞ From Rome the death is announced of Doctor Ramolino, nephew of Madame Letitia Ramolino, mother of the Bonapartes. Deceased was a pensioner of the Imperial Crown.

For the World's Crisis.

"I WILL UPHOLD THEE."

I.

The Almighty ever present,
He whose eyes are over all,
The smallest work of his creation,
E'en the little sparrow's fall;
Paints the petals of the flowers,
And with fragrance fills their cup,
Canst thou doubt his wings of mercy
Shall not ever bear thee up?

II.

He who speaketh to the ocean,
Here shall thy proud waves be stayed,
Guides the planets in their motion,
All in light for us arrayed;
Daily all our wants supplying,
Fire and water, light and air,
Can we doubt in all our wanderings,
He's not present everywhere?

III.

He who guides the lightning's flashes,
In his thunder speaks to all;
Daily thou mayst hear his whisperings,
In a voice so still and small;
And his ear is ever open
To the humble when they cry,
And in trouble he is near them,
Even hears the faintest sigh.

IV.

After night he giveth daylight,
After clouds the welcome sun,
Clothes the valleys and the mountains,
Guides the rivers where to run.
He who decks the blooming lily,
Will he not much more clothe thee?
He who feeds the hungry ravens,
All thy wants his eye can see.

V.

Let his promises, then, daily
Be thy comfort, child of God;
Trust him ever, trust him hourly,
E'en while suffering from his rod.
He has said, all power is given
Him in heaven, and on earth;
All shall work for good together,
To the child of heavenly birth.

M. C. ALLEN.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

At the time I first arranged our Bible chronology, I had no knowledge of Ptolemy's so called "famous astronomical era"; and thinking that the word of God was the highest authority to which we can appeal, I felt satisfied with the chronology given by those sacred authors. Hence, my chronology, in its original form, was only a table of Bible dates written out for convenience, or that we might see at one view that chronology as given in the book of God. But when I sent it to Bro. Bliss, he refused to publish it, because it conflicted with Ptolemy's Canon; and to satisfy me of its incorrectness, he sent me his "Analysis of Sacred Chronology," up to which time I had no knowledge of the fact that it was claimed that our chronology was established by astronomy. And when I called to mind that our chronology did not claim for its authority the conflicting opinions of men, but that word of God which he has "magnified . . above all" his "name," I saw that it could not admit of an error or be so altered as to harmonize with Ptolemy's Canon; and as two bodies cannot occupy the same space at one and the same time, so it was impossible that both the Bible Chronology and that of Ptolemy's Canon could occupy the place they claimed in history. And when I thus saw that either my Bible, the book I loved, was thus proven to be incorrect, or Ptolemy's "famous astronomical era," the foundation on which the chronology of all the world is raised, was erroneous, I felt the deepest anxiety to know the truth of the matter; hence made all of those astronomical calculations which it claims as the authority or proof of its correctness. But not having at that time seen Ptolemy's description of the eclipses, I supposed that the smallness of the quantity eclipsed was an evidence that the eclipses claimed to establish the Canon were not the same alluded to by Ptolemy; therefore, when I discovered, as mentioned on page 34 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," that no astronomical tables can make them, I thought it proved that they were not the eclipses alluded to by Ptolemy, hence looked out for others. But since Prof. Hudson has favored us with the express word of Ptolemy, both as to the time and quantity eclipsed, we see that those I have offered could not be the eclipses alluded to by him; hence it becomes a seeker for truth to look again. We have clearly proven that, if Ptolemy was not mistaken as to the quantity eclipsed, in the one which he claims to have "carefully observed" himself, in A. D. 136, there could have been no eclipse March 8th, B. C. 720. But whether there was an eclipse there, or not, I find that it in no way interferes with our Bible chronology; therefore, leaving this, we must examine those that do.

Prof. Hudson having been kind enough to give us in our own mother tongue the express words of Ptolemy, as to those eclipses which he both saw himself, and computed with his improved astronomical instruments, has enabled us to prove, almost to absolute certainty, the strict correctness of my tables, which enables me at last to have great confidence in the eclipses they make.

Since Prof. Hudson has brought to light what Ptolemy has said concerning those eclipses, I find that his description of those which occurred during the reign of Cambyses and Darius are, both as to time and quantity, near what my tables make; which brings Ptolemy's Canon up again as a subject of controversy; and, resolving to know the truth of the matter, I have spent several months in searching books; and, as the result of my investigation, have learned, to my great astonishment and surprise, that Ptolemy had no Canon,—that we have been all the time fighting against not a real, but only an apparent difficulty. That which appeared as a rugged mountain, hard to remove, is found to be but as a bank of fog, all dispelled by the light of truth.

In proof that Ptolemy had no Canon, or that the catalogue of kings, with the number of years each reigned, called his Canon, was unknown to him, the Duke of Manchester has well asked, "If the Canon was in existence in the time of Clement of Alexandria, could he have been ignorant of it? or how could he have neglected it so entirely as, by his Stromata, was evidently the case"? "According to Theon, Ptolemy was the author of the second part of the Canon, from the date of Alexder to the last year of Antonius," which portion of the Canon is proven to be about correct.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "Ptolemy himself probably constructed the skeleton of the Astronomical Canon; but who filled up the intermediate reigns between the recorded eclipses?" "I think," he continues, "I have shown some grounds for suspecting that the part before the death of Alexander was filled up by some Christian chronologers."—Times of Daniel, p. 225.

Knowing nothing of that confused mass of conflicting authors from which the so called Ptolemy's Canon had been selected, when I first saw the list of kings with their respective number of years assigned to each, it had the appearance of truth; insomuch as it presented to my mind a serious difficulty in the way of the true Bible chronology. But he who has examined the confused and conflicting authorities from which it has been selected, regards it as nothing more than an exhibition of the peculiar views of those who arranged it, without any thing certain as to its correctness. Indeed, there is such a variety as to the number of years different kings are said to have reigned, one may select that number that best suits the chronology he may prefer. Therefore, as ignorant as I was as to the source of authority from which the received chronology of our world is selected, I find that, in going to the Bible, I went to the proper and the only real source of authority from which any thing reliable, as to a correct chronology, can be obtained.

But though the number of years during which kings are said to have reigned is of little worth; astronomy is reliable, for eclipses with correct tables may be calculated with great precision; and I have mentioned that my tables make the eclipses in the reign of Cambyses and Darius very near the record as given by Ptolemy; hence they fix the time of the reign of these two kings with that clear appearance of truth, that cannot be set aside with the light we have on the subject. And since truth unmixed with error should be sought by every christian, we have been searching history to find the truth; and, if we may be enabled to distinguish a real gem from the rubbish among which it is found, that which to me, at least, has the clearest appearance of real reliable authority, is the "remarkable document of Philo." It reads thus:—"According to the chronicle of our seniors, they have left us a writing after this manner: Joshua, . . . in the first year of Cyrus, went up to Jerusalem. In the second year he laid the foundation of the temple; . . . but the building was impeded ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF DARIUS HYSTASPES; nor could he go up to Cyrus, who was occupied in war with Tomyris; and when Cyrus was slain, after him reigned Assuerus Artaxerxes Priscus."—Times of Daniel, p. 84.

It is said that "this curious and valuable document . . . is perhaps the most ancient record in existence, except the sacred books, relating to this point of Jewish history; and as such is entitled to greater weight than any other human authority we have upon the subject."—Times of Daniel, p. 84.

As darkness is dispelled by the rising sun, so this truth removes the great difficulty in which we have been so much involved, in attempting to reconcile profane history with the true Bible chronology.

When we observed that God's sacred writers place the reign of Darius either cotemporaneous with (Dan. 6: 28), or before Cyrus (Dan. 1: 21 and 6: 1), we have been greatly perplexed to find that Ptolemy's Canon placed the beginning of the reign "of the first Darius" eight years after the death of Cyrus. But since the truth of the matter is brought to light by this most valuable document of Philo, the difficulty is removed; insomuch, we can now see a remarkable harmony existing between sacred and profane chronology. We are now enabled to see the cause of the great confusion into which writers on chronology have been involved; and the difficulty seems to have originated from a slight error on the part of Herodotus, who is called the "father of history"; which error was that of attributing things to the son, which were accomplished by the father; thus causing many to blend "Darius, the son of Hystaspes," with his father, "Darius Hystaspes"; though Herodotus himself always calls him by the proper name, that is, "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but when we discriminate between the father and son, the difficulty is removed, and ancient history reconciled with the Bible. For example, Daniel informs us that when Belshazzar was slain, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5; 31); and "in the oriental Chronical, Darius Hystaspes is called Darius the Median"; and "both on his tomb, and on the Dorics, Darius Hystaspes has the Median robe."—Times of Daniel, p. 85.

From among the many ways in which the Duke of Manchester has proven that "Darius the Median" was "Darias Hystaspes," we may offer two:—

1. "According to Herodotus, Strabo and Polyenus, Darius Hystaspes was the first who levied a tax, and this seems in Scripture to be attributed to Darius the Median"; thus "It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom one hundred and twenty princes, and over these three presidents, of whom Daniel was the first; that the princes might give account to them, and the king should have no damage."—Dan. 6: 2.

2. "The Artaxerxes who preceded the Darius, in whose reign the temple was completed, was in the custom of receiving taxes (Ezra 4: 13); therefore, the Darius who succeeded him was not Darius Hystaspes."—Times of Daniel, p. 82.

To the above, I might add another proof: "Pliny says that Susa was built by Darius Hystaspes"; and if so, the time at which Daniel was in Shushan, or Susa (Dan. 8: 2), could not have beer earlier than the beginning of his reign. The two kings are distinguished the one from the other in the Bible, thus: "Darius the Median" (Dan. 5: 31), and "Darius king of Persia" (Ezra 4: 24.) They are distinguished in history thus: "the first Darius," or "Darius Hystaspes," and "Darius Songimanus," or "Darius the son of Hystaspes."

Ptolemy points out the particular king in whose reign the eclipses occurred, thus: "Darius the first"; and the first Darius mentioned in the Bible was the one alluded to by Daniel. And since the eclipse which occurred "in the seventh year of Cambyses" is by Ptolemy located in the one hundred and twenty-fifth year of Nabonassar," we learn that it occurred in the reign of the first Cambyses; that is, the father, instead of the son of Cyrus.

The following table will exhibit the truth of the matter, as nearly correct as we can arrange it with the evidence gathered from history.

AM I A CHRISTIAN?

We have rarely seen the traits of a true christian spirit fully set forth than in the following article by John Fletcher. Let all read it with care.—ED.

1. Do I feel any pride; or am I partaker of the meek and lowly mind that was in Jesus? Am I dead to all desire of praise? If any despise me, do I like them worse for it? Or, if they love and approve, do I love them more on that account? Am I willing to be accounted useless, and of no consequence,—glad to be made of no reputation? Do humiliations give me real pleasure, and is it the language of my heart,

Make me little and unknown,
Loved and prized by God alone?

2. Does God bear witness in my heart that it is purified? that in all things I please him?

3. Is the life I live "by the faith of the Son of God"; so that Christ dwelleth in me? Is Christ the life of all my affections and designs, as my soul is the life of my body? Is my eye single and my soul full of light,—all eye within and without; always watchful?

4. Have I always the presence of God? Does no cloud come between God and the eye of my faith? Can I "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks"?

5. Am I saved from the fear of man? Do I speak plainly to all, neither fearing their frowns, nor seeking their favors? Have I no shame of religion; and am I always ready to confess Christ, to suffer with his people, and to die for his sake?

6. Do I deny myself at all times, and take up my cross as the Spirit of God leads me? Do I embrace the cross of every sort, being willing to give up my ease and convenience to oblige others; or do I expect them to conform to my hours and customs? Does the cross sit light upon me, and am I willing to suffer all the will of God? Can I trample on pleasure and pain? Have I

"A soul inured to pain,
To hardship, grief, and loss,
Bold to take up, firm to sustain,
The consecrated cross?"

7. Are my bodily senses, and outward things, all sanctified to me? Do I not seek my own things to please myself? Do I seek grace more for God's honor than my own profit, preferring the glory of God to all in earth or heaven, the giver to the gift?

8. Am I "poor in spirit"? Do I "take pleasure in infirmities, necessities, distresses, reproaches"; so that out of weakness, want, and danger, I may cast myself on the Lord? Have I no false shame in approaching God? Do I seek to be saved, as a poor sinner, by grace alone?

9. Do I not "lean to my own understanding"? Am I ready to give up the point, when contradicted, unless conscience forbid? Am I easy to be persuaded? Do I esteem every one better than myself? Am I as willing to be a cypher as to be useful? and does my zeal burn bright notwithstanding this willingness to be nothing?

10. Have I no false wisdom, goodness, strength; as if the grace I feel were my own? Do I never take that glory to myself which belongs to Christ? Do I feel my want of Christ as much as ever, to be my all? and do I draw near to God, as poor and needy, only presenting before him his well-beloved Son? Can I say,

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merit of thy death?
I shall hang upon my God,
Till I thy perfect glory see,
Till the sprinkling of thy blood
Shall speak me up to thee?"

Do I find joy in being thus nothing, empty, undeserving, giving all the glory to Christ? Or do I wish that grace made me something, instead of God being all?

11. Have I meekness? Does it bear rule over all my tempers, affections, and desires; so that my hopes, fears, joys, zeal, love, and hatred, are duly balanced? Do I feel no disturbance from others, and do I desire to give none? If any offend me, do I still love them, and make it an occasion to pray for them? If condemned by the world, do I entreat?—if condemned by the godly, am I one in whose mouth there is no reproof; replying only as conscience, and not as impatient nature dictates? If in the wrong, do I confess it? If in the right, do I submit, being content to do well, and suffer for it? It is the sin of superiors to be overbearing, of inferiors to be stubborn; if, then, I am a servant, do I yield not only to the gentle, but to the froward, committing my cause in silence to God; or, if a master, do I "show all long-suffering?" The Lord of all was "as he that serveth." If I am the greatest, do I make myself least, "and the servant of all?" if a teacher am I lowly, meek and patient, not conceited, self-willed, nor dogmatic? Am I ready to give up the claims of respect due to age, station, parent, master, etc., or do I rigidly exact those demands?

12. Do I possess resignation; am I content with whatever is, or may be; seeing that God, the Author of all events, does, and will do, all for my good? Do I desire nothing but God, willing to part with all, if the Lord manifests his will for my so doing? Do I "know how to abound," and yet not gratify unnecessary wants; but being content with things needful, do I faithfully and freely dispose of all the rest for the help of others? Do I know how to suffer need? Is my confidence unshaken while I feel the distress of poverty, and have the prospect of future want, while, humanly speaking, strangling were better than life? And, in these circumstances, do I pity those who, having plenty, waste it in excess, instead of helping me?

13. Am I just; doing in all things as I would others should do unto me? Do I render homage to those above me, not presuming on their lenity and condescension? As a superior, do I exercise no undue authority, taking no advantage of the timidity, respect or necessity of any man? Do I consider the great obligation superiority lays me under of being lowly and kind, and of setting a good example?

14. Am I temperate, using the world, and not abusing it? Do I receive outward things in the order of God, making earth a scale to heaven? Is the satisfaction I take in the creation consistent with my being dead to all below, and a means of leading me more to God? Is the turn of my mind and temper in due subjection, not leading me to any extreme, either of too much silence, or of too much talkativeness, of reserve or freedom?

15. Am I courteous, not severe? Suiting myself to all with sweetness? Striving to give no one pain, but to gain and win all for their good?

16. Am I vigilant; redeeming time, taking every opportunity of doing good; or do I spare myself, being careless about the souls and bodies to which I might do good? Can I do no more than I do? Do I perform the most servile offices, such as require labor and humiliation, with cheerfulness? Is my conversation always seasoned with salt, at every time administering some kind of favor to those I am with?

17. Do I "love God with all my heart?" Do I constantly present myself, my time, substance, talents, and all that I have, a living sacrifice? Is every thought brought into subjection to Christ? Do I like or dislike only such things as are pleasing or displeasing to God?

18. Do I love God with all my strength, and are my spiritual faculties always vigorous? Do I give way to no sinful languor? Am I always on the watch? Do not business, worldly care, and conversation damp my fervor and zeal for God?

19. Do I love my neighbor as myself; every man for Christ's sake, and honor all men as the image of God? Do I think no evil, listen to no groundless surmises, nor judge from appearances? Can I bridle my tongue, never speaking of the faults of another, but with a view to do good; and when I am obliged to do it, have I the testimony that I sin not? Have I that love which hopeth, believeth, and endureth all things?

20. How am I in my sleep? If Satan presents an evil imagination, does my will immediately resist, or give way to it?

21. Do I bear the infirmities of age or sickness, without seeking to repair the decays of nature by strong liquors; or do I make Christ my sole support, casting the burden of a feeble body into the arms of his mercy?

Jesus, Lord of all, grant thy purest gifts to every waiting disciple. Enlighten us with the knowledge of thy will, and show us "the mark of the prize of our high calling." Let us die to all thou art not; and seek thee with our whole heart, till we enjoy the fullness of the purchased possession.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article, at the closing remarks, we began to examine the nature of the punishment of the wicked; and were examining the word destruction, as expressed by our dear Redeemer, in Matt. 7: 13, where the contrast is brought to view between the word destruction and the word life. If it be contended that the word life means eternal happiness, and that the word destruction means eternal, conscious misery, then, of course, the broad road leads to the eternal preservation of life in misery or torment; and, in this case, the narrow way and broad road both lead to eternal life. What an absurd theory is this! It is entirely at war with the holy book of God, which plainly declares, that "the wages of sin is death," without any qualification of the word whatever.

We will now pass to another passage, where the word destruction is made use of to denote how God can punish the wicked:—Matt. 10: 28. Here we are instructed by the great Teacher, that we must "fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." We would wish to ask the important question, how much of the man would be left, if soul and body were destroyed in hell? It says, in plain words, "destroy both." They will be destroyed alike, and in the same place; so that, if the meaning is to preserve alive in misery, then, of course, the body is preserved alive in order to be tormented with the soul. This would not be "the wages of sin," which "is death"; but the wages of sin which would be preservation of life in misery. If God should destroy both soul and body in hell, I think they would fare very much as the prophet Malachi informs us, when he says:—"All the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. This would cause them to "be as though they had not been."

St. Paul tells us, in 1 Cor. 3: 17, that "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." But supposing we say, "him shall God preserve" alive, and torment him to all eternity; would this be true?

Please turn to Luke 9: 25, where the Savior calls the losing of the soul, the losing of "himself;" or, being "cast away." See also Matt. 5: 29, where our Savior speaks of the whole body being cast into hell, which proves the destruction of the whole man, soul and body. In Ezek. 18: 4, we read "the soul that sinneth it shall die," which could not mean that it should live in torment to all eternity. Please read and examine closely, the whole of the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, and see how plain it shows that the punishment of the wicked is second and eternal death of the whole man.

Can you believe, dear reader, in the heathen dogma that the soul is immortal, and the doctrine of endless torment, when all the Scripture plainly shows that "the wages of sin is death," or everlasting destruction of the whole man?

We will now notice another passage of Scripture:—"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." This does not tell us what kind of punishment it will be; only that it will be everlasting. Now, according to good Greek scholars, the word kolasin, in Greek, from which the word punishment is taken, means nothing more nor less than "cutting off," and is the opposite element of eternal life, which is eternal death, or cutting off from eternal life, which is given to the righteous. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Many people will tell you that it is presumptious to observe the "signs of the times," and that by so doing we are taking upon ourselves the character of a prophet. But we find a very different verdict pronounced in Scripture. The Scribes and Pharisees were prophets, yet our Lord expressly condemns them, not for observing, but for neglecting the "Signs of the Times." If the Pharisees were condemned for overlooking those signs, so may we be condemned; and never before was there a moment in which such signs were offered for contemplation. Never before were they so ominous of judgment to come.

It is indeed a fact well deserving of our attention, that prophecy seems to be passing into common life. Those ancient prophecies have been for two thousand years the study or the wonder of mankind. Their grandeur and their gloom dwelt upon the mind with the effect of some solemn tale, or some magnificent painting. Men admired, and wondered, but they did not tremble. The picture and the story were not for them, but for future generations. But now that time is past. These ancient oracles are no longer a picture, or a tale; they have passed into the sphere of our daily history; the gloom hangs over our own heads—the ground quakes under our own feet; "the things that are coming upon the earth, are coming upon ourselves. We ourselves are the future generation to whom we presumptuously consigned the terrors of God's word." We see in common life the wonders and the signs which in former ages would have been looked upon as supernatural. We see all these beginning to come to pass, and we may soon see them in their full force. "That men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming on the earth," every one can learn, who takes any public journal. It is sometimes curious to observe the language of the public journals. They resemble a kind of running commentary upon the prophetic books of Scripture. The "signs of the last times" are before our eyes, and we know not how short a time may bring them to maturity.

Among others, one of the most significant "signs of the times" is the political condition of the world at large, and especially of the prophetic earth. Such a position of things was never before witnessed in any age or under any circumstance. The two greatest convulsions the world has ever felt were those of the barbaric invasions of the Roman Empire and of the French revolution. It will be admitted that the world has never been so shaken at any time as by those two convulsions, yet the barbaric invasion of the Roman Empire was nothing more than a coarse outbreak of physical fury. It had no depth of design, no comprehensive scheme, no great leader, no definite object. An invasion of wolves and bears would have had as good a claim to be called a moral revolution as the invasion of the Goths and Vandals. Again, the French revolution, though more intelligent than the barbaric invasions, was limited and undeveloped. It was the fury of a slave broken loose, avenging himself, but without a plan or specific object. It is far different at present. We are now arrived at the full development of the French revolution, and are nearing a general "reign of terror." A general tendency to licentiousness pervades all classes of society. (We take the word licentiousness, in its legitimate, literal sense, that is the contempt of all just restraint.) This determination to be free has sunk into the hearts of all nations. But what a freedom! A freedom from every law, both human and divine. A communism of property; a subversion of government; an overthrow of all the institutions of society, and a levelling of all ranks. Such is the secret wish of millions. You will find it everywhere, the legitimate offspring of the reign of terror.—Cal. Times of Restitution.

THE CONTRAST BETWEEN THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

THE PLACE AND MANNER OF WORSHIP.

We may notice a very striking distinction between the place and manner of worship in the two dispensations.

The Jewish dispensation was connected with the earth and the carnal senses. It was typical and temporary. The temple was the earthly dwelling place of God (1 Kings 18: 27). It was to be "an house of prayer for all nations." It "must be exceeding magnifical of fame and glory throughout all nations" (1 Chron. 22: 5). In no other place could the Jewish worship be performed. There were many synagogues or meeting places for instruction and reading of the Scriptures; but there was only one temple, there could be no other. The sacrifices must all be offered there; and when in the land of captivity, prayer was to be made toward that house (2 Chron. 6: 38), as Daniel prayed, "the windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem" (Dan. 6: 10). And three times a year must all the sons of Israel gather and appear before the Lord in Jerusalem (Ex. 13: 17). The dispute between the Jews and the Samaritans was partly about this. "Our fathers worshiped in this mountain; and ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship," said the woman of Samaria at the well. The answer of Jesus intimates the change that has since occurred. "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. . . . But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4: 21–24). And, to effectually dissipate any disposition to cling to that ancient place of adoration, it was decreed that of that glorious temple "not one stone" should be "left upon another" that should not be "thrown down." While, for the comfort of those who had here no local temple, it was said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18: 20). One greater than the temple hallows every place where true worshipers assemble. There is now no city or building invested with any special sanctity, as a temple of the Most High. Rome or London, St. Peter's, St. Paul's, or an upper room like those where saint Paul and saint Peter met the true disciples (Acts 1: 13; 20: 8), all stand upon the same level. The grand questions about worship now are not when? and where? but whom? and how? In garrets, prisons, or palaces, we still find the heavenly Father near, and the Savior as an abiding presence with his little flock.

The ancient temple of Solomon was builded of stones prepared and fitted in the mountain by prescribed rules, and brought together and erected without the sound of axes or hammers. But when done it was only wood and stone and gold and silver and brass. The church is "God's building." It is built upon a rock. As a wise master builder Paul says, "I have laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon" (1 Cor. 3: 10). To the church thus wisely builded of precious materials it is said, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" "If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." "Ye also, as lively [Gr. living] stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Christ Jesus" (1 Pet. 1: 5). "This house of God" "is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15). Of this house we read that it is "built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. 2: 20–22).

None but hewn and prepared stones and timbers could enter the ancient temple. So none but true christians, sanctified and set apart for the service of God, should be builded into the house of God. A mere heap of "wood, hay, and stubble" would not have been a temple; and so in the church each builder who builds wood, hay, or stubble in the Lord's building will lose his labor in the burning, trying day that shall come (1 Cor. 3: 12–15). At the time that the temple of Solomon was dedicated, "when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house" 2 Chron. 7: 1, 2). But when the new temple was consecrated as the "habitation of God through the Spirit," when, like stones well fitted, "they were all with one accord in one place, there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them parted flames like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 1–4). And again, when the Gentiles first received the gospel, the apostle sa s, "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning" (Acts 11: 15). This was "the baptism of the Holy Ghost" which occurred as Jesus promised, at his ascension, "not many days hence" (Acts 1: 5). This, first upon the Jewish and then upon the Gentile portion of the church, was the one Spirit by which we are "all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, and have all been made to drink into one Spirit" (1 Cor. 12: 13) No repetition of this baptism is promised or recorded. It was the first visible attestation of the church as the temple of God, like the smoke that filled the temple of Solomon, or like the descending dove which manifested Christ to Israel on the banks of Jordan (John 1: 33). The Holy Ghost now dwells with and abides in the church, an invisible and silent power; they are "filled with the Spirit," "led by the Spirit," and it is sent forth into their hearts, crying Abba, Father. But all this is very different from that visible baptism in the Holy Ghost of which Peter spake at Pentecost, when he declared that Christ "having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this which ye now SEE and HEAR" (Acts 2: 33). This Spirit pervades the whole temple and dwells in every "living stone"; and where two or three are met in the name of Jesus, their comfort and their blessing is most certain. O that they more fully knew the consolation which is thus bestowed!—From "The Contrast between the Law and the Gospel," edited with additions by H. L. H.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

"OPEN THE WINDOW THERE."

Ah! why don't you proclaim it throughout the length and breadth of the land, you who know its importance.

Thank you, Mr. "TEMNO." for the text you have given me: "Open the window, there."

Observe, it was the first order given by the doctor, in the case of asphyxia related. Pray now, why don't these very same men of the faculty go forth lecturing on this most vital question? It would come with authority from them. They are well aware how multitudes are slowly consuming away for want of a due supply of that very same element which they well know how to turn to their own use, in a case of urgency. Others might preach until doomsday. Let them go forth and tell the world and prove to them the disastrous effects of living in closely confined apartments. Let them persuade the world to institute a thorough reform in the very construction of their houses, that they may provide for breathing as well as for eating. Do you ever hear a man of the medical profession criticise a family for neglecting to ventilate the house? But they ought to be invested with that privilege for the public's sake. There ought to be a standing sanitary commission, whose duty it shall be to inspect the construction of dwelling-houses, and not wait for a cholera invasion to force them to it. Talk of cleanliness indeed! Why, there is positively nothing to supply the place of pure air, and the doctors know it. How is it that they don't come forward and use the influence they have for the good of humanity? Ah, why? They can shout, "Open the windows, there," when a poor wretch is just expiring, but do they feel as they ought to do for those who inhabit the hovels? Are we too hard upon them? We have had temperance lectures and reform movements of all kinds; but lectures on ventilation, we have not heard of. Really, we could sometimes almost wish there was no such thing in existence as a house, such foul things are some of them. We know that there are books enough on the subject. But were temperance lecturers satisfied to know that there was a Bible which said we must not get drunk? No! they went out and gave it viva voce to the victims. They showed they cared for them. Nor do myriads know any thing whatever about the necessity of pure air! But few are really qualified to enter into the merits of the case. We believe in good health to the utmost. We cannot afford to be otherwise than perfectly sound, and we know it cannot be realized without good air. There is plenty of it. Oh! how plenty of it, yet men are dying before their time, (as it is said,) for the want of it; and that the doctors know full well.

But dwellings should be properly built. We have known of buildings where the kitchen (being much used,) was most of the time in a fog of one kind or another, offensive to both eye and nose. And it was very hard to get rid of it, from the arrangement of the rooms. There should be some great channel of escape just over head, to carry off all such vapors instantly. None of it should go down your throat. Whereas, some persons spend hours each day in the thickest of it. Here is a subject for you, ye doctors. But then, how could they get their living, poor men.

"Temno" in another article tells us how doctors are made. Have we not almost indicated how they may be unmade?—Circular.

NEURALGIA.

Neuralgia is always caused by bad blood; bad, because too poor or too much of it; too poor because there is not exercise and pure air enough to secure a good digestion, and the person is thin and pale; too much blood, because there is too much eating, and the bowels not acting every day, more is taken into the system than passes from it, and it is too full. The person may be fleshy enough, and does not appear sick at all. For a week, live on cold bread and butter, fruits, and cold water. Take an enema of a pint or more of tepid water daily, and spend the whole of daylight in active exercise in the open air, and the neuralgia will be gone in three cases out of four—the feet being kept warm, and the whole body most perfectly clean.

There are two kinds of neuralgia, sharp and dull; both caused by there being too much blood in or about the nerve. Perhaps arterial blood gives the sharp venous blood the dull or heavy pain. In either case, the pain is of all forms of intensity, from simple discomfort to an agony almost unendurable.

In the more fleshy parts, the pain is less severe, since the soft flesh yields before the distending nerve, distended by more and more blood getting into it, until it is occasionally three times its usual size; but when the nerve is in a tooth, or between two bones, or passes through a small hole in the bone, as in the face, or "facial neuralgia," or the Tic Doloureux of the French, the suffering is fearful, because there is no room for distension, and every instant the heart, by its beatings, plugs more blood into the invisible blood vessels of the nerves. But in any such case, open a blood vessel in the arm or elsewhere, until a person is on the very point of fainting, and the most excruciating neuralgia is gone in an instant, because the heart ceases to send on blood, and the blood already in the part, as naturally flows out of it, as water naturally flows out of an uncorked bottle on its side. Hence, a skin kept clean by judicious washings and frictions, helps, by its open pores, to unload the system of its surplus; the bowels kept free by fruits, berries, coarse bread and cold water, is another source of deliverance of excess. While these articles of food supply but a moderate amount of nourishment, in addition, active exercise still more rapidly works off the surplusage of the system, and the man is well, not as soon as by the bleeding, but by a process more effective, more certain, more enduring, and without harm or danger. Hence, there is no form of mere neuralgia, which is not safely and permanently cured in a reasonable time by strict personal cleanliness, by cooling, loosening food, as named, and by breathing a pure air in resting in our chambers at night, and in moderate labor out of doors during the hours of daylight.—Hall's Journal of Health.

CHOLERA.

DR. RANDOLPH'S REMEDY.

To the Editor of the N. O. Times:—Seeing a request in the columns of our valuable journal for information concerning the methods of disarming the dreadful scourge of its terrors, I hasten to avail myself of your philanthropy to give the people a formula, which I am sure is not to be equaled in its complete mastery of Asiatic cholera. I learned it from the lips of P. B. Randolph, the distinguished author and traveler, whose personal experience of its power, gained in Europe and Egypt in 1861–2, while traveling in those countries where isolated cases of genuine Asiatic cholera came under his notice, is indeed extreme. I am assured that no known remedy is so effective, and the doctor assures me that he has seen it tried in other forms of cholera and cholic with unvarying success; and I present the world, from him, the precise formula and its mode of exhibition, remarking, en passant, that the preparation ought to be kept in every family, as it is easily made: Best French brandy, one pint; cayenne pepper, one quarter of an ounce; sweet spirits of nitre, one ounce; fluid extract Cannabis, Indica, half an ounce. Keep in tight, glass-corked bottles.

When the patient is attacked, put him to bed instantly, give one tablespoonful of the mixture in a gill of sweetened warm water every half hour till the symptoms cease, which will be the case when the patient perspires freely. When he does, let him be towel-bathed in warm water, four quarts, in which a little soda ash has been dissolved. If the disease has reached the second or cramp stage, increase the dose and shorten the intervals one-half. Pound some ice, roll it in a towel and lay it along the spinal column (or backbone,) or what is infinitely better, lay a roll of cotton, steeped in chloroform, along the spine, instantly covering it with oiled silk to prevent the least evaporation. In three minutes, if this be properly done, the patient will experience very peculiar, and perhaps unpleasant sensations. Let this be kept on, ten minutes, and unless the symptoms abate repeat it, both on the back and across the abdomen.

Trusting that this will not be forgotten, but be preserved for the hour of need, in the same spirit in which I give it from the doctor's note-book, I am yours, S. H. A. F.

IRON BREAD PANS.—BEST BREAD.

The people are learning the value of the iron bread pans for making unleavened Graham cakes. Within the last six weeks F. W. Hurd & Co., have received orders for three hundred, and during the year they have sold eighteen hundred, and everywhere they give great satisfaction. We have received scores of testimonials from persons speaking enthusiastically of the excellence of the unleavened Graham biscuits. We have experimented for ten years in making unleavened bread, and we never have been able to make it so nice in any other way, or by any other process of baking, as by using these iron pans.

RECIPE.—Take good unbolted wheat meal, ground fine as for superfine flour, but having no part of the grain removed by bolting. Stir it with either cold or warm, but not hot water, making a rather thick batter. If you do not succeed well the first time, experiment by making the batter thinner or thicker until you get it just right. Have the bread pans hot, rub the cups with a little butter, then fill them level full with batter and set in a quick oven. The cakes will be done in from fifteen to thirty minutes according to the heat of the oven, and will be light and very nice, entirely wholesome to be eaten warm, though they are as good cold. They are made as good as new when several days old, by being dipped in cold water, and placed in a hot oven for a few minutes. If one wishes to have them extra nice and tender, try them wet with milk instead of water. Very excellent cakes may be made in the same way with superfine wheat flour or corn meal.

Now in what way can health reformers better promote our good cause than by introducing their neighbors and friends to the unleavened bread, and making them practically acquainted with its superiority in excellence, healthfulness and economy, to the common superfine fermented bread?—Laws of Life.

[illegible], I WILL UPHOLD THEE.

I.

The Almighty ever present,
He whose eyes are over all,
The smallest work of his creation,
E'en the little sparrow's fall;
Paints the petals of the flowers,
And with fragrance fills their cup,
Canst thou doubt his wings of mercy
Shall not ever bear thee up?

II.

He who speaketh to the ocean,
Here shall thy proud waves be stayed,
Guides the planets in their motion,
All in light for us arrayed;
Daily all our wants supplying,
Fire and water, light and air,
Can we doubt in all our wanderings,
He's not present everywhere?

III.

He who guides the lightning's flashes,
In his thunder speaks to all;
Daily thou mayst hear his whisperings,
In a voice so still and small;
And his ear is ever open
To the humble when they cry,
And in trouble he is near them,
Even hears the faintest sigh.

IV.

After night he giveth daylight,
After clouds the welcome sun,
Clothes the valleys and the mountains,
Guides the rivers where to run.
He who decks the blooming lily,
Will he not much more clothe thee?
He who feeds the hungry ravens,
All thy wants his eye can see.

V.

Let his promises, then, daily
Be thy comfort, child of God;
Trust him ever, trust him hourly,
E'en while suffering from his rod.
He has said, all power is given
Him in heaven, and on earth;
All shall work for good together,
To the child of heavenly birth.

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

At the time I first arranged our Bible chronology, I had no knowledge of Ptolemy's so called "famous astronomical era"; and thinking that the word of God was the highest authority to which we can appeal, I felt satisfied with the chronology given by those sacred authors. Hence, my chronology, in its original form, was only a table of Bible dates written out for convenience, or that we might see at one view that chronology as given in the book of God. But when I sent it to Bro. Bliss, he refused to publish it, because it conflicted with Ptolemy's Canon; and to satisfy me of its incorrectness, he sent me his "Analysis of Sacred Chronology," up to which time I had no knowledge of the fact that it was claimed that our chronology was established by astronomy. And when I called to mind that our chronology did not claim for its authority the conflicting opinions of men, but that word of God which he has "magnified . . above all" his "name," I saw that it could not admit of an error or be so altered as to harmonize with Ptolemy's Canon; and as two bodies cannot occupy the same space at one and the same time, so it was impossible that both the Bible Chronology and that of Ptolemy's Canon could occupy the place they claimed in history. And when I thus saw that either my Bible, the book I loved, was thus proven to be incorrect, or Ptolemy's "famous astronomical era," the foundation on which the chronology of all the world is raised, was erroneous, I felt the deepest anxiety to know the truth of the matter; hence made all of those astronomical calculations which it claims as the authority or proof of its correctness. But not having at that time seen Ptolemy's description of the eclipses, I supposed that the smallness of the quantity eclipsed was an evidence that the eclipses claimed to establish the Canon were not the same alluded to by Ptolemy; therefore, when I discovered, as mentioned on page 34 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," that no astronomical tables can make them, I thought it proved that they were not the eclipses alluded to by Ptolemy, hence looked out for others. But since Prof. Hudson has favored us with the express word of Ptolemy, both as to the time and quantity eclipsed, we see that those I have offered could not be the eclipses alluded to by him; hence it becomes a seeker for truth to look again. We have clearly proven that, if Ptolemy was not mistaken as to the quantity eclipsed, in the one which he claims to have "carefully observed" himself, in A. D. 136, there could have been no eclipse March 8th, B. C. 720. But whether there was an eclipse there, or not, I find that it in no way interferes with our Bible chronology; therefore, leaving this, we must examine those that do.

Prof. Hudson having been kind enough to give us in our own mother tongue the express words of Ptolemy, as to those eclipses which he both saw himself, and computed with his improved astronomical instruments, has enabled us to prove, almost to absolute certainty, the strict correctness of my tables, which enables me at last to have great confidence in the eclipses they make.

Since Prof. Hudson has brought to light what Ptolemy has said concerning those eclipses, I find that his description of those which occurred during the reign of Cambyses and Darius are, both as to time and quantity, near what my tables make; which brings Ptolemy's Canon up again as a subject of controversy; and, resolving to know the truth of the matter, I have spent several months in searching books; and, as the result of my investigation, have learned, to my great astonishment and surprise, that Ptolemy had no Canon,—that we have been all the time fighting against not a real, but only an apparent difficulty. That which appeared as a rugged mountain, hard to remove, is found to be but as a bank of fog, all dispelled by the light of truth.

In proof that Ptolemy had no Canon, or that the catalogue of kings, with the number of years each reigned, called his Canon, was unknown to him, the Duke of Manchester has well asked, "If the Canon was in existence in the time of Clement of Alexandria, could he have been ignorant of it? or how could he have neglected it so entirely as, by his Stromata, was evidently the case"? "According to Theon, Ptolemy was the author of the second part of the Canon, from the date of Alexander to the last year of Antonius," which portion of the Canon is proven to be about correct.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "Ptolemy himself probably constructed the skeleton of the Astronomical Canon; but who filled up the intermediate reigns between the recorded eclipses?" "I think," he continues, "I have shown some grounds for suspecting that the part before the death of Alexander was filled up by some Christian chronologers."—Times of Daniel, p. 225.

Knowing nothing of that confused mass of conflicting authors from which the so called Ptolemy's Canon had been selected, when I first saw the list of kings with their respective number of years assigned to each, it had the appearance of truth; insomuch as it presented to my mind a serious difficulty in the way of the true Bible chronology. But he who has examined the confused and conflicting authorities from which it has been selected, regards it as nothing more than an exhibition of the peculiar views of those who arranged it, without any thing certain as to its correctness. Indeed, there is such a variety as to the number of years different kings are said to have reigned, one may select that number that best suits the chronology he may prefer. Therefore, as ignorant as I was as to the source of authority from which the received chronology of our world is selected, I find that, in going to the Bible, I went to the proper and the only real source of authority from which any thing reliable, as to a correct chronology, can be obtained.

But though the number of years during which kings are said to have reigned is of little worth; astronomy is reliable, for eclipses with correct tables may be calculated with great precision; and I have mentioned that my tables make the eclipses in the reign of Cambyses and Darius very near the record as given by Ptolemy; hence they fix the time of the reign of these two kings with that clear appearance of truth, that cannot be set aside with the light we have on the subject. And since truth unmixed with error should be sought by every christian, we have been searching history to find the truth; and, if we may be enabled to distinguish a real gem from the rubbish among which it is found, that which to me, at least, has the clearest appearance of real reliable authority, is the "remarkable document of Philo." It reads thus:—"According to the chronicle of our seniors, they have left us a writing after this manner: Joshua, . . . in the first year of Cyrus, went up to Jerusalem. In the second year he laid the foundation of the temple; . . . but the building was impeded ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF DARIUS HYSTASPES; nor could he go up to Cyrus, who was occupied in war with Tomyris; and when Cyrus was slain, after him reigned Assuerus Artaxerxes Priscus."—Times of Daniel, p. 84.

It is said that "this curious and valuable document . . . is perhaps the most ancient record in existence, except the sacred books, relating to this point of Jewish history; and as such is entitled to greater weight than any other human authority we have upon the subject."—Times of Daniel, p. 84.

As darkness is dispelled by the rising sun, so this truth removes the great difficulty in which we have been so much involved, in attempting to reconcile profane history with the true Bible chronology.

When we observed that God's sacred writers place the reign of Darius either cotemporaneous with (Dan. 6: 28), or before Cyrus (Dan. 1: 21 and 6: 1), we have been greatly perplexed to find that Ptolemy's Canon placed the beginning of the reign "of the first Darius" eight years after the death of Cyrus. But since the truth of the matter is brought to light by this most valuable document of Philo, the difficulty is removed; insomuch, we can now see a remarkable harmony existing between sacred and profane chronology. We are now enabled to see the cause of the great confusion into which writers on chronology have been involved; and the difficulty seems to have originated from a slight error on the part of Herodotus, who is called the "father of history"; which error was that of attributing things to the son, which were accomplished by the father; thus causing many to blend "Darius, the son of Hystaspes," with his father, "Darius Hystaspes"; though Herodotus himself always calls him by the proper name, that is, "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but when we discriminate between the father and son, the difficulty is removed, and ancient history reconciled with the Bible. For example, Daniel informs us that when Belshazzar was slain, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5: 31); and "in the oriental Chronical, Darius Hystaspes is called Darius the Median"; and "both on his tomb, and on the Dorics, Darius Hystaspes has the Median robe."—Times of Daniel, p. 85.

From among the many ways in which the Duke of Manchester has proven that "Darius the Median" was "Darias Hystaspes," we may offer two:—

1. "According to Herodotus, Strabo and Polyenus, Darius Hystaspes was the first who levied a tax, and this seems in Scripture to be attributed to Darius the Median"; thus "It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom one hundred and twenty princes, and over these three presidents, of whom Daniel was the first; that the princes might give account to them, and the king should have no damage."—Dan. 6: 2.

2. "The Artaxerxes who preceded the Darius, in whose reign the temple was completed, was in the custom of receiving taxes (Ezra 4: 13); therefore, the Darius who succeeded him was not Darius Hystaspes."—Times of Daniel, p. 82.

To the above, I might add another proof: "Pliny says that Susa was built by Darius Hystaspes": and if so, the time at which Daniel was in Shushan, or Susa (Dan. 8: 2), could not have been earlier than the beginning of his reign. The two kings are distinguished the one from the other in the Bible, thus: "Darius the Median" (Dan. 5: 31), and "Darius king of Persia" (Ezra 4: 24.) They are distinguished in history thus: "the first Darius," or "Darius Hystaspes," and "Darius Songimanus," or "Darius the son of Hystaspes."

Ptolemy points out the particular king in whose reign the eclipses occurred, thus: "Darius the first"; and the first Darius mentioned in the Bible was the one alluded to by Daniel. And since the eclipse which occurred "in the seventh year of Cambyses" is by Ptolemy located in the one hundred and twenty-fifth year of Nabonassar," we learn that it occurred in the reign of the first Cambyses; that is, the father, instead of the son of Cyrus.

The following table will exhibit the truth of the matter, as nearly correct as we can arrange it with the evidence gathered from history.

AM I A CHRISTIAN?

We have rarely seen the traits of a true christian more fully set forth than in the following article by John Fletcher. Let all read it with care.—ED.

1. Do I feel any pride; or am I partaker of the meek and lowly mind that was in Jesus? Am I dead to all desire of praise? If any despise me, do I like them worse for it? Or, if they love and approve, do I love them more on that account? Am I willing to be accounted useless, and of no consequence,—glad to be made of no reputation? Do humiliations give me real pleasure, and is it the language of my heart,

> Make me little and unknown,
> Loved and prized by God alone?

2. Does God bear witness in my heart that it is purified? that in all things I please him?

3. Is the life I live "by the faith of the Son of God"; so that Christ dwelleth in me? Is Christ the life of all my affections and designs, as my soul is the life of my body? Is my eye single and my soul full of light,—all eye within and without; always watchful?

4. Have I always the presence of God? Does no cloud come between God and the eye of my faith? Can I "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks"?

5. Am I saved from the fear of man? Do I speak plainly to all, neither fearing their frowns, nor seeking their favors? Have I no shame of religion; and am I always ready to confess Christ, to suffer with his people, and to die for his sake?

6. Do I deny myself at all times, and take up my cross as the Spirit of God leads me? Do I embrace the cross of every sort, being willing to give up my ease and convenience to oblige others; or do I expect them to conform to my hours and customs? Does the cross sit light upon me, and am I willing to suffer all the will of God? Can I trample on pleasure and pain? Have I

> "A soul inured to pain,
> To hardship, grief, and loss,
> Bold to take up, firm to sustain,
> The consecrated cross?"

7. Are my bodily senses, and outward things, all sanctified to me? Do I not seek my own things to please myself? Do I seek grace more for God's honor than my own profit, preferring the glory of God to all in earth or heaven, the giver to the gift?

8. Am I "poor in spirit"? Do I "take pleasure in infirmities, necessities, distresses, reproaches"; so that out of weakness, want, and danger, I may cast myself on the Lord? Have I no false shame in approaching God? Do I seek to be saved, as a poor sinner, by grace alone?

9. Do I not "lean to my own understanding"? Am I ready to give up the point, when contradicted, unless conscience forbid? Am I easy to be persuaded? Do I esteem every one better than myself? Am I as willing to be a cypher as to be useful? and does my zeal burn bright notwithstanding this willingness to be nothing?

10. Have I no false wisdom, goodness, strength; as if the grace I feel were my own? Do I never take that glory to myself which belongs to Christ? Do I feel my want of Christ as much as ever, to be my all? and do I draw near to God, as poor and needy, only presenting before him his well-beloved Son? Can I say,

> "Every moment, Lord, I need
> The merit of thy death?
> I shall hang upon my God,
> Till I thy perfect glory see,
> Till the sprinkling of thy blood
> Shall speak me up to thee?"

Do I find joy in being thus nothing, empty, undeserving, giving all the glory to Christ? Or do I wish that grace made me something, instead of God being all?

11. Have I meekness? Does it bear rule over all my tempers, affections, and desires; so that my hopes, fears, joys, zeal, love, and hatred, are duly balanced? Do I feel no disturbance from others, and do I desire to give none? If any offend me, do I still love them, and make it an occasion to pray for them? If condemned by the world, do I entreat?—if condemned by the godly, am I one in whose mouth there is no reproof; replying only as conscience, and not as impatient nature dictates? If in the wrong, do I confess it? If in the right, do I submit, being content to do well, and suffer for it? It is the sin of superiors to be overbearing, of inferiors to be stubborn; if, then, I am a servant, do I yield not only to the gentle, but to the froward, committing my cause in silence to God; or, if a master, do I "show all long-suffering?" The Lord of all was "as he that serveth." If I am the greatest, do I make myself least, "and the servant of all?" if a teacher am I lowly, meek and patient, not conceited, self-willed, nor dogmatic? Am I ready to give up the claims of respect due to age, station, parent, master, etc., or do I rigidly exact those demands?

12. Do I possess resignation; am I content with whatever is, or may be; seeing that God, the Author of all events, does, and will do, all for my good? Do I desire nothing but God, willing to part with all, if the Lord manifests his will for my so doing? Do I "know how to abound," and yet not gratify unnecessary wants; but being content with things needful, do I faithfully and freely dispose of all the rest for the help of others? Do I know how to suffer need? Is my confidence unshaken while I feel the distress of poverty, and have the prospect of future want, while, humanly speaking, strangling were better than life? And, in these circumstances, do I pity those who, having plenty, waste it in excess, instead of helping me?

13. Am I just; doing in all things as I would others should do unto me? Do I render homage to those above me, not presuming on their lenity and condescension? As a superior, do I exercise no undue authority, taking no advantage of the timidity, respect or necessity of any man? Do I consider the great obligation superiority lays me under of being lowly and kind, and of setting a good example?

14. Am I temperate, using the world, and not abusing it? Do I receive outward things in the order of God, making earth a scale to heaven? Is the satisfaction I take in the creation consistent with my being dead to all below, and a means of leading me more to God? Is the turn of my mind and temper in due subjection, not leading me to any extreme, either of too much silence, or of too much talkativeness, of reserve or freedom?

15. Am I courteous, not severe? Suiting myself to all with sweetness? Striving to give no one pain, but to gain and win all for their good?

16. Am I vigilant; redeeming time, taking every opportunity of doing good; or do I spare myself, being careless about the souls and bodies to which I might do good? Can I do no more than I do? Do I perform the most servile offices, such as require labor and humiliation, with cheerfulness? Is my conversation always seasoned with salt, at every time administering some kind of favor to those I am with?

17. Do I "love God with all my heart?" Do I constantly present myself, my time, substance, talents, and all that I have, a living sacrifice? Is every thought brought into subjection to Christ? Do I like or dislike only such things as are pleasing or displeasing to God?

18. Do I love God with all my strength, and are my spiritual faculties always vigorous? Do I give way to no sinful languor? Am I always on the watch? Do not business, worldly care, and conversation damp my fervor and zeal for God?

19. Do I love my neighbor as myself; every man for Christ's sake, and honor all men as the image of God? Do I think no evil, listen to no groundless surmises, nor judge from appearances? Can I bridle my tongue, never speaking of the faults of another, but with a view to do good; and when I am obliged to do it, have I the testimony that I sin not? Have I that love which hopeth, believeth, and endureth all things?

20. How am I in my sleep? If Satan presents an evil imagination, does my will immediately resist, or give way to it?

21. Do I bear the infirmities of age or sickness, without seeking to repair the decays of nature by strong liquors; or do I make Christ my sole support, casting the burden of a feeble body into the arms of his mercy?

Jesus, Lord of all, grant thy purest gifts to every waiting disciple. Enlighten us with the knowledge of thy will, and show us "the mark of the prize of our high calling." Let us die to all thou art not; and seek thee with our whole heart, till we enjoy the fullness of the purchased possession.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article, at the closing remarks, we began to examine the nature of the punishment of the wicked; and were examining the word destruction, as expressed by our dear Redeemer, in Matt. 7: 13, where the contrast is brought to view between the word destruction and the word life. If it be contended that the word life means eternal happiness, and that the word destruction means eternal, conscious misery, then, of course, the broad road leads to the eternal preservation of life in misery or torment; and, in this case, the narrow way and broad road both lead to eternal life. What an absurd theory is this! It is entirely at war with the holy book of God, which plainly declares, that "the wages of sin is death," without any qualification of the word whatever.

We will now pass to another passage, where the word destruction is made use of to denote how God can punish the wicked:—Matt. 10: 28. Here we are instructed by the great Teacher, that we must "fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." We would wish to ask the important question, how much of the man would be left, if soul and body were destroyed in hell? It says, in plain words, "destroy both." They will be destroyed alike, and in the same place; so that, if the meaning is to preserve alive in misery, then, of course, the body is preserved alive in order to be tormented with the soul. This would not be "the wages of sin," which "is death"; but the wages of sin which would be preservation of life in misery. If God should destroy both soul and body in hell, I think they would fare very much as the prophet Malachi informs us, when he says:—"All the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. This would cause them to "be as though they had not been."

St. Paul tells us, in 1 Cor. 3: 17, that "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." But supposing we say, "him shall God preserve" alive, and torment him to all eternity; would this be true?

Please turn to Luke 9: 25, where the Savior calls the losing of the soul, the losing of "himself;" or, being "cast away." See also Matt. 5: 29, where our Savior speaks of the whole body being cast into hell, which proves the destruction of the whole man, soul and body. In Ezek. 18: 4, we read "the soul that sinneth it shall die," which could not mean that it should live in torment to all eternity. Please read and examine closely, the whole of the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, and see how plain it shows that the punishment of the wicked is second and eternal death of the whole man.

Can you believe, dear reader, in the heathen dogma that the soul is immortal, and the doctrine of endless torment, when all the Scripture plainly shows that "the wages of sin is death," or everlasting destruction of the whole man?

We will now notice another passage of Scripture:—"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." This does not tell us what kind of punishment it will be; only that it will be everlasting. Now, according to good Greek scholars, the word kolasin, in Greek, from which the word punishment is taken, means nothing more nor less than "cutting off," and is the opposite element of eternal life, which is eternal death, or cutting off from eternal life, which is given to the righteous.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Many people will tell you that it is presumptious to observe the "signs of the times," and that by so doing we are taking upon ourselves the character of a prophet. But we find a very different verdict pronounced in Scripture. The Scribes and Pharisees were prophets, yet our Lord expressly condemns them, not for observing, but for neglecting the "Signs of the Times." If the Pharisees were condemned for overlooking those signs, so may we be condemned; and never before was there a moment in which such signs were offered for contemplation. Never before were they so ominous of judgment to come.

It is indeed a fact well deserving of our attention, that prophecy seems to be passing into common life. Those ancient prophecies have been for two thousand years the study or the wonder of mankind. Their grandeur and their gloom dwelt upon the mind with the effect of some solemn tale, or some magnificent painting. Men admired, and wondered, but they did not tremble. The picture and the story were not for them, but for future generations. But now that time is past. These ancient oracles are no longer a picture, or a tale; they have passed into the sphere of our daily history; the gloom hangs over our own heads—the ground quakes under our own feet; "the things that are coming upon the earth, are coming upon ourselves. We ourselves are the future generation to whom we presumptuously consigned the terrors of God's word." We see in common life the wonders and the signs which in former ages would have been looked upon as supernatural. We see all these beginning to come to pass, and we may soon see them in their full force. "That men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming on the earth," every one can learn, who takes any public journal. It is sometimes curious to observe the language of the public journals. They resemble a kind of running commentary upon the prophetic books of Scripture. The "signs of the last times" are before our eyes, and we know not how short a time may bring them to maturity.

Among others, one of the most significant "signs of the times" is the political condition of the world at large, and especially of the prophetic earth. Such a position of things was never before witnessed in any age or under any circumstance. The two greatest convulsions the world has ever felt were those of the barbaric invasions of the Roman Empire and of the French revolution. It will be admitted that the world has never been so shaken at any time as by those two convulsions, yet the barbaric invasion of the Roman Empire was nothing more than a coarse outbreak of physical fury. It had no depth of design, no comprehensive scheme, no great leader, no definite object. An invasion of wolves and bears would have had as good a claim to be called a moral revolution as the invasion of the Goths and Vandals. Again, the French revolution, though more intelligent than the barbaric invasions, was limited and undeveloped. It was the fury of a slave broken loose, avenging himself, but without a plan or specific object. It is far different at present. We are now arrived at the full development of the French revolution, and are nearing a general "reign of terror." A general tendency to licentiousness pervades all classes of society. (We take the word licentiousness, in its legitimate, literal sense, that is the contempt of all just restraint.) This determination to be free has sunk into the hearts of all nations. But what a freedom! A freedom from every law, both human and divine. A communism of property; a subversion of government; an overthrow of all the institutions of society, and a levelling of all ranks. Such is the secret wish of millions. You will find it everywhere, the legitimate offspring of the reign of terror.—Cal. Times of Restitution.

THE CONTRAST BETWEEN THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

THE PLACE AND MANNER OF WORSHIP.

We may notice a very striking distinction between the place and manner of worship in the two dispensations.

The Jewish dispensation was connected with the earth and the carnal senses. It was typical and temporary. The temple was the earthly dwelling place of God (1 Kings 18: 27). It was to be "an house of prayer for all nations." It "must be exceeding magnifical of fame and glory throughout all nations" (1 Chron. 22: 5). In no other place could the Jewish worship be performed. There were many synagogues or meeting places for instruction and reading of the Scriptures; but there was only one temple, there could be no other. The sacrifices must all be offered there; and when in the land of captivity, prayer was to be made toward that house (2 Chron. 6: 38), as Daniel prayed, "the windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem" (Dan. 6: 10). And three times a year must all the sons of Israel gather and appear before the Lord in Jerusalem (Ex. 13: 17). The dispute between the Jews and the Samaritans was partly about this. "Our fathers worshiped in this mountain; and ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship," said the woman of Samaria at the well. The answer of Jesus intimates the change that has since occurred. "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. . . . But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4: 21–24). And, to effectually dissipate any disposition to cling to that ancient place of adoration, it was decreed that of that glorious temple "not one stone" should be "left upon another" that should not be "thrown down." While, for the comfort of those who had here no local temple, it was said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18: 20). One greater than the temple hallows every place where true worshipers assemble. There is now no city or building invested with any special sanctity, as a temple of the Most High. Rome or London, St. Peter's, St. Paul's, or an upper room like those where saint Paul and saint Peter met the true disciples (Acts 1: 13; 20: 8), all stand upon the same level. The grand questions about worship now are not when? and where? but whom? and how? In garrets, prisons, or palaces, we still find the heavenly Father near, and the Savior as an abiding presence with his little flock.

The ancient temple of Solomon was builded of stones prepared and fitted in the mountain by prescribed rules, and brought together and erected without the sound of axes or hammers. But when done it was only wood and stone and gold and silver and brass. The church is "God's building." It is built upon a rock. As a wise master builder Paul says, "I have laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon" (1 Cor. 3: 10). To the church thus wisely builded of precious materials it is said, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" "If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." "Ye also, as lively [Gr. living] stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Christ Jesus" (1 Pet. 1: 5). "This house of God" "is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15). Of this house we read that it is "built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. 2: 20–22).

None but hewn and prepared stones and timbers could enter the ancient temple. So none but true christians, sanctified and set apart for the service of God, should be builded into the house of God. A mere heap of "wood, hay, and stubble" would not have been a temple; and so in the church each builder who builds wood, hay, or stubble in the Lord's building will lose his labor in the burning, trying day that shall come (1 Cor. 3: 12–15). At the time that the temple of Solomon was dedicated, "when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house" (2 Chron. 7: 1, 2). But when the new temple was consecrated as the "habitation of God through the Spirit," when, like stones well fitted, "they were all with one accord in one place, there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them parted flames like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 1–4). And again, when the Gentiles first received the gospel, the apostle sa s, "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning" (Acts 11: 15). This was "the baptism of the Holy Ghost" which occurred as Jesus promised, at his ascension, "not many days hence" (Acts 1: 5). This, first upon the Jewish and then upon the Gentile portion of the church, was the one Spirit by which we are "all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, and have all been made to drink into one Spirit" (1 Cor. 12: 13) No repetition of this baptism is promised or recorded. It was the first visible attestation of the church as the temple of God, like the smoke that filled the temple of Solomon, or like the descending dove which manifested Christ to Israel on the banks of Jordan (John 1: 33). The Holy Ghost now dwells with and abides in the church, an invisible and silent power; they are "filled with the Spirit," "led by the Spirit," and it is sent forth into their hearts, crying Abba, Father. But all this is very different from that visible baptism in the Holy Ghost of which Peter spake at Pentecost, when he declared that Christ "having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this which ye now SEE and HEAR" (Acts 2: 33). This Spirit pervades the whole temple and dwells in every "living stone"; and where two or three are met in the name of Jesus, their comfort and their blessing is most certain. O that they more fully knew the consolation which is thus bestowed!—From "The Contrast between the Law and the Gospel," edited with additions by H. L. H.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

"OPEN THE WINDOW THERE."

Ah! why don't you proclaim it throughout the length and breadth of the land, you who know its importance.

Thank you, Mr. "TEMNO." for the text you have given me: "Open the window, there." Observe, it was the first order given by the doctor, in the case of asphyxia related. Pray now, why don't these very same men of the faculty go forth lecturing on this most vital question? It would come with authority from them. They are well aware how multitudes are slowly consuming away for want of a due supply of that very same element which they well know how to turn to their own use, in a case of urgency. Others might preach until doomsday. Let them go forth and tell the world and prove to them the disastrous effects of living in closely confined apartments. Let them persuade the world to institute a thorough reform in the very construction of their houses, that they may provide for breathing as well as for eating. Do you ever hear a man of the medical profession criticise a family for neglecting to ventilate the house? But they ought to be invested with that privilege for the public's sake. There ought to be a standing sanitary commission, whose duty it shall be to inspect the construction of dwelling-houses, and not wait for a cholera invasion to force them to it. Talk of cleanliness indeed! Why, there is positively nothing to supply the place of pure air, and the doctors know it. How is it that they don't come forward and use the influence they have for the good of humanity? Ah, why? They can shout, "Open the windows, there," when a poor wretch is just expiring, but do they feel as they ought to do for those who inhabit the hovels? Are we too hard upon them? We have had temperance lectures and reform movements of all kinds; but lectures on ventilation, we have not heard of. Really, we could sometimes almost wish there was no such thing in existence as a house, such foul things are some of them. We know that there are books enough on the subject. But were temperance lecturers satisfied to know that there was a Bible which said we must not get drunk? No! they went out and gave it viva voce to the victims. They showed they cared for them. Nor do myriads know any thing whatever about the necessity of pure air! But few are really qualified to enter into the merits of the case. We believe in good health to the utmost. We cannot afford to be otherwise than perfectly sound, and we know it cannot be realized without good air. There is plenty of it. Oh! how plenty of it, yet men are dying before their time, (as it is said,) for the want of it; and that the doctors know full well.

But dwellings should be properly built. We have known of buildings where the kitchen (being much used,) was most of the time in a fog of one kind or another, offensive to both eye and nose. And it was very hard to get rid of it, from the arrangement of the rooms. There should be some great channel of escape just over head, to carry off all such vapors instantly. None of it should go down your throat. Whereas, some persons spend hours each day in the thickest of it. Here is a subject for you, ye doctors. But then, how could they get their living, poor men.

"Temno" in another article tells us how doctors are made. Have we not almost indicated how they may be unmade?—Circular.

NEURALGIA.

Neuralgia is always caused by bad blood; bad, because too poor or too much of it; too poor because there is not exercise and pure air enough to secure a good digestion, and the person is thin and pale; too much blood, because there is too much eating, and the bowels not acting every day, more is taken into the system than passes from it, and it is too full. The person may be fleshy enough, and does not appear sick at all. For a week, live on cold bread and butter, fruits, and cold water. Take an enema of a pint or more of tepid water daily, and spend the whole of daylight in active exercise in the open air, and the neuralgia will be gone in three cases out of four—the feet being kept warm, and the whole body most perfectly clean.

There are two kinds of neuralgia, sharp and dull; both caused by there being too much blood in or about the nerve. Perhaps arterial blood gives the sharp venous blood the dull or heavy pain. In either case, the pain is of all forms of intensity, from simple discomfort to an agony almost unendurable. In the more fleshy parts, the pain is less severe, since the soft flesh yields before the distending nerve, distended by more and more blood getting into it, until it is occasionally three times its usual size; but when the nerve is in a tooth, or between two bones, or passes through a small hole in the bone, as in the face, or 'facial neuralgia,' or the Tic Doloureux of the French, the suffering is fearful, because there is no room for distension, and every instant the heart, by its beatings, plugs more blood into the invisible blood vessels of the nerves. But in any such case, open a blood vessel in the arm or elsewhere, until a person is on the very point of fainting, and the most excruciating neuralgia is gone in an instant, because the heart ceases to send on blood, and the blood already in the part, as naturally flows out of it, as water naturally flows out of an uncorked bottle on its side. Hence, a skin kept clean by judicious washings and frictions, helps, by its open pores, to unload the system of its surplus; the bowels kept free by fruits, berries, coarse bread and cold water, is another source of deliverance of excess. While these articles of food supply but a moderate amount of nourishment, in addition, active exercise still more rapidly works off the surplusage of the system, and the man is well, not as soon as by the bleeding, but by a process more effective, more certain, more enduring, and without harm or danger. Hence, there is no form of mere neuralgia, which is not safely and permanently cured in a reasonable time by strict personal cleanliness, by cooling, loosening food, as named, and by breathing a pure air in resting in our chambers at night, and in moderate labor out of doors during the hours of daylight.—Hall's Journal of Health.

CHOLERA.

DR. RANDOLPH'S REMEDY.

To the Editor of the N. O. Times:—Seeing a request in the columns of our valuable journal for information concerning the methods of disarming the dreadful scourge of its terrors, I hasten to avail myself of your philanthropy to give the people a formula, which I am sure is not to be equaled in its complete mastery of Asiatic cholera. I learned it from the lips of P. B. Randolph, the distinguished author and traveler, whose personal experience of its power, gained in Europe and Egypt in 1861–2, while traveling in those countries where isolated cases of genuine Asiatic cholera came under his notice, is indeed extreme. I am assured that no known remedy is so effective, and the doctor assures me that he has seen it tried in other forms of cholera and cholic with unvarying success; and I present the world, from him, the precise formula and its mode of exhibition, remarking, en passant, that the preparation ought to be kept in every family, as it is easily made: Best French brandy, one pint; cayenne pepper, one quarter of an ounce; sweet spirits of nitre, one ounce; fluid extract Cannabis, Indica, half an ounce. Keep in tight, glass-corked bottles.

When the patient is attacked, put him to bed instantly, give one tablespoonful of the mixture in a gill of sweetened warm water every half hour till the symptoms cease, which will be the case when the patient perspires freely. When he does, let him be towel-bathed in warm water, four quarts, in which a little soda ash has been dissolved. If the disease has reached the second or cramp stage, increase the dose and shorten the intervals one-half. Pound some ice, roll it in a towel and lay it along the spinal column (or backbone,) or what is infinitely better, lay a roll of cotton, steeped in chloroform, along the spine, instantly covering it with oiled silk to prevent the least evaporation. In three minutes, if this be properly done, the patient will experience very peculiar, and perhaps unpleasant sensations. Let this be kept on, ten minutes, and unless the symptoms abate repeat it, both on the back and across the abdomen.

Trusting that this will not be forgotten, but be preserved for the hour of need, in the same spirit in which I give it from the doctor's note-book, I am yours, S. H. A. F.

IRON BREAD PANS.—BEST BREAD.

The people are learning the value of the iron bread pans for making unleavened Graham cakes. Within the last six weeks F. W. Hurd & Co., have received orders for three hundred, and during the year they have sold eighteen hundred, and everywhere they give great satisfaction. We have received scores of testimonials from persons speaking enthusiastically of the excellence of the unleavened Graham biscuits. We have experimented for ten years in making unleavened bread, and we never have been able to make it so nice in any other way, or by any other process of baking, as by using these iron pans.

RECIPE.—Take good unbolted wheat meal, ground fine as for superfine flour, but having no part of the grain removed by bolting. Stir it with either cold or warm, but not hot water, making a rather thick batter. If you do not succeed well the first time, experiment by making the batter thinner or thicker until you get it just right. Have the bread pans hot, rub the cups with a little butter, then fill them level full with batter and set in a quick oven. The cakes will be done in from fifteen to thirty minutes according to the heat of the oven, and will be light and very nice, entirely wholesome to be eaten warm, though they are as good cold. They are made as good as new when several days old, by being dipped in cold water, and placed in a hot oven for a few minutes. If one wishes to have them extra nice and tender, try them wet with milk instead of water. Very excellent cakes may be made in the same way with superfine wheat flour or corn meal.

Now in what way can health reformers better promote our good cause than by introducing their neighbors and friends to the unleavened bread, and making them practically acquainted with its superiority in excellence, healthfulness and economy, to the common superfine fermented bread?—Laws of Life.

THE HOME OF THE BLEST.

Far, far beyond these skies of earth,
Lo, fairer skies appear,
Bright skies that know no shade of night,
There smiles the perennial year.

Oh, balmy are those skies afar,
And soft the airs that blow;
Low, clear and sweet the music, where
Pellucid waters flow.

Unfading flowers are blooming there,
That fear no withering blight;
In amaranthine beauty fair,
They smile in Eden light.

And sweetest notes from seraph lyres,
By zephyrs borne along,
Kindle into ecstatic fires
The vast, immortal throng.

Oh! Lord divine, where sorrows cease,
All hail thy golden dawn!
Oh! usher in, thou "Prince of Peace,"
The resurrection morn.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER THREE.

The second point is, what is all the world referred to? The word "world," of frequent occurrence in King James' version, is rendered from three or more different words in the original, viz., aion, kosmos, oikoumenee; the last mentioned word is the one rendered world in the 14th verse of this chapter. We find the same word in the first verse of the second chapter of Luke, where it undoubtedly refers to the Roman Empire. "It came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world (oikoumenee) should be taxed." From this it is quite evident that the scriptural import of the term may be more limited in its application than classic authors would allow.

The classical definition of oikoumenee is, all the habitable world; but the decree of Cæsar Augustus did not extend to all the habitable portions of the earth's surface; but only to that portion over which the Roman government exercised a sovereign authority. All the world, in this instance, seems to refer to the civilized world, or that portion of it under the influence of political enlightenment.—Adopting this principle, and applying it to our own time, we should say the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached throughout the civilized world, for a witness to the nations, and then shall the end come. If this is a correct exposition of the text, then the work has been most faithfully accomplished within the last half century.

There have been men raised up within the last fifty years who have given their attention to the subject of the signs of the times, and felt called upon to give the note of warning to the world, that another king, one Jesus, is about to take to himself his great power, and reign. Enlightened Europe has been startled with the announcement,—"Behold, He cometh with clouds." The inhabitants of cold Siberia have long echoed the glorious proclamation. Many of the missionaries laboring among the oriental nations of Asia, are believing in and proclaiming the speedy personal reign of Christ; while Afric's sons have come bending submissively to the Prince of Peace, and waiting stand to give him welcome. The United States and British Provinces have become familiar with this movement, and may we not say this gospel of the kingdom is at this very time being preached in all the world for a witness? and if so, shall we not look for the end? So sure as Christ predicted it, this is God's last work of mercy.

Having given in course an exposition of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, from the first to the fourteenth verse, we have come to the second division of this prophecy.

We have before said that the second division of this prophecy is complex, or mixed, and to discover the real harmony of the discourse, we shall be under the necessity of bringing in some points noticed by Luke in recording the same subject, which seem to have been omitted by Matthew.

The fifteenth verse reads,—"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)." Now I claim that here is where the complexity of this subject exists. It is by saying that the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew is the same in subject matter with the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, which reads,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." It will be observed that the twenty-first verse of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, reads like the sixteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew. And this is why some have supposed that the fifteenth verse in Matthew, and the twentieth verse in Luke are the same.

But it is evident that the army mentioned in the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, cannot be the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, and quoted by the Savior in the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, for the following reasons:—

1. If the eagles in the Roman army, being objects of worship, constituted the abomination of desolation, then they were in Jerusalem already; for at that very hour Jerusalem was garrisoned with Roman soldiers, who undoubtedly bore with them their eagles, being their military standards; whereas our blessed Lord referred to the prophecy as a future event, and not as something at that moment transpiring.

2. It would seem that if Christ referred to any thing connected with Jerusalem as the holy place, he must have spoken in regard to the Temple, and we have no evidence that the Romans ever planted their standards within the walls of the sanctuary; and if they did, it was not until Jerusalem's actual destruction, which would at once preclude the idea of its being a sign that the destruction of the city was near, for it had then already come.

3. The Roman army under Titus, around Jerusalem, could be of no utility to the disciples as a sign, for they had all retired from the city five years before, when Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, having besieged the city, raised the siege and departed.

4. The standing of the abomination of desolation in the holy place, is to be the occasion of a great tribulation upon the church of Christ; but that event was wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, who had been the murderers of our Lord, while the true believers were not affected by it; they were peacefully reposing in the mountain of Pella.

Having shown that the abomination of desolation cannot refer to the Roman army under Titus, before divining what it is, we shall endeavor to harmonise the seeming discrepancy. And this I think we are authorized to do by associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew with the 21st verse of the same chapter; and putting in the place of the 15th verse, the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke.

And further, I think we are warranted to make this disposition of the subject from the consideration that the prophecy of Daniel, quoted by our Savior, presenting the abomination of desolation, is the occasion of a great tribulation. Thus: Daniel 11: 31–35,—"And arms shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate. And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he corrupt by flatteries, but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by spoil, and by captivity, many days."

All must admit that our Lord, in Matt. 24: 15, quotes the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel. And if the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel, which present the abomination of desolation, are the same, why not the 33d verse of Dan. 11, which presents the falling of many people by flame, spoil and captivity many days; and the 21st verse of the 24th of Matt., which brings to view a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, refer to the same thing? And if so, we say again, it can have no reference whatever to the destruction of Jerusalem, but must refer to that long period of persecution which came on the church of Christ under the tyrannical reign of the "man of sin."

Let us read the discourse of our Lord, by putting the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke in the place of the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, with the 21st verse of the same chapter, and see if there is not a manifest harmony which cannot be produced in any other way.

Luke 21: 20,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Matt. 24: 16,—"Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (who so readeth, let him understand). . . . For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be." To me this looks like a harmony.

Jesus in the days of his flesh told his immediate disciples what course to pursue for their own preservation and safety, when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies. Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, besieged Jerusalem five years before it fell by Titus, and was in a fair way to subjugate the city; but for some unknown cause, says the historian, he raised the siege and departed. The Christians (whom Josephus calls many virtuous people), recognizing this as the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy, fled to the mountains of Pella, and five years afterwards, when Titus took the city, among the eleven hundred thousand that perished not a Christian was found.

We come now more particularly to consider the Abomination of Desolation, which has been the cruel instrument of shedding the blood of so many of the innocent sheep of Christ's fold. This is an important subject, and may the Spirit of the Lord guide us into all truth. Jesus told his disciples, when they should see the abomination stand in the holy place, "Whoso readeth, let him understand;" i. e., let him identify this power by comparing it with the picture drawn in prophecy.

The first mention of the abomination of desolation is made in the eighth of Daniel, and eleventh verse. "Yea, he magnified himself to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." The next instance is in Dan. 11: 31. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Again, in chapter 12: 11, we read, "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days."

Let us consider the work, character, and duration of this power, as presented in the above quotations. I claim that all this had its fulfillment in the papal power.

1. He magnifies himself to the prince of the host.

2. By him the daily sacrifice was taken away.

The host in this connection must refer to the church of God; and the prince of the host, to Jesus Christ, who is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, and is made Head over all things to the church.

In the eighth of Daniel we have presented the Roman power, both in its pagan and papal form. And this may be seen by comparing the vision with the interpretation, as given by the angels, as follows:

Vision (ver. 31),—"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the highest came up last."

Interpretation (ver. 20),—"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia."

Vision (ver. 5),—"And as I was considering, behold an he-goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and he ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

Interpretation (vers. 21, 22),—"And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power."

Vision (ver. 9),—"And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the pleasant land."

Interpretation (ver. 23),—"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up."

The king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, here referred to, must represent the Roman power.

Vision (ver. 10),—"And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them."

This same power is represented in another form under the symbol of a great nondescript beast, having great iron teeth and nails of brass, and stamping the residue with his feet.

Vision (ver. 11),—"Yea, HE magnified himself, even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down" (desecrated).

The difference between the phraseology of the tenth and eleventh verses, is observable. In the tenth verse it reads, "It cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground;" and in the eleventh verse it reads, "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host."

I understand the pronoun "it" in the tenth verse to represent pagan Rome, and the "he" in the eleventh verse to represent papal Rome; for it is the pope who has magnified himself to an equal dignity with Christ, claiming to be the head and chief apostle of the church on earth. In the interpretation of the angel, the same distinctive characteristics of Rome in its pagan and papal form are presented as follows: "A king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," beyond doubt belongs to the Pagan Roman power. But the 24th verse, it appears to me, can only have its fulfillment in the Papal Roman power. Let us carefully read the 24th verse and connection, and consider its contents.

"And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." "And his power shall be mighty," but not by his own civil or military power;" i. e., the power of the pope shall be mighty, but not by his own civil or military power; but such will be his influence with kings and emperors, that he will, through them, wield the civil arm in destroying wonderfully the mighty and the holy people. Has not this application of the prophecy been demonstrated in the history of the Roman Hierarchy? Pagan Rome cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, in causing three millions of the saints to be put to death during the ten persecutions, but Papal Rome has taken away the daily sacrifice, by instituting a human mediatorship instead of Christ's, and destroyed wonderfully the mighty and the holy people, by causing the earth to drink the blood of more than fifty millions of the saints of the Most High.

406			32					The wall finished in 32nd year of Artaxerxes, from which the 62 weeks are recorded.
405			33					The death of Artaxerxes, from which there are 400 years to the birth of Christ.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

B. C. 983. Bosanquet, in his third chapter on Sacred and Profane Chronology, says,—"We next come to the important annals of the King of Tyre. These annals are quoted by Josephus (against Apion b. 1, s. 17,) as having been open to the public: that is, they were probably engraved on marble and set up in some public part of the city. They were transcribed by Menander from the Phœnician language into Greek, about the time when Berosus and Manetho wrote, and with Menander's Greek translation before him, Josephus writes." "Therein it is recorded that the temple was built by King Solomon at Jerusalem, one hundred and forty-three years and eight months before the Tyrians built Carthage." "What then is the date of the building of Carthage?" Polybius, who is one of the most scrupulous and truthful of ancient historians, was living at the time of the fall of Carthage, and he says that Carthage was destroyed after having existed for seven hundred years. The epitomizer of Livy gives the same number of years; Orisius the same; Solinus, as read by Scaliger, the same. Carthage was destroyed in the year B. C. 146. It was built, then, according to these authorities, in the year B. C. 846. And if, dropping the eight months, we add one hundred and forty-three years to this date, we come to the year B. C. 989 for the building of Solomon's temple—i. e., to the fourth year of Solomon.

According to the Bible Chronology, the fourth year of Solomon's reign was B. C. 983—which is only six years short of the time given by the "Annals of the Kings of Tyre."

"Niebuhr proposes to place the building of the temple even lower than B. C. 989. He would bring the date down to B. C. 958, or one hundred and eighty years before the first Olympiad. He makes his calculations by adding one hundred and forty-three years to the date of the foundation of Carthage, which he places in the year B. C. 813, and considers that date to be as historically certain as the date of the building of Boston or New York."

These two epochs for the foundation of Carthage, are reconciled thus: Says Bosanquet, "Polybius, Solinus and Orosius speak of the very origin of Carthage as a Tyrian settlement at the time of the first landing. Niebuhr's date is that of the foundation of the city itself." "Carthage was not builded immediately on the arrival of Dido in Africa. Strabo tells us that the island of Cothon was first occupied and fortified by the hostile Africans, who opposed her landing on the main shore." Then placing the seven hundred years against B. C. 146, they give us B. C. 846 for the time of "the arrival of Dido in Africa." "A citadel called Byrsa was then built. The people from the neighboring places flocked there for the purpose of traffic, until at length it assumed the appearance of a small state; and the Africans becoming desirous of retaining the strangers, with the consent of all, Carthage was at length built. Thus a considerable interval (say six years) must have elapsed between the landing of Dido and the building of the city." If this interval was just six years, it would give us B. C. 840 for the foundation of Carthage; and allowing twenty-seven years for the time spent in building the city, we have B. C. 813 for the date of the completion of the city. The "Annals of the Kings of Tyre" give one hundred and forty-three years and eight months from the building of Solomon's temple to the building of Carthage. This number of years, added to B. C. 840, at which time they began to build the city, gives B. C. 983 for the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of Solomon, and the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 975. The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee, and if so, it was dedicated in the year B. C. 975; hence the jubilee, combined with the one hundred and forty-three years to the building of Carthage, will give B. C. 983 for the fourth year of Solomon, at which time the foundation of the temple was laid, in the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 755. Saith the Lord, "I will darken the earth in the clear day" (Amos 8: 9), and in a clear day nothing but a total eclipse of the sun darkens the earth; hence the end of Jeroboam's forty-one years is fixed by a total eclipse of the sun, found to have occurred in B. C. 755. For more on this see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 583. Says the Duke of Manchester, "The Jews affirm that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee. That the Jews are correct in this, would appear from Ezekiel 1: 12. In allusion to which the Duke adds, "The most probable idea is, that the thirtieth year dates from the previous jubilee. This has the authority of the Jews, whose testimony upon such a point I should think almost conclusive. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 561. According to Josephus, the Servis to the king of Babylon, commenced in the eighth year of Jehoiakim, which was the fifth of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jos. Ant. b. 10. c. 6, s. 1.)

B. C. 558. At the end of the reign of Jehoiachin, "the king of Babylon . . . . carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives. (2 Kings 24: 14.) According to Demetrius, "From the carrying away from Jerusalem to the reign of the fourth Ptolemy Philopater," there were just "three hundred and thirty-eight years and three months." In an article on the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon, we mentioned that the reign of Ptolemy Philopater commenced on the tenth day of the eighth month B. C. 220. To which, if we add 338 years and three months, we have the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558, for the beginning of the captivity.

According to Berosus, in "the twelfth year of Zedekiah (Jehoiachim) king of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar made war upon the Jews and Phœnicians, seventy years before the reign of the Persians; that is, before the first of Cyrus, in B. C. 488. Says Bosanquet, "Berosus elsewhere counts not quite sixty years from the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar to the end (beginning) of the reign of Cyrus." (Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 27.)

On page 97 of the Book of Daniel Opened, we mentioned that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years and about fifteen days, and his twelfth year was B. C. 558, from which take seventy, and we have B. C. 488 for the beginning of the reign of Cyrus. The nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar was B. C. 547, from which take sixty and we have B. C. 487; hence it was "not quite sixty years" to the first of Cyrus.

B. C. 549. An article in the "Penny Cyclopædia," in allusion to the eclipse of Thales, says, "If the eclipse mentioned by Diodorus to have taken place during the voyage of Agathocles, B. C. 310, be rightly given, a correction becomes necessary for the moon's distance from her nodes, which, being allowed for, no eclipse between B. C. 650 and 580 was central or total, at or near any part of Asia Minor." Therefore, either the date of the eclipse of Agathocles or Thales is false.

The Duke of Manchester, observing this, says, "There having been no eclipse suitable between B. C. 580 and 650, we must try some later date. On looking over the list in L'Art de Verifier les Dates, from B. C. 538 to 580, it will be seen that the eclipse which corresponds best with the above requisition, is June 19th, B. C. 549." Thus it will be seen that when the subject is duly examined, it must be admitted that I was correct in saying that the eclipse of Thales occurred on the 19th of June, B. C. 549. And this establishes the time of the reign of the kings of Media, for which see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 547. According to the document of Philo, there was "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation, eleven years." He calls the captivity of Joiakim "the Babylonish captivity," and makes it eighty-one years to the second year of Darius. Thus, "In the eighty-first year from the Bablyonish captivity, and the seventieth from the desolation."

B. C. 534. According to the testimony of the Jews, the twenty-fifth year of the captivity was a jubilee. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Jarchi challenges, what year begins on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" This is in allusion to Ezek. 40: 1,—"In the five and twentieh year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was smitten."

Says the Duke, "For this the Jewish interpreter has scriptural warrant. But if the twenty-fifth of Jeconiah's captivity was a jubilee, the fifth was the thirtieth from the jubilee preceding. These two marks, therefore, mutually confirm each other. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 529. With B. C. 529 begins the first year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus. According to Clement, of Alexandria, Cambyses reigned nineteen years (Times of Daniel, p. 225). He does not say whether this was the father or son of Cyrus; but Herodotus does expressly say that "Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, reigned in all seven years and five months) (b. 3, c. 66). Therefore, we can only reconcile these two authors upon the supposition that Clement meant the father of Cyrus; and that he did reign about nineteen years appears from our table, where it will be seen that the nineteen years end with the beginning of the reign of his son Cyrus, at the expiration of the 35th year of Astyages; neither of which, it appears, died until many years after; for Xenophon supposed that Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was yet alive at the time Cyrus took Babylon.

B. C. 523. According to Ptolemy, "in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, . . . one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." And according to my tables, there was an eclipse of eight digits at ten o'clock, in the evening of July 16th, B. C. 523; hence, we conclude that the seventh year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was B. C. 523.

B. C. 521. With B. C. 521 began the reign of Darius Hystaspes, who, according to Herodotus, reigned thirty-six years. He is the first Darius mentioned in history; hence the same king called by Daniel "Darius the son of Ahasuerus" (Dan. 9: 1). And we learn from the book of Tobit (14: 5) that this "Assuerus" was the king that took Nineveh; therefore he must have been the same one called Astyages by Herodotus; and Prideaux says he took Nineveh. The Persians called him Arsames, as we learn from the monument erected by Darius. But in the "History of Armenia" he is called Ahasuerus, for "there we are told that "Ahasuerus, king of Media, had a dream full of portents. A mountain produced three warriors, which the wise men interpreted as an alliance between Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, and Tygranes, and of the overthrow of Ahasuerus by the two last, which happened accordingly." (Times of Daniel, p. 255). And it is well known that the Median king, who was overthrown by Cyrus, was the one called Astyages by Herodotus; who mentions that Astyages had two dreams, both of which "the Magi, who interpret dreams," explained as foretelling that the same Cyrus "would reign in his stead" (Herod. b. 1, c. 107). That which proves that this is the same dream, and overthrow of "Ahasuerus, king of Media," as alluded to in the "History of Armenia," is that in allusion to the time of "the overthrow of Ahasuerus by Cyrus and Tygranes," it is added, "At this period, Cyrus, accompanied by Tygranes, effected the conquest of Lydia" (Times of Daniel, p. 256).

Now all of this combined evidence must prove that the Astyages of Herodotus is the Ahasuerus of Daniel, hence a Median; therefore, says Daniel, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5: 31).

Says the Duke of Manchester,—"I have shown that Darius the Mede was Darius Hystaspes;" and "Jornandes . . . speaks of Darius as son of Astyages" (p. 275). Josephus also says that he was "the son of Astyages" (Jos. Ant., b. 10, c. 11, s. 4). "And Nicephorus speaks of Darius son of Astyages, after taking Babylon, being himself overthrown by Cyrus. But Cirbied and Martin say that Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares; that Cyrus and Tygranes 'agreed that the newly conquered countries [of Assyria and Babylon] should not belong to either of them, but should become a kingdom tributary to Persia, and be governed by Darius, son of Astyages, prisoner in Armenia.' Two years afterwards Darius rebelled, and provoked a war in which he was overthrown and killed by Cyrus, who became universal monarch."—Times of Daniel, p. 276.

From this extract, it will be seen that Cyaxares is the brother of Darius; hence Prideaux and others are mistaken in supposing that this Cyaxares, as alluded to by Xenophon, is the Darius of Daniel. Says Bosanquet, "Is it not idle to tell us that Darius was Cyaxares. His title in Babylon was Darius. Neither Berosus nor any other historian of Babylonish affairs makes mention of any king of that title having been made king over the realm of the Chaldeans till the reign of Darius Hystaspes." Xenophon speaks of Hystaspes as "one of the equals in honor" with Cyrus (b. 4, c. 2, s. 46); but omitting his double name—Darius Hystaspes, he only calls him "Hystaspes." Herodotus admits that Hystaspes "was governor" (p. 201), and distinguished between the two by calling the second "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but by giving the 36 years, which Darius Hystaspes reigned, to Darius the son of Hystaspes, he has caused many to believe that Darius Hystaspes was the same with Darius the son of Hystaspes, and thus caused great confusion in chronology.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "That some confusion existed in the chronology of Herodotus seems early to have been perceived; but I think the confusion becomes greater through the attempts made to clear it. Herodotus says that Darius was the first person who coined the dorics (b. 4, c. 166); but Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us that they were coined, not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius; by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians, who coined gold money. . . . The resemblance of the coin to the sculpture on the tomb of Darius Hystaspes is confirmatory of both denoting the same king."—Times of Daniel, p. 180.

Thus we think that we have abundant evidence for supposing that Darius Hystaspes was the Darius of Daniel; but whether he was or not, from the above extract it is clear that the king called "Darius the First" was not the father of Xerxes, but another Darius, who reigned before him; and this is enough for us to know, for Ptolemy expressly mentions that it was "Darius the First" in whose reign the eclipses of the moon occurred.

B. C. 510. With B. C. 510 began the reign of Cyrus. According to Xenophon, his father, Cambyses, was king of Persia; but from Herodotus it would appear that it was a tributary kingdom until Cyrus revolted from the Medes, at the end of the thirty-fifth year of Astyages, from which epoch Cyrus reigned twenty-nine years.

B. C. 509. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Crœsus was dethroned in the thirteenth of Darius" (Times of Daniel, p. 178); which, according to our chronology, was B. C. 509, the very year given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have shown in another article, published in the Crisis, to which I refer the reader for more on this point. In that article, we mentioned that Cyrus took Sardis in the second year of his reign, which makes his second year the same with the thirteenth of Darius Hystaspes.

B. C. 502. Eclipse of the moon. According to Ptolemy, "the moon was eclipsed one fourth of its diameter," at "two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight," at Babylon, "in the twentieth year of Darius"; and my tables eclipse four digits at five minutes after eleven, on November the 19th, B. C. 502; which fixes that as the twentieth year of the reign of Darius.

B. C. 497. "Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares" (Times of Daniel, p. 276). According to Xenophon, this Cyaxares lived in Media, and it would appear that until they took Babylon, Darius resided in Persia. This Cyaxares, the son of Astyages, reigned "twenty years," and was called "the elder Artaxerxes Assuerus" (Times of Daniel, p. 88). As he reigned at the same time with Darius, some of "the Jews supposed that Darius the Mede was Artaxerxes" (Times of Daniel, p. 259.

"The original Chaldee copy speaks of a king, called in the translation Artaxerxes, who came to the throne when Darius was an old man."—Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 101. And six years after the beginning of the reign of Cyaxares (who is here called Artaxerxes), Darius was "about threescore and two years old."—Dan. 5: 31. "Cyaxares is the same as Axares or Xerxes with the Persian Kai or king prefixed."—Times of Daniel, p. 276. Therefore Cyaxares is the same with king Xerxes, and Artaxerxes the great Xerxes; for, says Herodotus, "Xerxes signifies a warrior, and Artaxerxes a great warrior."

THE HOME OF THE BLEST.

Far, far beyond these skies of earth,
  Lo, fairer skies appear,
Bright skies that know no shade of night,
  There smiles the perennial year.

Oh, balmy are those skies afar,
  And soft the airs that blow;
Low, clear and sweet the music, where
  Pellucid waters flow.

Unfading flowers are blooming there,
  That fear no withering blight;
In amaranthine beauty fair,
  They smile in Eden light.

And sweetest notes from seraph lyres,
  By zephyrs borne along,
Kindle into ecstatic fires
  The vast, immortal throng.

Oh! Lord divine, where sorrows cease,
  All hail thy golden dawn!
Oh! usher in, thou "Prince of Peace,"
  The resurrection morn.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER THREE.

The second point is, what is all the world referred to? The word "world," of frequent occurrence in King James' version, is rendered from three or more different words in the original, viz., aion, kosmos, oikoumenee; the last mentioned word is the one rendered world in the 14th verse of this chapter. We find the same word in the first verse of the second chapter of Luke, where it undoubtedly refers to the Roman Empire. "It came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world (oikoumenee) should be taxed." From this it is quite evident that the scriptural import of the term may be more limited in its application than classic authors would allow.

The classical definition of oikoumenee is, all the habitable world; but the decree of Cæsar Augustus did not extend to all the habitable portions of the earth's surface; but only to that portion over which the Roman government exercised a sovereign authority. All the world, in this instance, seems to refer to the civilized world, or that portion of it under the influence of political enlightenment.—Adopting this principle, and applying it to our own time, we should say the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached throughout the civilized world, for a witness to the nations, and then shall the end come. If this is a correct exposition of the text, then the work has been most faithfully accomplished within the last half century.

There have been men raised up within the last fifty years who have given their attention to the subject of the signs of the times, and felt called upon to give the note of warning to the world, that another king, one Jesus, is about to take to himself his great power, and reign. Enlightened Europe has been startled with the announcement,—"Behold, He cometh with clouds." The inhabitants of cold Siberia have long echoed the glorious proclamation. Many of the missionaries laboring among the oriental nations of Asia, are believing in and proclaiming the speedy personal reign of Christ; while Afric's sons have come bending submissively to the Prince of Peace, and waiting stand to give him welcome. The United States and British Provinces have become familiar with this movement, and may we not say this gospel of the kingdom is at this very time being preached in all the world for a witness? and if so, shall we not look for the end? So sure as Christ predicted it, this is God's last work of mercy.

Having given in course an exposition of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, from the first to the fourteenth verse, we have come to the second division of this prophecy.

We have before said that the second division of this prophecy is complex, or mixed, and to discover the real harmony of the discourse, we shall be under the necessity of bringing in some points noticed by Luke in recording the same subject, which seem to have been omitted by Matthew.

The fifteenth verse reads,—"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)." Now I claim that here is where the complexity of this subject exists. It is by saying that the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew is the same in subject matter with the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, which reads,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." It will be observed that the twenty-first verse of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, reads like the sixteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew. And this is why some have supposed that the fifteenth verse in Matthew, and the twentieth verse in Luke are the same.

But it is evident that the army mentioned in the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, cannot be the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, and quoted by the Savior in the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, for the following reasons:—

1. If the eagles in the Roman army, being objects of worship, constituted the abomination of desolation, then they were in Jerusalem already; for at that very hour Jerusalem was garrisoned with Roman soldiers, who undoubtedly bore with them their eagles, being their military standards; whereas our blessed Lord referred to the prophecy as a future event, and not as something at that moment transpiring.

2. It would seem that if Christ referred to any thing connected with Jerusalem as the holy place, he must have spoken in regard to the Temple, and we have no evidence that the Romans ever planted their standards within the walls of the sanctuary; and if they did, it was not until Jerusalem's actual destruction, which would at once preclude the idea of its being a sign that the destruction of the city was near, for it had then already come.

3. The Roman army under Titus, around Jerusalem, could be of no utility to the disciples as a sign, for they had all retired from the city five years before, when Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, having besieged the city, raised the siege and departed.

4. The standing of the abomination of desolation in the holy place, is to be the occasion of a great tribulation upon the church of Christ; but that event was wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, who had been the murderers of our Lord, while the true believers were not affected by it; they were peacefully reposing in the mountain of Pella.

Having shown that the abomination of desolation cannot refer to the Roman army under Titus, before divining what it is, we shall endeavor to harmonize the seeming discrepancy. And this I think we are authorized to do by associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew with the 21st verse of the same chapter; and putting in the place of the 15th verse, the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke.

And further, I think we are warranted to make this disposition of the subject from the consideration that the prophecy of Daniel, quoted by our Savior, presenting the abomination of desolation, is the occasion of a great tribulation. Thus: Daniel 11: 31–35,—"And arms shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate. And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he corrupt by flatteries, but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by spoil, and by captivity, many days."

All must admit that our Lord, in Matt. 24: 15, quotes the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel. And if the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel, which present the abomination of desolation, are the same, why not the 33d verse of Dan. 11, which presents the falling of many people by flame, spoil and captivity many days; and the 21st verse of the 24th of Matt., which brings to view a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, refer to the same thing? And if so, we say again, it can have no reference whatever to the destruction of Jerusalem, but must refer to that long period of persecution which came on the church of Christ under the tyrannical reign of the "man of sin."

Let us read the discourse of our Lord, by putting the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke in the place of the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, with the 21st verse of the same chapter, and see if there is not a manifest harmony which cannot be produced in any other way.

Luke 21: 20,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Matt. 24: 16,—"Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (who so readeth, let him understand). . . . For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be." To me this looks like a harmony.

Jesus in the days of his flesh told his immediate disciples what course to pursue for their own preservation and safety, when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies. Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, besieged Jerusalem five years before it fell by Titus, and was in a fair way to subjugate the city; but for some unknown cause, says the historian, he raised the siege and departed. The Christians (whom Josephus calls many virtuous people), recognizing this as the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy, fled to the mountains of Pella, and five years afterwards, when Titus took the city, among the eleven hundred thousand that perished not a Christian was found.

We come now more particularly to consider the Abomination of Desolation, which has been the cruel instrument of shedding the blood of so many of the innocent sheep of Christ's fold. This is an important subject, and may the Spirit of the Lord guide us into all truth. Jesus told his disciples, when they should see the abomination stand in the holy place, "Whoso readeth, let him understand;" i. e., let him identify this power by comparing it with the picture drawn in prophecy.

The first mention of the abomination of desolation is made in the eighth of Daniel, and eleventh verse. "Yea, he magnified himself to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." The next instance is in Dan. 11: 31. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Again, in chapter 12: 11, we read, "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days."

Let us consider the work, character, and duration of this power, as presented in the above quotations. I claim that all this had its fulfillment in the papal power.

1. He magnifies himself to the prince of the host.

2. By him the daily sacrifice was taken away.

The host in this connection must refer to the church of God; and the prince of the host, to Jesus Christ, who is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, and is made Head over all things to the church.

In the eighth of Daniel we have presented the Roman power, both in its pagan and papal form. And this may be seen by comparing the vision with the interpretation, as given by the angels, as follows:

Vision (ver. 31),—"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the highest came up last."

Interpretation (ver. 20),—"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia."

Vision (ver. 5),—"And as I was considering, behold an he-goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and he ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

Interpretation (vers. 21, 22),—"And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power."

Vision (ver. 9),—"And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the pleasant land."

Interpretation (ver. 23),—"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up."

The king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, here referred to, must represent the Roman power.

Vision (ver. 10),—"And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them."

This same power is represented in another form under the symbol of a great nondescript beast, having great iron teeth and nails of brass, and stamping the residue with his feet.

Vision (ver. 11),—"Yea, he magnified himself, even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down" (desecrated).

The difference between the phraseology of the tenth and eleventh verses, is observable. In the tenth verse it reads, "It cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground;" and in the eleventh verse it reads, "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host."

I understand the pronoun "it" in the tenth verse to represent pagan Rome, and the "he" in the eleventh verse to represent papal Rome; for it is the pope who has magnified himself to an equal dignity with Christ, claiming to be the head and chief apostle of the church on earth. In the interpretation of the angel, the same distinctive characteristics of Rome in its pagan and papal form are presented as follows: "A king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," beyond doubt belongs to the Pagan Roman power. But the 24th verse, it appears to me, can only have its fulfillment in the Papal Roman power. Let us carefully read the 24th verse and connection, and consider its contents.

"And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." "And his power shall be mighty," but not by his own civil or military power;" i. e., the power of the pope shall be mighty, but not by his own civil or military power; but such will be his influence with kings and emperors, that he will, through them, wield the civil arm in destroying wonderfully the mighty and the holy people. Has not this application of the prophecy been demonstrated in the history of the Roman Hierarchy? Pagan Rome cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, in causing three millions of the saints to be put to death during the ten persecutions, but Papal Rome has taken away the daily sacrifice, by instituting a human mediatorship instead of Christ's, and destroyed wonderfully the mighty and the holy people, by causing the earth to drink the blood of more than fifty millions of the saints of the Most High.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

B. C. 983. Bosanquet, in his third chapter on Sacred and Profane Chronology, says,—"We next come to the important annals of the King of Tyre. These annals are quoted by Josephus (against Apion b. 1, s. 17,) as having been open to the public: that is, they were probably engraved on marble and set up in some public part of the city. They were transcribed by Menander from the Phœnician language into Greek, about the time when Berosus and Manetho wrote, and with Menander's Greek translation before him, Josephus writes." "Therein it is recorded that the temple was built by King Solomon at Jerusalem, one hundred and forty-three years and eight months before the Tyrians built Carthage." "What then is the date of the building of Carthage?" Polybius, who is one of the most scrupulous and truthful of ancient historians, was living at the time of the fall of Carthage, and he says that Carthage was destroyed after having existed for seven hundred years. The epitomizer of Livy gives the same number of years; Orisius the same; Solinus, as read by Scaliger, the same. Carthage was destroyed in the year B. C. 146. It was built, then, according to these authorities, in the year B. C. 846. And if, dropping the eight months, we add one hundred and forty-three years to this date, we come to the year B. C. 989 for the building of Solomon's temple—i. e., to the fourth year of Solomon.

According to the Bible Chronology, the fourth year of Solomon's reign was B. C. 983—which is only six years short of the time given by the "Annals of the Kings of Tyre."

"Niebuhr proposes to place the building of the temple even lower than B. C. 989. He would bring the date down to B. C. 958, or one hundred and eighty years before the first Olympiad. He makes his calculations by adding one hundred and forty-three years to the date of the foundation of Carthage, which he places in the year B. C. 813, and considers that date to be as historically certain as the date of the building of Boston or New York."

These two epochs for the foundation of Carthage, are reconciled thus: Says Bosanquet, "Polybius, Solinus and Orosius speak of the very origin of Carthage as a Tyrian settlement at the time of the first landing. Niebuhr's date is that of the foundation of the city itself." "Carthage was not builded immediately on the arrival of Dido in Africa. Strabo tells us that the island of Cothon was first occupied and fortified by the hostile Africans, who opposed her landing on the main shore." Then placing the seven hundred years against B. C. 146, they give us B. C. 846 for the time of "the arrival of Dido in Africa." "A citadel called Byrsa was then built. The people from the neighboring places flocked there for the purpose of traffic, until at length it assumed the appearance of a small state; and the Africans becoming desirous of retaining the strangers, with the consent of all, Carthage was at length built. Thus a considerable interval (say six years) must have elapsed between the landing of Dido and the building of the city." If this interval was just six years, it would give us B. C. 840 for the foundation of Carthage; and allowing twenty-seven years for the time spent in building the city, we have B. C. 813 for the date of the completion of the city. The "Annals of the Kings of Tyre" give one hundred and forty-three years and eight months from the building of Solomon's temple to the building of Carthage. This number of years, added to B. C. 840, at which time they began to build the city, gives B. C. 983 for the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of Solomon, and the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 975. The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee, and if so, it was dedicated in the year B. C. 975; hence the jubilee, combined with the one hundred and forty-three years to the building of Carthage, will give B. C. 983 for the fourth year of Solomon, at which time the foundation of the temple was laid, in the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 755. Saith the Lord, "I will darken the earth in the clear day" (Amos 8: 9), and in a clear day nothing but a total eclipse of the sun darkens the earth; hence the end of Jeroboam's forty-one years is fixed by a total eclipse of the sun, found to have occurred in B. C. 755. For more on this see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 583. Says the Duke of Manchester, "The Jews affirm that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee. That the Jews are correct in this, would appear from Ezekiel 1: 12. In allusion to which the Duke adds, "The most probable idea is, that the thirtieth year dates from the previous jubilee. This has the authority of the Jews, whose testimony upon such a point I should think almost conclusive. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 561. According to Josephus, the Servis to the king of Babylon, commenced in the eighth year of Jehoiakim, which was the fifth of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jos. Ant. b. 10. c. 6, s. 1.)

B. C. 558. At the end of the reign of Jehoiachin, "the king of Babylon . . . . carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives. (2 Kings 24: 14.) According to Demetrius, "From the carrying away from Jerusalem to the reign of the fourth Ptolemy Philopater," there were just "three hundred and thirty-eight years and three months." In an article on the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon, we mentioned that the reign of Ptolemy Philopater commenced on the tenth day of the eighth month B. C. 220. To which, if we add 338 years and three months, we have the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558, for the beginning of the captivity.

According to Berosus, in "the twelfth year of Zedekiah (Jehoiachim) king of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar made war upon the Jews and Phœnicians, seventy years before the reign of the Persians; that is, before the first of Cyrus, in B. C. 488. Says Bosanquet, "Berosus elsewhere counts not quite sixty years from the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar to the end (beginning) of the reign of Cyrus." (Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 27.)

On page 97 of the Book of Daniel Opened, we mentioned that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years and about fifteen days, and his twelfth year was B. C. 558, from which take seventy, and we have B. C. 488 for the beginning of the reign of Cyrus. The nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar was B. C. 547, from which take sixty and we have B. C. 487; hence it was "not quite sixty years" to the first of Cyrus.

B. C. 549. An article in the "Penny Cyclopædia," in allusion to the eclipse of Thales, says, "If the eclipse mentioned by Diodorus to have taken place during the voyage of Agathocles, B. C. 310, be rightly given, a correction becomes necessary for the moon's distance from her nodes, which, being allowed for, no eclipse between B. C. 650 and 580 was central or total, at or near any part of Asia Minor." Therefore, either the date of the eclipse of Agathocles or Thales is false.

The Duke of Manchester, observing this, says, "There having been no eclipse suitable between B. C. 580 and 650, we must try some later date. On looking over the list in L'Art de Verifier les Dates, from B. C. 538 to 580, it will be seen that the eclipse which corresponds best with the above requisition, is June 19th, B. C. 549." Thus it will be seen that when the subject is duly examined, it must be admitted that I was correct in saying that the eclipse of Thales occurred on the 19th of June, B. C. 549. And this establishes the time of the reign of the kings of Media, for which see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 547. According to the document of Philo, there was "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation, eleven years." He calls the captivity of Joiakim "the Babylonish captivity," and makes it eighty-one years to the second year of Darius. Thus, "In the eighty-first year from the Bablyonish captivity, and the seventieth from the desolation."

B. C. 534. According to the testimony of the Jews, the twenty-fifth year of the captivity was a jubilee. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Jarchi challenges, what year begins on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" This is in allusion to Ezek. 40: 1.—"In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was smitten."

Says the Duke, "For this the Jewish interpreter has scriptural warrant. But if the twenty-fifth of Jeconiah's captivity was a jubilee, the fifth was the thirtieth from the jubilee preceding. These two marks, therefore, mutually confirm each other. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 529. With B. C. 529 begins the first year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus. According to Clement, of Alexandria, Cambyses reigned nineteen years (Times of Daniel, p. 225). He does not say whether this was the father or son of Cyrus; but Herodotus does expressly say that "Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, reigned in all seven years and five months) (b. 3, c. 66). Therefore, we can only reconcile these two authors upon the supposition that Clement meant the father of Cyrus; and that he did reign about nineteen years appears from our table, where it will be seen that the nineteen years end with the beginning of the reign of his son Cyrus, at the expiration of the 35th year of Astyages; neither of which, it appears, died until many years after; for Xenophon supposed that Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was yet alive at the time Cyrus took Babylon.

B. C. 523. According to Ptolemy, "in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, . . . one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." And according to my tables, there was an eclipse of eight digits at ten o'clock, in the evening of July 16th, B. C. 523; hence, we conclude that the seventh year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was B. C. 523.

B. C. 521. With B. C. 521 began the reign of Darius Hystaspes, who, according to Herodotus, reigned thirty-six years. He is the first Darius mentioned in history; hence the same king called by Daniel "Darius the son of Ahasuerus" (Dan. 9: 1). And we learn from the book of Tobit (14: 5) that this "Asuerus" was the king that took Nineveh; therefore he must have been the same one called Astyages by Herodotus; and Prideaux says he took Nineveh. The Persians called him Arsames, as we learn from the monument erected by Darius. But in the "History of Armenia" he is called Ahasuerus, for "there we are told that "Ahasuerus, King of Media, had a dream full of portents. A mountain produced three warriors, which the wise men interpreted as an alliance between Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, and Tygranes, and of the overthrow of Ahasuerus by the two last, which happened accordingly." (Times of Daniel, p. 255). And it is well known that the Median king, who was overthrown by Cyrus, was the one called Astyages by Herodotus; who mentions that Astyages had two dreams, both of which "the Magi, who interpret dreams," explained as foretelling that the same Cyrus "would reign in his stead" (Herod. b. 1, c. 107). That which proves that this is the same dream, and overthrow of "Ahasuerus, king of Media," as alluded to in the "History of Armenia," is that in allusion to the time of "the overthrow of Ahasuerus by Cyrus and Tygranes," it is added, "At this period, Cyrus, accompanied by Tygranes, effected the conquest of Lydia" (Times of Daniel, p. 256).

Now all of this combined evidence must prove that the Astyages of Herodotus is the Ahasuerus of Daniel, hence a Median; therefore, says Daniel, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5: 31).

Says the Duke of Manchester,—"I have shown that Darius the Mede was Darius Hystaspes;" and "Jornandes . . . speaks of Darius as son of Astyages" (p. 275). Josephus also says that he was "the son of Astyages" (Jos. Ant., b. 10, c. 11, s. 4). "And Nicephorus speaks of Darius son of Astyages, after taking Babylon, being himself overthrown by Cyrus. But Cirbied and Martin say that Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares; that Cyrus and Tygranes 'agreed that the newly conquered countries [of Assyria and Babylon] should not belong to either of them, but should become a kingdom tributary to Persia, and be governed by Darius, son of Astyages, prisoner in Armenia.' Two years afterwards Darius rebelled, and provoked a war in which he was overthrown and killed by Cyrus, who became universal monarch."—Times of Daniel, p. 276.

From this extract, it will be seen that Cyaxares is the brother of Darius; hence Prideaux and others are mistaken in supposing that this Cyaxares, as alluded to by Xenophon, is the Darius of Daniel. Says Bosanquet, "Is it not idle to tell us that Darius was Cyaxares. His title in Babylon was Darius. Neither Berosus nor any other historian of Babylonish affairs makes mention of any king of that title having been made king over the realm of the Chaldeans till the reign of Darius Hystaspes." Xenophon speaks of Hystaspes as "one of the equals in honor" with Cyrus (b. 4, c. 2, s. 46); but omitting his double name—Darius Hystaspes, he only calls him "Hystaspes." Herodotus admits that Hystaspes "was governor" (p. 201), and distinguished between the two by calling the second "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but by giving the 36 years, which Darius Hystaspes reigned, to Darius the son of Hystaspes, he has caused many to believe that Darius Hystaspes was the same with Darius the son of Hystaspes, and thus caused great confusion in chronology.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "That some confusion existed in the chronology of Herodotus seems early to have been perceived; but I think the confusion becomes greater through the attempts made to clear it. Herodotus says that Darius was the first person who coined the dorics (b. 4, c. 166); but Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us that they were coined, not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius; by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians, who coined gold money. . . . The resemblance of the coin to the sculpture on the tomb of Darius Hystaspes is confirmatory of both denoting the same king."—Times of Daniel, p. 180.

Thus we think that we have abundant evidence for supposing that Darius Hystaspes was the Darius of Daniel; but whether he was or not, from the above extract it is clear that the king called "Darius the First" was not the father of Xerxes, but another Darius, who reigned before him; and this is enough for us to know, for Ptolemy expressly mentions that it was "Darius the First" in whose reign the eclipses of the moon occurred.

B. C. 510. With B. C. 510 began the reign of Cyrus. According to Xenophon, his father, Cambyses, was king of Persia; but from Herodotus it would appear that it was a tributary kingdom until Cyrus revolted from the Medes, at the end of the thirty-fifth year of Astyages, from which epoch Cyrus reigned twenty-nine years.

B. C. 509. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Crœsus was dethroned in the thirteenth of Darius" (Times of Daniel, p. 178); which, according to our chronology, was B. C. 509, the very year given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have shown in another article, published in the Crisis, to which I refer the reader for more on this point. In that article, we mentioned that Cyrus took Sardis in the second year of his reign, which makes his second year the same with the thirteenth of Darius Hystaspes.

B. C. 502. Eclipse of the moon. According to Ptolemy, "the moon was eclipsed one fourth of its diameter," at "two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight," at Babylon, "in the twentieth year of Darius"; and my tables eclipse four digits at five minutes after eleven, on November the 19th, B. C. 502; which fixes that as the twentieth year of the reign of Darius.

B. C. 497. "Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares" (Times of Daniel, p. 276). According to Xenophon, this Cyaxares lived in Media, and it would appear that until they took Babylon, Darius resided in Persia. This Cyaxares, the son of Astyages, reigned "twenty years," and was called "the elder Artaxerxes Assuerus" (Times of Daniel, p. 65). As he reigned at the same time with Darius, some of "the Jews supposed that Darius the Mede was Artaxerxes" (Times of Daniel, p. 259.

"The original Chaldee copy spoke of a king, called in the translation Artaxerxes, who came to the throne when Darius was an old man."—Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 101. And six years after the beginning of the reign of Cyaxares (who is here called Artaxerxes), Darius was "about threescore and two years old."—Dan. 5: 31. "Cyaxares is the same as Axares or Xerxes with the Persian Kei or king prefixed."—Times of Daniel, p. 276. Therefore Cyaxares is the same with king Xerxes, and Artaxerxes the great Xerxes; for, says Herodotus, "Xerxes signifies a warrior, and Artaxerxes a great warrior."

THE HOME OF THE BLEST.

Far, far beyond these skies of earth,
  Lo, fairer skies appear,
Bright skies that know no shade of night,
  There smiles the perennial year.

Oh, balmy are those skies afar,
  And soft the airs that blow;
Low, clear and sweet the music, where
  Pellucid waters flow.

Unfading flowers are blooming there,
  That fear no withering blight;
In amaranthine beauty fair,
  They smile in Eden light.

And sweetest notes from seraph lyres,
  By zephyrs borne along,
Kindle into ecstatic fires
  The vast, immortal throng.

Oh! Lord divine, where sorrows cease,
  All hail thy golden dawn!
Oh! usher in, thou "Prince of Peace,"
  The resurrection morn.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER THREE.

The second point is, what is all the world referred to? The word "world," of frequent occurrence in King James' version, is rendered from three or more different words in the original, viz., aion, kosmos, oikoumenee; the last mentioned word is the one rendered world in the 14th verse of this chapter. We find the same word in the first verse of the second chapter of Luke, where it undoubtedly refers to the Roman Empire. "It came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world (oikoumenee) should be taxed." From this it is quite evident that the scriptural import of the term may be more limited in its application than classic authors would allow.

The classical definition of oikoumenee is, all the habitable world; but the decree of Cæsar Augustus did not extend to all the habitable portions of the earth's surface; but only to that portion over which the Roman government exercised a sovereign authority. All the world, in this instance, seems to refer to the civilized world, or that portion of it under the influence of political enlightenment.—Adopting this principle, and applying it to our own time, we should say the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached throughout the civilized world, for a witness to the nations, and then shall the end come. If this is a correct exposition of the text, then the work has been most faithfully accomplished within the last half century.

There have been men raised up within the last fifty years who have given their attention to the subject of the signs of the times, and felt called upon to give the note of warning to the world, that another king, one Jesus, is about to take to himself his great power, and reign. Enlightened Europe has been startled with the announcement,—"Behold, He cometh with clouds." The inhabitants of cold Siberia have long echoed the glorious proclamation. Many of the missionaries laboring among the oriental nations of Asia, are believing in and proclaiming the speedy personal reign of Christ; while Afric's sons have come bending submissively to the Prince of Peace, and waiting stand to give him welcome. The United States and British Provinces have become familiar with this movement, and may we not say this gospel of the kingdom is at this very time being preached in all the world for a witness? and if so, shall we not look for the end? So sure as Christ predicted it, this is God's last work of mercy.

Having given in course an exposition of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, from the first to the fourteenth verse, we have come to the second division of this prophecy.

We have before said that the second division of this prophecy is complex, or mixed, and to discover the real harmony of the discourse, we shall be under the necessity of bringing in some points noticed by Luke in recording the same subject, which seem to have been omitted by Matthew.

The fifteenth verse reads,—"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)." Now I claim that here is where the complexity of this subject exists. It is by saying that the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew is the same in subject matter with the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, which reads,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." It will be observed that the twenty-first verse of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, reads like the sixteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew. And this is why some have supposed that the fifteenth verse in Matthew, and the twentieth verse in Luke are the same.

But it is evident that the army mentioned in the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, cannot be the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, and quoted by the Savior in the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, for the following reasons:—

1. If the eagles in the Roman army, being objects of worship, constituted the abomination of desolation, then they were in Jerusalem already; for at that very hour Jerusalem was garrisoned with Roman soldiers, who undoubtedly bore with them their eagles, being their military standards; whereas our blessed Lord referred to the prophecy as a future event, and not as something at that moment transpiring.

2. It would seem that if Christ referred to any thing connected with Jerusalem as the holy place, he must have spoken in regard to the Temple, and we have no evidence that the Romans ever planted their standards within the walls of the sanctuary; and if they did, it was not until Jerusalem's actual destruction, which would at once preclude the idea of its being a sign that the destruction of the city was near, for it had then already come.

3. The Roman army under Titus, around Jerusalem, could be of no utility to the disciples as a sign, for they had all retired from the city five years before, when Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, having besieged the city, raised the siege and departed.

4. The standing of the abomination of desolation in the holy place, is to be the occasion of a great tribulation upon the church of Christ; but that event was wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, who had been the murderers of our Lord, while the true believers were not affected by it; they were peacefully reposing in the mountain of Pella.

Having shown that the abomination of desolation cannot refer to the Roman army under Titus, before divining what it is, we shall endeavor to harmonize the seeming discrepancy. And this I think we are authorized to do by associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew with the 21st verse of the same chapter; and putting in the place of the 15th verse, the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke.

And further, I think we are warranted to make this disposition of the subject from the consideration that the prophecy of Daniel, quoted by our Savior, presenting the abomination of desolation, is the occasion of a great tribulation. Thus: Daniel 11: 31–35,—"And arms shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate. And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he corrupt by flatteries, but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by spoil, and by captivity, many days."

All must admit that our Lord, in Matt. 24: 15, quotes the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel. And if the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel, which present the abomination of desolation, are the same, why not the 33d verse of Dan. 11, which presents the falling of many people by flame, spoil and captivity many days; and the 21st verse of the 24th of Matt., which brings to view a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, refer to the same thing? And if so, we say again, it can have no reference whatever to the destruction of Jerusalem, but must refer to that long period of persecution which came on the church of Christ under the tyrannical reign of the "man of sin."

Let us read the discourse of our Lord, by putting the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke in the place of the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, with the 21st verse of the same chapter, and see if there is not a manifest harmony which cannot be produced in any other way.

Luke 21: 20,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Matt. 24: 16,—"Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (who so readeth, let him understand). . . . For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be." To me this looks like a harmony.

Jesus in the days of his flesh told his immediate disciples what course to pursue for their own preservation and safety, when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies. Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, besieged Jerusalem five years before it fell by Titus, and was in a fair way to subjugate the city; but for some unknown cause, says the historian, he raised the siege and departed. The Christians (whom Josephus calls many virtuous people), recognizing this as the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy, fled to the mountains of Pella, and five years afterwards, when Titus took the city, among the eleven hundred thousand that perished not a Christian was found.

We come now more particularly to consider the Abomination of Desolation, which has been the cruel instrument of shedding the blood of so many of the innocent sheep of Christ's fold. This is an important subject, and may the Spirit of the Lord guide us into all truth. Jesus told his disciples, when they should see the abomination stand in the holy place, "Whoso readeth, let him understand;" i. e., let him identify this power by comparing it with the picture drawn in prophecy.

The first mention of the abomination of desolation is made in the eighth of Daniel, and eleventh verse. "Yea, he magnified himself to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." The next instance is in Dan. 11: 31. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Again, in chapter 12: 11, we read, "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days."

Let us consider the work, character, and duration of this power, as presented in the above quotations. I claim that all this had its fulfillment in the papal power.

1. He magnifies himself to the prince of the host.

2. By him the daily sacrifice was taken away.

The host in this connection must refer to the church of God; and the prince of the host, to Jesus Christ, who is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, and is made Head over all things to the church.

In the eighth of Daniel we have presented the Roman power, both in its pagan and papal form. And this may be seen by comparing the vision with the interpretation, as given by the angels, as follows:

Vision (ver. 31),—"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the highest came up last."

Interpretation (ver. 20),—"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia."

Vision (ver. 5),—"And as I was considering, behold an he-goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and he ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

Interpretation (vers. 21, 22),—"And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power."

Vision (ver. 9),—"And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the pleasant land."

Interpretation (ver. 23),—"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up."

The king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, here referred to, must represent the Roman power.

Vision (ver. 10),—"And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them."

This same power is represented in another form under the symbol of a great nondescript beast, having great iron teeth and nails of brass, and stamping the residue with his feet.

Vision (ver. 11),—"Yea, HE magnified himself, even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down" (desecrated).

The difference between the phraseology of the tenth and eleventh verses, is observable. In the tenth verse it reads, "It cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground;" and in the eleventh verse it reads, "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host."

I understand the pronoun "it" in the tenth verse to represent pagan Rome, and the "he" in the eleventh verse to represent papal Rome; for it is the pope who has magnified himself to an equal dignity with Christ, claiming to be the head and chief apostle of the church on earth. In the interpretation of the angel, the same distinctive characteristics of Rome in its pagan and papal form are presented as follows: "A king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," beyond doubt belongs to the Pagan Roman power. But the 24th verse, it appears to me, can only have its fulfillment in the Papal Roman power. Let us carefully read the 24th verse and connection, and consider its contents.

"And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." "And his power shall be mighty," but not by his own civil or military power;" i. e., the power of the pope shall be mighty, but not by his own civil or military power; but such will be his influence with kings and emperors, that he will, through them, wield the civil arm in destroying wonderfully the mighty and the holy people. Has not this application of the prophecy been demonstrated in the history of the Roman Hierarchy? Pagan Rome cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, in causing three millions of the saints to be put to death during the ten persecutions, but Papal Rome has taken away the daily sacrifice, by instituting a human mediatorship instead of Christ's, and destroyed wonderfully the mighty and the holy people, by causing the earth to drink the blood of more than fifty millions of the saints of the Most High.

EXPLANATION.

Solomon began to build the temple 143 years before the building of Carthage.
The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee.
The end of Jeroboam's 41st year fixed to B. C. 755 by a total eclipse of the sun.
The Jews affirm that the 18th of Josiah was a jubilee.
In the 8th of Jehoiakim, the 5th of Nebuchadnezzar, the 70 years series began.
From the carrying away from Jerusalem 338 years to the 4th Ptolemy.
The eclipse of Thales according to the Duke of Manchester.
The desolation, according to Philo, began 70 years before the second year of Darius.
The 25th year of the captivity was a jubilee according to the Jews.
Cambyses, king of Persia and father of Cyrus, reigned 19 years.
An eclipse of the moon, by which the 7th of Cambyses is fixed to B. C. 523.
Darius Hystaspes, or Darius the Median, the son of Ahasuerus, 36 years.
End both of the reign of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, and Ahasuerus.
Cyrus, son of Cambyses, reigned 29 years, beginning with the 12th of Darius.
Crœsus dethroned the 13th of Darius Hystaspes, according to the Duke of Manchester.
An eclipse of the moon, by which the 20th of Darius is fixed to B. C. 502.
Assuerus Artaxerxes the First reigned 20 years. He is the Artaxerxes of Ezra 4: 7.
Smerdis Magus slain according to the Parian Chronicle.
Belshazzar reigned 4 years, and was slain in the year B. C. 491.
Daniel at Shushan (Dan. 8: 2), which was builded by Darius Hystaspes.
Babylon overthrown in the 20th year of Cyrus, at the end of the 30th of Darius.
Cyrus and Darius reigned two years together after the overthrow of Babylon.
Darius overthrown or removed from Babylon at the end of the 22nd year of Cyrus.
Cyrus reigned seven years from the time of the acquisition of his empire.
The foundation of the temple laid in the second year of Cyrus.
Death of Darius Hystaspes, and Joshua went up to Assuerus in his twelfth year.
They cease to build the temple with the beginning of the jubilee of B. C. 485.
Death of Cyrus, according to Xenophon and Herodotus.
Death of Cambyses, son of Cyrus, according to Herodotus.
The return of Joshua in the first of Darius Longimanus and death of Artaxerxes.
The 81st from captivity, 70th from desolation, and 9th from ceasing to build the temple.
The temple completed in the 6th year of Darius the son of Hystaspes.
The battle of Marathon, according to the Parian Chronicle.
Death of Darius, son of Hystaspes, according to the Parian Chronicle.
Xerxes reigned 21 years, and Joiakim high priest 48 years.
The time Xerxes invaded Greece fixed by a total eclipse of the sun.
The battle of Salamis fixed to B. C. 456, by the Parian Chronicle.
The second year of the war fixed by an eclipse of the sun on the 31st of May.
Death of Xerxes, the fourth king (Dan. 11: 2), at the end of Daniel's seven weeks.
Artaxerxes and his brother Hystaspes together one year, according to Prideaux.
Artaxerxes having slain his brother Hystaspes, reigned 33 years.
"The ram pushing . . . so that no living might stand before him." Est. 3: 7–13.
The wall finished in 32nd year of Artaxerxes, from which the 62 weeks are recorded.
The death of Artaxerxes, from which there are 400 years to the birth of Christ.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

B. C. 983. Bosanquet, in his third chapter on Sacred and Profane Chronology, says,—"We next come to the important annals of the King of Tyre. These annals are quoted by Josephus (against Apion b. 1, s. 17,) as having been open to the public: that is, they were probably engraved on marble and set up in some public part of the city. They were transcribed by Menander from the Phœnician language into Greek, about the time when Berosus and Manetho wrote, and with Menander's Greek translation before him, Josephus writes." "Therein it is recorded that the temple was built by King Solomon at Jerusalem, one hundred and forty-three years and eight months before the Tyrians built Carthage." "What then is the date of the building of Carthage?" Polybius, who is one of the most scrupulous and truthful of ancient historians, was living at the time of the fall of Carthage, and he says that Carthage was destroyed after having existed for seven hundred years. The epitomizer of Livy gives the same number of years; Orisius the same; Solinus, as read by Scaliger, the same. Carthage was destroyed in the year B. C. 146. It was built, then, according to these authorities, in the year B. C. 846. And if, dropping the eight months, we add one hundred and forty-three years to this date, we come to the year B. C. 989 for the building of Solomon's temple—i. e., to the fourth year of Solomon.

According to the Bible Chronology, the fourth year of Solomon's reign was B. C. 983—which is only six years short of the time given by the "Annals of the Kings of Tyre."

"Niebuhr proposes to place the building of the temple even lower than B. C. 989. He would bring the date down to B. C. 956, or one hundred and eighty years before the first Olympiad. He makes his calculations by adding one hundred and forty-three years to the date of the foundation of Carthage, which he places in the year B. C. 813, and considers that date to be as historically certain as the date of the building of Boston or New York."

These two epochs for the foundation of Carthage, are reconciled thus: Says Bosanquet, "Polybius, Solinus and Orosius speak of the very origin of Carthage as a Tyrian settlement at the time of the first landing. Niebuhr's date is that of the foundation of the city itself." "Carthage was not builded immediately on the arrival of Dido in Africa. Strabo tells us that the island of Cothon was first occupied and fortified by the hostile Africans, who opposed her landing on the main shore." Then placing the seven hundred years against B. C. 146, they give us B. C. 846 for the time of "the arrival of Dido in Africa." "A citadel called Byrsa was then built. The people from the neighboring places flocked there for the purpose of traffic, until at length it assumed the appearance of a small state; and the Africans becoming desirous of retaining the strangers, with the consent of all, Carthage was at length built. Thus a considerable interval (say six years) must have elapsed between the landing of Dido and the building of the city." If this interval was just six years, it would give us B. C. 840 for the foundation of Carthage; and allowing twenty-seven years for the time spent in building the city, we have B. C. 813 for the date of the completion of the city. The "Annals of the Kings of Tyre" give one hundred and forty-three years and eight months from the building of Solomon's temple to the building of Carthage. This number of years, added to B. C. 840, at which time they began to build the city, gives B. C. 983 for the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of Solomon, and the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 975. The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee, and if so, it was dedicated in the year B. C. 975; hence the jubilee, combined with the one hundred and forty-three years to the building of Carthage, will give B. C. 983 for the fourth year of Solomon, at which time the foundation of the temple was laid, in the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 755. Saith the Lord, "I will darken the earth in the clear day" (Amos 8: 9), and in a clear day nothing but a total eclipse of the sun darkens the earth; hence the end of Jeroboam's forty-one years is fixed by a total eclipse of the sun, found to have occurred in B. C. 755. For more on this see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 583. Says the Duke of Manchester, "The Jews affirm that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee. That the Jews are correct in this, would appear from Ezekiel 1: 12. In allusion to which the Duke adds, "The most probable idea is, that the thirtieth year dates from the previous jubilee. This has the authority of the Jews, whose testimony upon such a point I should think almost conclusive. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 561. According to Josephus, the Servis to the king of Babylon, commenced in the eighth year of Jehoiakim, which was the fifth of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jos. Ant. b. 10. c. 6, s. 1.)

B. C. 558. At the end of the reign of Jehoiachin, "the king of Babylon . . . . carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives. (2 Kings 24: 14.) According to Demetrius, "From the carrying away from Jerusalem to the reign of the fourth Ptolemy Philopater," there were just "three hundred and thirty-eight years and three months." In an article on the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon, we mentioned that the reign of Ptolemy Philopater commenced on the tenth day of the eighth month B. C. 220. To which, if we add 338 years and three months, we have the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558, for the beginning of the captivity.

According to Berosus, in "the twelfth year of Zedekiah (Jehoiachim) king of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar made war upon the Jews and Phœnicians, seventy years before the reign of the Persians; that is, before the first of Cyrus, in B. C. 488. Says Bosanquet, "Berosus elsewhere counts not quite sixty years from the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar to the end (beginning) of the reign of Cyrus." (Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 27.)

On page 97 of the Book of Daniel Opened, we mentioned that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years and about fifteen days, and his twelfth year was B. C. 558, from which take seventy, and we have B. C. 488 for the beginning of the reign of Cyrus. The nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar was B. C. 547, from which take sixty and we have B. C. 487; hence it was "not quite sixty years" to the first of Cyrus.

B. C. 549. An article in the "Penny Cyclopædia," in allusion to the eclipse of Thales, says, "If the eclipse mentioned by Diodorus to have taken place during the voyage of Agathocles, B. C. 310, be rightly given, a correction becomes necessary for the moon's distance from her nodes, which, being allowed for, no eclipse between B. C. 650 and 580 was central or total, at or near any part of Asia Minor." Therefore, either the date of the eclipse of Agathocles or Thales is false.

The Duke of Manchester, observing this, says, "There having been no eclipse suitable between B. C. 580 and 650, we must try some later date. On looking over the list in L'Art de Verifier les Dates, from B. C. 538 to 580, it will be seen that the eclipse which corresponds best with the above requisition, is June 19th, B. C. 549." Thus it will be seen that when the subject is duly examined, it must be admitted that I was correct in saying that the eclipse of Thales occurred on the 19th of June, B. C. 549. And this establishes the time of the reign of the kings of Media, for which see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 547. According to the document of Philo, there was "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation, eleven years." He calls the captivity of Joiakim "the Babylonish captivity," and makes it eighty-one years to the second year of Darius. Thus, "In the eighty-first year from the Bablyonish captivity, and the seventieth from the desolation."

B. C. 534. According to the testimony of the Jews, the twenty-fifth year of the captivity was a jubilee. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Jarchi challenges, what year begins on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" This is in allusion to Ezek. 40: 1,—"In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was smitten."

Says the Duke, "For this the Jewish interpreter has scriptural warrant. But if the twenty-fifth of Jeconiah's captivity was a jubilee, the fifth was the thirtieth from the jubilee preceding. These two marks, therefore, mutually confirm each other. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 529. With B. C. 529 begins the first year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus. According to Clement, of Alexandria, Cambyses reigned nineteen years (Times of Daniel, p. 225). He does not say whether this was the father or son of Cyrus; but Herodotus does expressly say that "Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, reigned in all seven years and five months) (b. 3, c. 66). Therefore, we can only reconcile these two authors upon the supposition that Clement meant the father of Cyrus; and that he did reign about nineteen years appears from our table, where it will be seen that the nineteen years end with the beginning of the reign of his son Cyrus, at the expiration of the 35th year of Astyages; neither of which, it appears, died until many years after; for Xenophon supposed that Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was yet alive at the time Cyrus took Babylon.

B. C. 523. According to Ptolemy, "in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, . . . one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." And according to my tables, there was an eclipse of eight digits at ten o'clock, in the evening of July 16th, B. C. 523; hence, we conclude that the seventh year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was B. C. 523.

B. C. 521. With B. C. 521 began the reign of Darius Hystaspes, who, according to Herodotus, reigned thirty-six years. He is the first Darius mentioned in history; hence the same king called by Daniel "Darius the son of Ahasuerus" (Dan. 9: 1). And we learn from the book of Tobit (14: 5) that this "Asuerus" was the king that took Nineveh; therefore he must have been the same one called Astyages by Herodotus; and Prideaux says he took Nineveh. The Persians called him Arsames, as we learn from the monument erected by Darius. But in the "History of Armenia" he is called Ahasuerus, for there we are told that "Ahasuerus, King of Media, had a dream full of portents. A mountain produced three warriors, which the wise men interpreted as an alliance between Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, and Tygranes, and of the overthrow of Ahasuerus by the two last, which happened accordingly." (Times of Daniel, p. 255). And it is well known that the Median king, who was overthrown by Cyrus, was the one called Astyages by Herodotus; who mentions that Astyages had two dreams, both of which "the Magi, who interpret dreams," explained as foretelling that the same Cyrus "would reign in his stead" (Herod. b. 1, c. 107). That which proves that this is the same dream, and overthrow of "Ahasuerus, king of Media," as alluded to in the "History of Armenia," is that in allusion to the time of "the overthrow of Ahasuerus by Cyrus and Tygranes," it is added, "At this period, Cyrus, accompanied by Tygranes, effected the conquest of Lydia" (Times of Daniel, p. 256).

Now all of this combined evidence must prove that the Astyages of Herodotus is the Ahasuerus of Daniel, hence a Median; therefore, says Daniel, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5: 31).

Says the Duke of Manchester:—"I have shown that Darius the Mede was Darius Hystaspes;" and "Jornandes . . . speaks of Darius as son of Astyages" (p. 275). Josephus also says that he was "the son of Astyages" (Jos. Ant., b. 10, c. 11, s. 4). "And Nicephorus speaks of Darius son of Astyages, after taking Babylon, being himself overthrown by Cyrus. But Cirbied and Martin say that Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares; that Cyrus and Tygranes 'agreed that the newly conquered countries [of Assyria and Babylon] should not belong to either of them, but should become a kingdom tributary to Persia, and be governed by Darius, son of Astyages, prisoner in Armenia.' Two years afterwards Darius rebelled, and provoked a war in which he was overthrown and killed by Cyrus, who became universal monarch."—Times of Daniel, p. 276.

From this extract, it will be seen that Cyaxares is the brother of Darius; hence Prideaux and others are mistaken in supposing that this Cyaxares, as alluded to by Xenophon, is the Darius of Daniel. Says Bosanquet, "Is it not idle to tell us that Darius was Cyaxares. His title in Babylon was Darius. Neither Berosus nor any other historian of Babylonish affairs makes mention of any king of that title having been made king over the realm of the Chaldeans till the reign of Darius Hystaspes." Xenophon speaks of Hystaspes as "one of the equals in honor" with Cyrus (b. 4, c. 2, s. 46); but omitting his double name—Darius Hystaspes, he only calls him "Hystaspes." Herodotus admits that Hystaspes "was governor" (p. 201), and distinguished between the two by calling the second "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but by giving the 36 years, which Darius Hystaspes reigned, to Darius the son of Hystaspes, he has caused many to believe that Darius Hystaspes was the same with Darius the son of Hystaspes, and thus caused great confusion in chronology.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "That some confusion existed in the chronology of Herodotus seems early to have been perceived; but I think the confusion becomes greater through the attempts made to clear it. Herodotus says that Darius was the first person who coined the dorics (b. 4, c. 166); but Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us that they were coined, not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius; by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians, who coined gold money. . . . The resemblance of the coin to the sculpture on the tomb of Darius Hystaspes is confirmatory of both denoting the same king."—Times of Daniel, p. 180.

Thus we think that we have abundant evidence for supposing that Darius Hystaspes was the Darius of Daniel; but whether he was or not, from the above extract it is clear that the king called "Darius the First" was not the father of Xerxes, but another Darius, who reigned before him; and this is enough for us to know, for Ptolemy expressly mentions that it was "Darius the First" in whose reign the eclipses of the moon occurred.

B. C. 510. With B. C. 510 began the reign of Cyrus. According to Xenophon, his father, Cambyses, was king of Persia; but from Herodotus it would appear that it was a tributary kingdom until Cyrus revolted from the Medes, at the end of the thirty-fifth year of Astyages, from which epoch Cyrus reigned twenty-nine years.

B. C. 509. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Crœsus was dethroned in the thirteenth of Darius" (Times of Daniel, p. 178); which, according to our chronology, was B. C. 509, the very year given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have shown in another article, published in the Crisis, to which I refer the reader for more on this point. In that article, we mentioned that Cyrus took Sardis in the second year of his reign, which makes his second year the same with the thirteenth of Darius Hystaspes.

B. C. 502. Eclipse of the moon. According to Ptolemy, "the moon was eclipsed one fourth of its diameter," at "two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight," at Babylon, "in the twentieth year of Darius"; and my tables eclipse four digits at five minutes after eleven, on November the 19th, B. C. 502; which fixes that as the twentieth year of the reign of Darius.

B. C. 497. "Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares" (Times of Daniel, p. 278). According to Xenophon, this Cyaxares lived in Media, and it would appear that until they took Babylon, Darius resided in Persia. This Cyaxares, the son of Astyages, reigned "twenty years," and was called "the elder Artaxerxes Assuerus" (Times of Daniel, p. 88). As he reigned at the same time with Darius, some of "the Jews supposed that Darius the Mede was Artaxerxes" (Times of Daniel, p. 259.

"The original Chaldee copy speaks of a king, called in the translation Artaxerxes, who came to the throne when Darius was an old man."—Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 101. And six years after the beginning of the reign of Cyaxares (who is here called Artaxerxes), Darius was "about threescore and two years old."—Dan. 5: 31. "Cyaxares is the same as Axares or Xerxes with the Persian Kai or king prefixed."—Times of Daniel, p. 276. Therefore Cyaxares is the same with king Xerxes, and Artaxerxes the great Xerxes; for, says Herodotus, "Xerxes signifies a warrior, and Artaxerxes a great warrior."

THE HOME OF THE BLEST.

Far, far beyond these skies of earth,
Lo, fairer skies appear,
Bright skies that know no shade of night,
There smiles the perennial year.

Oh, balmy are those skies afar,
And soft the airs that blow;
Low, clear and sweet the music, where
Pellucid waters flow.

Unfading flowers are blooming there,
That fear no withering blight;
In amaranthine beauty fair,
They smile in Eden light.

And sweetest notes from seraph lyres,
By zephyrs borne along,
Kindle into ecstatic fires
The vast, immortal throng.

Oh! Lord divine, where sorrows cease,
All hail thy golden dawn!
Oh! usher in, thou "Prince of Peace,"
The resurrection morn.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER THREE.

The second point is, what is all the world referred to? The word "world," of frequent occurrence in King James' version, is rendered from three or more different words in the original, viz., aion, kosmos, oikoumenee; the last mentioned word is the one rendered world in the 14th verse of this chapter. We find the same word in the first verse of the second chapter of Luke, where it undoubtedly refers to the Roman Empire. "It came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cesar Augustus, that all the world (oikoumenee) should be taxed." From this it is quite evident that the scriptural import of the term may be more limited in its application than classic authors would allow.

The classical definition of oikoumenee is, all the habitable world; but the decree of Cæsar Augustus did not extend to all the habitable portions of the earth's surface; but only to that portion over which the Roman government exercised a sovereign authority. All the world, in this instance, seems to refer to the civilized world, or that portion of it under the influence of political enlightenment.—Adopting this principle, and applying it to our own time, we should say the gospel of the kingdom is to be preached throughout the civilized world, for a witness to the nations, and then shall the end come. If this is a correct exposition of the text, then the work has been most faithfully accomplished within the last half century.

There have been men raised up within the last fifty years who have given their attention to the subject of the signs of the times, and felt called upon to give the note of warning to the world, that another king, one Jesus, is about to take to himself his great power, and reign. Enlightened Europe has been startled with the announcement,—"Behold, He cometh with clouds." The inhabitants of cold Siberia have long echoed the glorious proclamation. Many of the missionaries laboring among the oriental nations of Asia, are believing in and proclaiming the speedy personal reign of Christ; while Afric's sons have come bending submissively to the Prince of Peace, and waiting stand to give him welcome. The United States and British Provinces have become familiar with this movement, and may we not say this gospel of the kingdom is at this very time being preached in all the world for a witness? and if so, shall we not look for the end? So sure as Christ predicted it, this is God's last work of mercy.

Having given in course an exposition of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, from the first to the fourteenth verse, we have come to the second division of this prophecy.

We have before said that the second division of this prophecy is complex, or mixed, and to discover the real harmony of the discourse, we shall be under the necessity of bringing in some points noticed by Luke in recording the same subject, which seem to have been omitted by Matthew.

The fifteenth verse reads,—"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)." Now I claim that here is where the complexity of this subject exists. It is by saying that the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew is the same in subject matter with the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, which reads,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." It will be observed that the twenty-first verse of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, reads like the sixteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew. And this is why some have supposed that the fifteenth verse in Matthew, and the twentieth verse in Luke are the same.

But it is evident that the army mentioned in the twentieth verse of the twenty-first of Luke, cannot be the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, and quoted by the Savior in the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew, for the following reasons:—

1. If the eagles in the Roman army, being objects of worship, constituted the abomination of desolation, then they were in Jerusalem already; for at that very hour Jerusalem was garrisoned with Roman soldiers, who undoubtedly bore with them their eagles, being their military standards; whereas our blessed Lord referred to the prophecy as a future event, and not as something at that moment transpiring.

2. It would seem that if Christ referred to any thing connected with Jerusalem as the holy place, he must have spoken in regard to the Temple, and we have no evidence that the Romans ever planted their standards within the walls of the sanctuary; and if they did, it was not until Jerusalem's actual destruction, which would at once preclude the idea of its being a sign that the destruction of the city was near, for it had then already come.

3. The Roman army under Titus, around Jerusalem, could be of no utility to the disciples as a sign, for they had all retired from the city five years before, when Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, having besieged the city, raised the siege and departed.

4. The standing of the abomination of desolation in the holy place, is to be the occasion of a great tribulation upon the church of Christ; but that event was wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, who had been the murderers of our Lord, while the true believers were not affected by it; they were peacefully reposing in the mountain of Pella.

Having shown that the abomination of desolation cannot refer to the Roman army under Titus, before divining what it is, we shall endeavor to harmonize the seeming discrepancy. And this I think we are authorized to do by associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew with the 21st verse of the same chapter; and putting in the place of the 15th verse, the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke.

And farther, I think we are warranted to make this disposition of the subject from the consideration that the prophecy of Daniel, quoted by our Savior, presenting the abomination of desolation, is the occasion of a great tribulation. Thus: Daniel 11: 31–35,—"And arms shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate. And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries, but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by spoil, and by captivity, many days."

All must admit that our Lord, in Matt. 24: 15, quotes the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel. And if the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and the 31st verse of the 11th of Daniel, which present the abomination of desolation, are the same, why not the 33d verse of Dan. 11, which presents the falling of many people by flame, spoil and captivity many days; and the 21st verse of the 24th of Matt., which brings to view a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, refer to the same thing? And if so, we say again, it can have no reference whatever to the destruction of Jerusalem, but must refer to that long period of persecution which came on the church of Christ under the tyrannical reign of the "man of sin."

Let us read the discourse of our Lord, by putting the 20th verse of the 21st of Luke in the place of the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, and associating the 15th verse of the 24th of Matthew, with the 21st verse of the same chapter, and see if there is not a manifest harmony which cannot be produced in any other way.

Luke 21: 20,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Matt. 24: 16,—"Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (who so readeth, let him understand). . . . For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be." To me this looks like a harmony.

Jesus in the days of his flesh told his immediate disciples what course to pursue for their own preservation and safety, when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies. Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, besieged Jerusalem five years before it fell by Titus, and was in a fair way to subjugate the city; but for some unknown cause, says the historian, he raised the siege and departed. The Christians (whom Josephus calls many virtuous people), recognizing this as the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy, fled to the mountains of Pella, and five years afterwards, when Titus took the city, among the eleven hundred thousand that perished not a Christian was found.

We come now more particularly to consider the Abomination of Desolation, which has been the cruel instrument of shedding the blood of so many of the innocent sheep of Christ's fold. This is an important subject, and may the Spirit of the Lord guide us into all truth. Jesus told his disciples, when they should see the abomination stand in the holy place, "Whoso readeth, let him understand;" i. e., let him identify this power by comparing it with the picture drawn in prophecy.

The first mention of the abomination of desolation is made in the eighth of Daniel, and eleventh verse. "Yea, he magnified himself to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." The next instance is in Dan. 11: 31. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Again, in chapter 12: 11, we read, "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days."

Let us consider the work, character, and duration of this power, as presented in the above quotations. I claim that all this had its fulfillment in the papal power.

1. He magnifies himself to the prince of the host.

2. By him the daily sacrifice was taken away.

The host in this connection must refer to the church of God; and the prince of the host, to Jesus Christ, who is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, and is made Head over all things to the church.

In the eighth of Daniel we have presented the Roman power, both in its pagan and papal form. And this may be seen by comparing the vision with the interpretation, as given by the angels, as follows:

Vision (ver. 31),—"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the highest came up last."

Interpretation (ver. 20),—"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia."

Vision (ver. 5),—"And as I was considering, behold an he-goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and he ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

Interpretation (vers. 21, 22),—"And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power."

Vision (ver. 9),—"And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the pleasant land."

Interpretation (ver. 23),—"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up."

The king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, here referred to, must represent the Roman power.

Vision (ver. 10),—"And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them."

This same power is represented in another form under the symbol of a great nondescript beast, having great iron teeth and nails of brass, and stamping the residue with his feet.

Vision (ver. 11),—"Yea, HE magnified himself, even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down" (desecrated).

The difference between the phraseology of the tenth and eleventh verses, is observable. In the tenth verse it reads, "It cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground;" and in the eleventh verse it reads, "Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host."

I understand the pronoun "it" in the tenth verse to represent pagan Rome, and the "he" in the eleventh verse to represent papal Rome; for it is the pope who has magnified himself to an equal dignity with Christ, claiming to be the head and chief apostle of the church on earth. In the interpretation of the angel, the same distinctive characteristics of Rome in its pagan and papal form are presented as follows: "A king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," beyond doubt belongs to the Pagan Roman power. But the 24th verse, it appears to me, can only have its fulfillment in the Papal Roman power. Let us carefully read the 24th verse and connection, and consider its contents.

"And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." "And his power shall be mighty," but not by his own civil or military power;" i. e., the power of the pope shall be mighty, but not by his own civil or military power; but such will be his influence with kings and emperors, that he will, through them, wield the civil arm in destroying wonderfully the mighty and the holy people. Has not this application of the prophecy been demonstrated in the history of the Roman Hierarchy? Pagan Rome cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, in causing three millions of the saints to be put to death during the ten persecutions, but Papal Rome has taken away the daily sacrifice, by instituting a human mediatorship instead of Christ's, and destroyed wonderfully the mighty and the holy people, by causing the earth to drink the blood of more than fifty millions of the saints of the Most High.

EXPLANATION.

Solomon began to build the temple 143 years before the building of Carthage.
The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee.
The end of Jeroboam's 41st year fixed to B. C. 755 by a total eclipse of the sun.
The Jews affirm that the 18th of Josiah was a jubilee.
In the 8th of Jehoiakim, the 5th of Nebuchadnezzar, the 70 years series began.
From the carrying away from Jerusalem 368 years to the 4th Ptolemy.
The eclipse of Thales according to the Duke of Manchester.
The desolation, according to Philo, began 70 years before the second year of Darius.
The 25th year of the captivity was a jubilee according to the Jews.
Cambyses, king of Persia and father of Cyrus, reigned 19 years.
An eclipse of the moon, by which the 7th of Cambyses is fixed to B. C. 523.
Darius Hystaspes, or Darius the Median, the son of Ahasuerus, 36 years.
End both of the reign of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, and Ahasuerus.
Cyrus, son of Cambyses, reigned 29 years, beginning with the 12th of Darius.
Crœsus dethroned the 13th of Darius Hystaspes, according to the Duke of Manchester.
An eclipse of the moon, by which the 20th of Darius is fixed to B. C. 502.
Assuerus Artaxerxes the First reigned 20 years. He is the Artaxerxes of Ezra 4: 7.
Smerdis Magus slain according to the Parian Chronicle.
Belshazzar reigned 4 years, and was slain in the year B. C. 491.
Daniel at Shushan (Dan. 8: 2), which was builded by Darius Hystaspes.
Babylon overthrown in the 20th year of Cyrus, at the end of the 30th of Darius.
Cyrus and Darius reigned two years together after the overthrow of Babylon.
Darius overthrown or removed from Babylon at the end of the 22nd year of Cyrus.
Cyrus reigned seven years from the time of the acquisition of his empire.
The foundation of the temple laid in the second year of Cyrus.
Death of Darius Hystaspes, and Joshua went up to Assuerus in his twelfth year.
They cease to build the temple with the beginning of the jubilee of B. C. 485.

The return of Joshua in the first of Darius Longimanus and death of Artaxerxes.
The 81st from captivity, 70th from desolation, and 9th from ceasing to build the temple.
The temple completed in the 6th year of Darius the son of Hystaspes.
The battle of Marathon, according to the Parian Chronicle.
Death of Darius, son of Hystaspes, according to the Parian Chronicle.
Xerxes reigned 21 years, and Joiakim high priest 48 years.
The time Xerxes invaded Greece fixed by a total eclipse of the sun.
The battle of Salamis fixed to B. C. 456, by the Parian Chronicle.
The second year of the war fixed by an eclipse of the sun on the 31st of May.
Death of Xerxes, the fourth king (Dan. 11: 2), at the end of Daniel's seven weeks.
Artaxerxes and his brother Hystaspes together one year, according to Prideaux.
Artaxerxes having slain his brother Hystaspes, reigned 33 years.
"The ram pushing . . . so that no living might stand before him." Est. 3: 7–13.
The wall finished in 32nd year of Artaxerxes, from which the 62 weeks are recorded.
The death of Artaxerxes, from which there are 400 years to the birth of Christ.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

B. C. 983. Bosanquet, in his third chapter on Sacred and Profane Chronology, says,—"We next come to the important annals of the King of Tyre. These annals are quoted by Josephus (against Apion b. 1, s. 17,) as having been open to the public: that is, they were probably engraved on marble and set up in some public part of the city. They were transcribed by Menander from the Phœnician language into Greek, about the time when Berosus and Manetho wrote, and with Menander's Greek translation before him, Josephus writes." "Therein it is recorded that the temple was built by King Solomon at Jerusalem, one hundred and forty-three years and eight months before the Tyrians built Carthage." "What then is the date of the building of Carthage?" Polybius, who is one of the most scrupulous and truthful of ancient historians, was living at the time of the fall of Carthage, and he says that Carthage was destroyed after having existed for seven hundred years. The epitomizer of Livy gives the same number of years; Orisius the same; Solinus, as read by Scaliger, the same. Carthage was destroyed in the year B. C. 146. It was built, then, according to these authorities, in the year B. C. 846. And if, dropping the eight months, we add one hundred and forty-three years to this date, we come to the year B. C. 989 for the building of Solomon's temple—i. e., to the fourth year of Solomon.

According to the Bible Chronology, the fourth year of Solomon's reign was B. C. 983—which is only six years short of the time given by the "Annals of the Kings of Tyre."

"Niebuhr proposes to place the building of the temple even lower than B. C. 989. He would bring the date down to B. C. 956, or one hundred and eighty years before the first Olympiad. He makes his calculations by adding one hundred and forty-three years to the date of the foundation of Carthage, which he places in the year B. C. 813, and considers that date to be as historically certain as the date of the building of Boston or New York."

These two epochs for the foundation of Carthage, are reconciled thus: Says Bosanquet, "Polybius, Solinus and Orosius speak of the very origin of Carthage as a Tyrian settlement at the time of the first landing. Niebuhr's date is that of the foundation of the city itself." "Carthage was not builded immediately on the arrival of Dido in Africa. Strabo tells us that the island of Cothon was first occupied and fortified by the hostile Africans, who opposed her landing on the main shore." Then placing the seven hundred years against B. C. 146, they give us B. C. 846 for the time of "the arrival of Dido in Africa." "A citadel called Byrsa was then built. The people from the neighboring places flocked there for the purpose of traffic, until at length it assumed the appearance of a small state; and the Africans becoming desirous of retaining the strangers, with the consent of all, Carthage was at length built. Thus a considerable interval (say six years) must have elapsed between the landing of Dido and the building of the city." If this interval was just six years, it would give us B. C. 840 for the foundation of Carthage; and allowing twenty-seven years for the time spent in building the city, we have B. C. 813 for the date of the completion of the city. The "Annals of the Kings of Tyre" give one hundred and forty-three years and eight months from the building of Solomon's temple to the building of Carthage. This number of years, added to B. C. 840, at which time they began to build the city, gives B. C. 983 for the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of Solomon, and the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 975. The temple, according to Bishop Usher, was dedicated in the year of jubilee, and if so, it was dedicated in the year B. C. 975; hence the jubilee, combined with the one hundred and forty-three years to the building of Carthage, will give B. C. 983 for the fourth year of Solomon, at which time the foundation of the temple was laid, in the 480th year of the era of Ehud.

B. C. 755. Saith the Lord, "I will darken the earth in the clear day" (Amos 8: 9), and in a clear day nothing but a total eclipse of the sun darkens the earth; hence the end of Jeroboam's forty-one years is fixed by a total eclipse of the sun, found to have occurred in B. C. 755. For more on this see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 583. Says the Duke of Manchester, "The Jews affirm that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee. That the Jews are correct in this, would appear from Ezekiel 1: 13. In allusion to which the Duke adds, "The most probable idea is, that the thirtieth year dates from the previous jubilee. This has the authority of the Jews, whose testimony upon such a point I should think almost conclusive. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 561. According to Josephus, the [illegible] to the king of Babylon, commenced in the eighth year of Jehoiakim, which was the fifth of Nebuchadnezzar. (Jos. Ant. b. 10. c. 6, s. 1.)

B. C. 558. At the end of the reign of Jehoiachin, "the king of Babylon . . . . carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives. (2 Kings 24: 14.) According to Demetrius, "From the carrying away from Jerusalem to the reign of the fourth Ptolemy Philopater," there were just "three hundred and thirty-eight years and three months." In an article on the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon, we mentioned that the reign of Ptolemy Philopater commenced on the tenth day of the eighth month B. C. 220. To which, if we add 338 years and three months, we have the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558, for the beginning of the captivity.

According to Berosus, in "the twelfth year of Zedekiah (Jehoiachim) king of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar made war upon the Jews and Phœnicians, seventy years before the reign of the Persians; that is, before the first of Cyrus, in B. C. 488. Says Bosanquet, "Berosus elsewhere counts not quite sixty years from the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar to the end (beginning) of the reign of Cyrus." (Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 27.)

On page 97 of the Book of Daniel Opened, we mentioned that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years and about fifteen days, and his twelfth year was B. C. 558, from which take seventy, and we have B. C. 488 for the beginning of the reign of Cyrus. The nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar was B. C. 547, from which take sixty and we have B. C. 487; hence it was "not quite sixty years" to the first of Cyrus.

B. C. 549. An article in the "Penny Cyclopædia," in allusion to the eclipse of Thales, says, "If the eclipse mentioned by Diodorus to have taken place during the voyage of Agathocles, B. C. 310, be rightly given, a correction becomes necessary for the moon's distance from her nodes, which, being allowed for, no eclipse between B. C. 650 and 580 was central or total, at or near any part of Asia Minor." Therefore, either the date of the eclipse of Agathocles or Thales is false.

The Duke of Manchester, observing this, says, "There having been no eclipse suitable between B. C. 580 and 650, we must try some later date. On looking over the list in L'Art de Verifier les Dates, from B. C. 538 to 580, it will be seen that the eclipse which corresponds best with the above requisition, is June 19th, B. C. 549." Thus it will be seen that when the subject is duly examined, it must be admitted that I was correct in saying that the eclipse of Thales occurred on the 19th of June, B. C. 549. And this establishes the time of the reign of the kings of Media, for which see the Book of Daniel Opened.

B. C. 547. According to the document of Philo, there was "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation, eleven years." He calls the captivity of Joiakim "the Babylonish captivity," and makes it eighty-one years to the second year of Darius. Thus, "In the eighty-first year from the Bablyonish captivity, and the seventieth from the desolation."

B. C. 534. According to the testimony of the Jews, the twenty-fifth year of the captivity was a jubilee. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Jarchi challenges, what year begins on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" This is in allusion to Ezek. 40: 1.—"In the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after the city was smitten."

Says the Duke, "For this the Jewish interpreter has scriptural warrant. But if the twenty-fifth of Jeconiah's captivity was a jubilee, the fifth was the thirtieth from the jubilee preceding. These two marks, therefore, mutually confirm each other. (Times of Daniel, p. 35.)

B. C. 529. With B. C. 529 begins the first year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus. According to Clement, of Alexandria, Cambyses reigned nineteen years (Times of Daniel, p. 225). He does not say whether this was the father or son of Cyrus; but Herodotus does expressly say that "Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, reigned in all seven years and five months) (b. 3, c. 66). Therefore, we can only reconcile these two authors upon the supposition that Clement meant the father of Cyrus; and that he did reign about nineteen years appears from our table, where it will be seen that the nineteen years end with the beginning of the reign of his son Cyrus, at the expiration of the 35th year of Astyages; neither of which, it appears, died until many years after; for Xenophon supposed that Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was yet alive at the time Cyrus took Babylon.

B. C. 523. According to Ptolemy, "in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, . . . one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." And according to my tables, there was an eclipse of eight digits at ten o'clock, in the evening of July 16th, B. C. 523; hence, we conclude that the seventh year of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, was B. C. 523.

B. C. 521. With B. C. 521 began the reign of Darius Hystaspes, who, according to Herodotus, reigned thirty-six years. He is the first Darius mentioned in history; hence the same king called by Daniel "Darius the son of Ahasuerus" (Dan. 9: 1). And we learn from the book of Tobit (14: 5) that this "Assuerus" was the king that took Nineveh; therefore he must have been the same one called Astyages by Herodotus; and Prideaux says he took Nineveh. The Persians called him Arsames, as we learn from the monument erected by Darius. But in the "History of Armenia" he is called Ahasuerus, for, "We are told that "Ahasuerus, king of Media, had a dream full of portents. A mountain produced three warriors, which the wise men interpreted as an alliance between Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, and Tygranes, and of the overthrow of Ahasuerus by the two last, which happened accordingly." (Times of Daniel, p. 255). And it is well known that the Median king, who was overthrown by Cyrus, was the one called Astyages by Herodotus; who mentions that Astyages had two dreams, both of which "the Magi, who interpret dreams," explained as foretelling that the same Cyrus "would reign in his stead" (Herod. b. 1, c. 107). That which proves that this is the same dream, and overthrow of "Ahasuerus, king of Media," as alluded to in the "History of Armenia," is that in allusion to the time of "the overthrow of Ahasuerus by Cyrus and Tygranes," it is added, "At this period, Cyrus, accompanied by Tygranes, effected the conquest of Lydia" (Times of Daniel, p. 256).

Now all of this combined evidence must prove that the Astyages of Herodotus is the Ahasuerus of Daniel, hence a Median; therefore, says Daniel, "Darius the Median took the kingdom" (Dan. 5: 31).

Says the Duke of Manchester,—"I have shown that Darius the Mede was Darius Hystaspes;" and "Jornandes . . . speaks of Darius as son of Astyages" (p. 275). Josephus also says that he was "the son of Astyages" (Jos. Ant., b. 10, c. 11, s. 4). "And Nicephorus speaks of Darius son of Astyages, after taking Babylon, being himself overthrown by Cyrus. But Cirbied and Martin say that Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares; that Cyrus and Tygranes 'agreed that the newly conquered countries [of Assyria and Babylon] should not belong to either of them, but should become a kingdom tributary to Persia, and be governed by Darius, son of Astyages, prisoner in Armenia.' Two years afterwards Darius rebelled, and provoked a war in which he was overthrown and killed by Cyrus, who became universal monarch."—Times of Daniel, p. 276.

From this extract, it will be seen that Cyaxares is the brother of Darius; hence Prideaux and others are mistaken in supposing that this Cyaxares, as alluded to by Xenophon, is the Darius of Daniel. Says Bosanquet, "Is it not idle to tell us that Darius was Cyaxares. His title in Babylon was Darius. Neither Berosus nor any other historian of Babylonish affairs makes mention of any king of that title having been made king over the realm of the Chaldeans till the reign of Darius Hystaspes." Xenophon speaks of Hystaspes as "one of the equals in honor" with Cyrus (b. 4, c. 2, s. 46); but omitting his double name—Darius Hystaspes, he only calls him "Hystaspes." Herodotus admits that Hystaspes "was governor" (p. 201), and distinguished between the two by calling the second "Darius the son of Hystaspes"; but by giving the 36 years, which Darius Hystaspes reigned, to Darius the son of Hystaspes, he has caused many to believe that Darius Hystaspes was the same with Darius the son of Hystaspes, and thus caused great confusion in chronology.

Says the Duke of Manchester, "That some confusion existed in the chronology of Herodotus seems early to have been perceived; but I think the confusion becomes greater through the attempts made to clear it. Herodotus says that Darius was the first person who coined the dorics (b. 4, c. 166); but Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us that they were coined, not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius; by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians, who coined gold money. . . . The resemblance of the coin to the sculpture on the tomb of Darius Hystaspes is confirmatory of both denoting the same king."—Times of Daniel, p. 180.

Thus we think that we have abundant evidence for supposing that Darius Hystaspes was the Darius of Daniel; but whether he was or not, from the above extract it is clear that the king called "Darius the First" was not the father of Xerxes, but another Darius, who reigned before him; and this is enough for us to know, for Ptolemy expressly mentions that it was "Darius the First" in whose reign the eclipses of the moon occurred.

B. C. 510. With B. C. 510 began the reign of Cyrus. According to Xenophon, his father, Cambyses, was king of Persia; but from Herodotus it would appear that it was a tributary kingdom until Cyrus revolted from the Medes, at the end of the thirty-fifth year of Astyages, from which epoch Cyrus reigned twenty-nine years.

B. C. 509. Says the Duke of Manchester, "Crœsus was dethroned in the thirteenth of Darius" (Times of Daniel, p. 178); which, according to our chronology, was B. C. 509, the very year given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have shown in another article, published in the Crisis, to which I refer the reader for more on this point. In that article, we mentioned that Cyrus took Sardis in the second year of his reign, which makes his second year the same with the thirteenth of Darius Hystaspes.

B. C. 502. Eclipse of the moon. According to Ptolemy, "the moon was eclipsed one fourth of its diameter," at "two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight," at Babylon, "in the twentieth year of Darius"; and my tables eclipse four digits at five minutes after eleven, on November the 19th, B. C. 502; which fixes that as the twentieth year of the reign of Darius.

B. C. 497. "Astyages left two sons, Darius and Cyaxares" (Times of Daniel, p. 276). According to Xenophon, this Cyaxares lived in Media, and it would appear that until they took Babylon, Darius resided in Persia. This Cyaxares, the son of Astyages, reigned "twenty years," and was called "the elder Artaxerxes Assuerus" (Times of Daniel, p. 88). As he reigned at the same time with Darius, some of "the Jews supposed that Darius the Mede was Artaxerxes" (Times of Daniel, p. 259.

"The original Chaldee copy spoke of a king, called in the translation Artaxerxes, who came to the throne when Darius was an old man."—Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 101. And six years after the beginning of the reign of Cyaxares (who is here called Artaxerxes), Darius was "about threescore and two years old."—Dan. 5: 31. "Cyaxares is the same as Axares or Xerxes with the Persian Kai or king prefixed."—Times of Daniel, p. [illegible]. Therefore Cyaxares is the same as that king Xerxes, and Artaxerxes the great Xerxes; for, says Herodotus, "Xerxes signifies a warrior, and Artaxerxes a great warrior."

VALUABLE PREMIUMS

For New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

Grover & Baker's

($55) SEWING MACHINE,

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

Webster's ($12)

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of

Cruden's

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

The Premiums—New Subscribers.

Brethren and sisters are taking hold of the work of getting new subscribers with commendable earnestness. We are pleased to see it, and trust that others will be stirred up in like manner to engage with zeal and interest in the same good work. Thus shall they and we both reap a double benefit;—they, the premiums as the reward of their labor, and the satisfaction of having contributed their share in spreading the truth; and we, an increase of circulation, and a consequent enlargement of usefulness. Keep the ball rolling, brethren; the working time will soon be over. We give below a few extracts, as specimens of letters we have received:—

A minister in Western New York writes:—"I am going in for the Sewing Machine. I send you two subscriptions to-day. Look out for more in two weeks. I mean to make them all up (thirty-two) in January. I am pretty sure I can." Jan. 7th he writes again: "Enclosed I send you the following additional names (seven) with the money,—new subscribers. Please add them to my list for the Sewing Machine."

Another in the same State sends us five names, with the money, all "Sewing Machine" subscribers. Another eleven, another seven, and so on.

A sister writes from Niagara Co., N. Y.:—"A sewing machine is an article that I need, but I have no means to purchase, and no way of getting one except in the way you propose—getting new subscribers. So I have concluded to try. I may fail of getting the required number, but shall not regret it, if I do, for I highly esteem the paper, and would like to help increase its circulation. I send you the names of two new subscribers, to begin with, and expect to send more soon. $5.00 enclosed." M. T.

A brother in Vermont writes:—"Enclosed is $10.00 for four new subscribers for the World's Crisis for one year . . . Please send me a Bible Dictionary."

A sister in Rhode Island writes:—"I have long wanted a Concordance, but knew of no way to get one until I saw your kind offer in the Crisis. I have succeeded in getting three new subscribers, with the money, for the new year, for which please send me a Concordance."

And so they come,—threes, fives, tens, and so on.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The year to which many have looked for the end of the temporal power of the Pope has now begun. We may reasonably expect great events before twelve months are gone; but we cannot speak definitely till the veil is lifted that now hides the future. We feel anxious to have the days and weeks hasten along that we may witness the coming events. We long for the time when Jesus shall appear in all his glory. O come, loved One, and come quickly.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."—Dr. Watts.

Dear brethren and sisters, ours is a heart-cheering hope,—no other can compare with it in value; and it is continually growing brighter. It never looked so precious as now. The thought of soon seeing Jesus and the loved ones sleeping in him, is enrapturing. We can afford to be "made as the filth of the earth, and . . . the off-scouring of all things" (1 Cor. 4: 13) for such a "blessed hope" as this. Let us not be ashamed of it in any company where we may be placed. If the enemies of the cross sneer at us,

"Let us never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the world,
For we've all got the cross to bear;
It will only make the crown the brighter to shine,
When we have the crown to wear."

The more boldly we stand up for Jesus and his truth, the better we feel. It is no time to be cowardly, if we expect to be ready for the coming of our Lord. The brave soldiers of the cross are the ones who will wave the palms of victory, when the King comes. If we "put on the whole armor of God," we have nothing to fear; for we shall "be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Our foes are strong, but He that is for us is stronger than they all.

We may look for severe conflicts with the enemy this year; and unless we are wholly consecrated to the service of the Lord, we must not expect to conquer. Perilous scenes are before us; but with the christian armor on, no weapons formed against us will prosper. Let the consecration be complete, and our victory is sure.

PORTSMOUTH.

We spent the last day of the year 1865, at Portsmouth, N. H., and felt the approving smile of our heavenly Father. It was a good day in the Lord. A large audience was out all day; and in the evening seven came forward for prayers. The church is evidently gaining ground. One was converted a few evenings since, and appears decided to live a christian life; others are almost persuaded to start in the service of the Lord. There were thirty-six exhortations after the sermon, which were really comforting. Nearly all seemed resolved to live nearer to the Lord during the remainder of their lives. We could truly say it was good to be there.

TRACTS, TRACTS.

Now is the time to scatter tracts. We hope our brethren will take hold of the work in earnest this year. Time is short, the field is wide, and many hungry ones are waiting for the food that the tracts may afford. Let every one do something. All can help in this useful work if they cannot go and preach themselves. A little money laid out in tracts may be the means of saving many souls. Come, help us give the last notes of warning to the world.

☞ The article headed a "Crisis at Hand," is from a Baptist minister. May the Lord strengthen him to sound the note of alarm to a sleeping world. Many are waking up to see the perils of these times, and that we are almost to the end of the present dispensation; while the mass of the people seem to be more careless than ever.

AGE OF PROGRESSION.

We hear much about the progress of these days, and we are not disposed to dispute the fact; but we inquire in what direction is the progress? Is it for the better, or for the worse? Is it progress backwards, or an advance to a better state of things? The Bible answers,—"worse and worse," and we think facts are abundant to confirm our position.

The following is the dedication notice of the first Congregational church established in Troy, N. Y., about forty years ago. The minister's name was Shipman. One of the leading members was P. P. Stewart, who still holds fast to his principles, and who has invented the best cooking and parlor stoves. One acquainted with his life says:—"He receives his thousands per year, and gives most of it to the poor, and lives and dresses plain. His wife goes out in the streets and hunts up the poor children and feeds and clothes them."

The following is the dedication notice:—

"RELIGIOUS NOTICE.—The church in Seventh street, if Providence permit, will be opened for the worship of God and the accommodation of the public, next Sabbath, the 14th inst. Dedication sermon in the morning by the pastor, and a sermon by Merritt Bates in the afternoon. The public generally are invited to attend.

As we are happily free from debt, except $600 that will be due some years hence, for the lot on which it is built; and as we find no difficulty in sustaining religious instructions in an honorable way, we do not invite worshipers that we may profit by their presence. Their presence would pain us if we understood it to signify compassion for our weakness; and none need stay away for fear of oppressive taxation. We neither sell nor rent the house of God, much less do we dishonor God and corrupt his worshipers by resorting to 'donation parties' or 'religious (?) fairs' to support either 'our poor, our benevolence, or our worship,' yet all are amply supported.

The pulpit is honest, because free from all jurisdiction but that of God. It does not consult, but forms public opinion. It rebukes all sin—encourages all reform—teaches that honesty and humanity are the essential constituents and ornaments of piety—that God is dishonored when man is wronged, and that the gospel is an adequate remedy for all evils. Admission to ordinances is tendered to all on the same terms as is admission to the 'supper of the Lamb in heaven.' All who wish to share with us in rich and priceless privileges, may do so 'without money and without price.'"

4. We are now ready to inquire into the true cause of the phenomena of spiritual manifestations; and in answer to the question from what source do they proceed, we answer, from DEMONS. Who are they? "The angels that sinned," called also "evil angels," "unclean spirits," and "devils," or, more properly, "demons."

Who are the angels? An order of beings higher than man, who were created before the human race. When speaking of the origin of man, the Psalmist addresses the Lord and says:—"Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Then it follows that the angels existed before men, and are a little higher. Man could not be "made . . . a little lower than" himself; neither could he be made "a little lower than the angels," when there were none in existence. This proves that angels are not the spirits of men; for if they were, then there could be no angels till some man died; but when the first man was created, he was made "a little lower than the angels" who were then in existence.

The angels were on probation. This is evident from the fact that some of them "sinned." 2 Pet. 2: 4. Those that "kept . . . their first estate" are called the "holy angels," or "the angels of God"; while the "evil angels" (Ps. 78: 49) are called the devil's "angels."

The angels resemble men in their exterior form, and on this account have been mistaken for men. Hence we read—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 2. This proves that they are not disembodied human spirits, as some claim; because such could not eat and drink, and have their feet washed, as was the case with the angels who visited Lot, and others. In relation to those it is said—"There came two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom; and Lot seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face to the ground; and he said, Behold now, my lords turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet. . . . And they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat."—Gen. 19: 1-3. This account proves very clearly that they are real persons, with tangible organisms, like men; yet they are not made of dust as are men. This fact we learn from Jesus, who said, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 39. We read of Jesus,—"He took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham" (Heb. 2: 16); consequently, there is a difference between the nature of angels, and Christ. But the fact that angels are not "flesh and bones" or made of dust, like men, does not prove that they have no personal organisms; unless it be proved that every thing that is not made of "flesh and bones" is an immaterial thing, which would be truly nothing. A watch is not made of "flesh and bones," but it is a tangible object, that may be handled. So with the angels. There are many substances of which they may be formed, and not be "flesh and bones" like the Savior, who "took on him the seed of Abraham." We find no proof in the Bible that "a spirit," or an angel, is an immaterial being, or an etherial essence; but directly the opposite is most clearly taught,—that they are as truly real persons as are men; and so resemble them in their form, that they have been mistaken for human beings.

The good angels never have claimed that they were the spirits of men, or that they ever lived on our earth. They have always come on important business, spoken in harmony with the Bible, and have appeared in their own persons, instead of choosing some medium through whom to operate.

The angels have power to render themselves invisible, or to be seen by us, as they may choose. This is shown in the case of Balaam, when he was riding to a certain place for the purpose of cursing the children of Israel. When on his journey, "the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him." The animal he was riding "saw the angel," and endeavored to go around him. This was attempted several times, which caused Balaam to get angry at his beast, and to smite it with "a staff." After that, "the eyes of Balaam were opened, and he saw the angel." Num. 22.

We now see that angels are a class of beings higher than men, resembling them in their exterior form, but not formed of dust like men; that they were on probation, and some of them sinned and were afterwards called "evil angels," "unclean spirits," or "demons." We can see no way to avoid this conclusion only to deny the Bible.

We are aware that some hold that demons are nothing more than men's propensities; but we think a very little examination of the Scriptures on this point is sufficient to show that it is opposed to the Bible. In Jas. 2: 19, we read—"Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble." It cannot be said of men's propensities that they "believe and tremble." Again, the demons were the first to declare that Jesus was the true Messiah; by saying, "Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he rebuking them suffered them not to speak, for they knew that he was Christ."—Luke 4: 41. Is there any ground for saying that these were human propensities that were talking about Christ? We think such an idea is so absurd, that the candid have only to look at it to cause them to reject it.

Some claim that demons are the spirits of wicked men; and that the spiritual manifestations proceed from them. But those who hold this position, so far as we know, also teach that when wicked men die, their spirits go into "hell torment." We would like to ask the advocates of this view, how these wicked spirits of men got out of hell so as to come and visit their friends here upon the earth? Did they break out? or has the Lord let them out before the day of judgment? We wait for an answer; and remark in passing, that the demons of the Bible are never called human spirits; but are always spoken of as wicked beings, who are lying and "seducing spirits," co-operating with the Devil—the Prince of demons.

We next inquire, where do these demons dwell? In 2 Pet. 2: 4, we read, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." Where is the hell in which they are "reserved unto judgment"? We would state that the word here rendered "hell," occurs no where else in the Bible. Then, if we can ascertain the meaning of Tartarus in this passage, we shall know where the demons "are reserved unto judgment."

How shall we best ascertain the meaning of Tartarus? It is not the place where wicked men go at death, for they go to sheol or hades. It is not the place where the wicked are to be finally punished, for that is in gehenna. The word is not used to represent the abode of men in any condition; it is only applied to "the angels that sinned." Where is this Tartarus? Who will inform us? If we ask the heathen, some of them will tell us it is a place so deep in the earth that it will take a mass of iron nine days to fall to it, and when we get there we should find a place surrounded "by a river of fire, and by a triple wall, and guarded by a three-headed dog." They also taught that in this place is one Sisyphus trying to roll a stone to the top of a hill, which he will never succeed in accomplishing; another is doomed to perpetual thirst, in sight of plenty of water; another is continually treading upon a revolving wheel; another has a "vulture eternally devouring his entrails," etc., etc., all of which can only pass for heathen fables.

But the ancient Greeks also gave the word quite a different signification, which harmonizes with the Bible. "Dr. Wm. Ramsey, an able and learned writer, says,—'The word Tartarus means, according to Greek writers, in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of this material system.' . . . Dr. R. remarks, 'That place is, probably, at present, within the atmosphere of our earth.'

"The learned Ralph Cudworth, D. D., in his 'Intellectual System,' vol. iii., p. 363, while speaking of Peter's remark, says:—'And by Tartarus here, in all probability, is meant this lower caliginous (i. e., dark) air, or atmosphere of the earth, according to that of St. Austin concerning these angels, 'That after their sin, they were thrust down into the misty darkness of this lower air.' (De. Gen. ad Lit. lib. 3, cap. 10.)"

Suidas, an ancient writer, says it signifies "the place in the clouds," or, "in the air." It will be remembered that it is said of the great leader of the hosts who are opposed to the Lord, that he is "the prince of the power of the air."—Eph. 2: 2. The Scriptures also tell us of "the rulers of the darkness of this world," and of "spiritual wickedness in high places"; or, more literally, "wicked spirits in aerial regions."

Dr. Parkhurst, the lexicographer, says:—"It appears from a passage in Lucian, that by Tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds of this material creation."

Empedocles says:—"Our dull, lack-lustre globe is the doomed haunt and dungeon of evil angels, envious and malignant demons."

Dr. Whately says:—"The word used by Peter, which our translators render 'cast down to hell,' or 'Tartarus,' is to be understood of our dark, gloomy earth, with its dull clouds, foul vapors, and misty atmosphere. . . . Socrates called the abyss, or sea, Tartarus, as does also Plato, who elsewhere calls our dim, lack-lustre earth itself also Tartarus. Plutarch says our air . . . is called Tartarus, from being cold. Herein he is followed and supported by Lucian. And both Hesiod and Homer call it the 'aerial Tartarus.' In no other sense or way can St. Peter be understood and explained." Lucian says, "The great depth of the air is called Tartarus."

Grotius, an ancient and learned writer says: "That is called Tartarus which is lowest in anything; whether in the earth, or in the water, or, as here, in the air."

We think the point is now clearly established, that the word Tartarus, in 2nd Peter 2: 4, signifies the regions round about this earth. When Jesus was here, he frequently encountered the demons. As they were then in Tartarus, it follows that the word signifies "the bounds or verge of this material creation," as stated by Dr. Parkhurst, and not a place in the midst of the earth or sea. Had Jesus been in the sea, or in the earth, when talking with them, then there might be some reason to think that Tartarus meant the "lowest" part of the one in which he was situated; but as he was upon the earth, in the "airy Tartarus," none other could be meant.

Having found the locality of the demons, or "the angels that sinned," and that they are here "reserved unto judgment," we now pass to inquire what are they doing, and how do they accomplish their work? This will lead us, we think, to the true explanation of all the spiritual manifestations.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

The state of Europe is fast passing into a most interesting condition. The evidence is increasing on all sides to show that important changes must soon take place in the political affairs of the old world. All eyes are now turned to Italy and the critical condition of the Pope. We see but little room to doubt that the present is the last year of his temporal power. And when that is gone, we do not see how Papacy can prevail any more; for Daniel "beheld, and the same horn made way with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."—Dan. 7: 21-22.

An Italian correspondent of the New York Herald writing from Florence, under date of Dec. 7th, 1865, says:—

"It is not difficult to see that the peace of Europe is maintained solely through the general fear of assuming the responsibility of breaking it; and who can tell whether a war may not be brought on to-morrow by the mere force of present circumstances? Austria and Prussia may determine to settle the question of the duchies by an appeal to arms. Italy may bring on a war by invading Venetia, or Austria may attack Italy to-morrow. No one can know with any certainty whether a general or partial conflagration may not burst forth within a month."

We find the impression is deepening among thinking and observing men, that a great crisis in human affairs is to be opened soon. Among Bible students of all denominations, there is an increasing conviction that "the end of all things is at hand;" while the wicked are becoming more and more reckless. It looks like the time just before Daniel is to stand up for his lot, when "the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand." Now is the time for special prayer and watchfulness, if we would be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

ADVANCE OF CRIME.

The evidence continues to increase in favor of the sad fact, that crime is rapidly advancing in all directions. The passions of men are let loose as we have never seen them before. There seems to be an utter recklessness as to all the requirements of the Lord. Self-gratification appears to be the rule of action. Thieves, robbers, and murderers, multiply on every side. Sodom's days have returned; and we may expect to see the Redeemer soon. "The harvest is ripe." Soon the reapers will begin their work. Shall we be found among the wheat and be saved? Let us double our diligence, that we may be all ready.

CRIME IN TENNESSEE. The editor of the Nashville Union says:—"The vicinity of this city is full of thieves, robbers and murderers. Crime in every grade is rampant—goes almost unchecked. The malefactors go in gangs and single; they are both black and white, and sometimes these two classes operate together. They hover around from two to five miles from the city, so that they are out of the jurisdiction of the police, yet are near enough to waylay and rob all parties approaching or departing from the city.

They go armed to the teeth; carry rifles, government muskets and pistols; and are entirely reckless of human life, murdering as if it were a delightful pastime. They appear to take so much pleasure in killing that they would rather strike down their victim than to rob him unscathed.

Who these men are, and whence they come, it is difficult to say; but they conduct their operations with a boldness that must satisfy any one that they are beyond all redemption; that there is but a single way of preventing their further inroads—by hanging them. The ordinary penalties of the law have no terror for them."

MAN-WORSHIP, OR THE SPIRITUALISTS' GOD.

When we hear the Spiritualists talking about God, we know that many do not understand what they mean. The following from the Religio Philosophical Journal, of Oct. 14, 1865, an able Spiritualist paper, published in Chicago, will give the reader some idea of the views of Spiritualists, and the doctrines taught by the spirits. The writer says:—

"The world in all ages and nations has been befooled, befogged and bedeviled by a religion of fiction, it calls for a religion of fact. The God of Christendom and heathendom is but the hero of a stupendous romance. Angels, men and devils are minor characters of the romance; and eternity the great stage on which they have performed, and are still to perform. The human soul is fast outgrowing the religion of romance. It is calling loudly for a reality; for a simple matter of fact, every day practical God, and an immortality that shall come to it as a living reality. The progressive human soul calls for a God of immortality, that shall come to it and be made manifest in living men and women, and in all living relations. Millions are calling for a God to live with them, to care for them in going out and coming in. Millions are looking and longing for a flesh and blood God, whose presence and endorsements they can see and feel. They long for a God that can look at them through two living, loving, human eyes; that can hear them with two human ears; that can love them through a loving, tender, human heart, and fold them in a gentle, unselfish, human bosom.

My friends, my heart is very full when I speak or write on the needs of human nature, as they are being made manifest. I have one great starting point in my religion. It is this: Man's natural demands are God's only commands. . . .

Oh, that the time I have spent in looking after God and eternal life in that old Bible and among the dark sepulchres of the dead past, had been spent in studying the record engraven on my own body and soul.

Of all the obstacles to the freedom and progress of man, the popular theology is the greatest. To free the human soul from its despotism is the one great work of the present age."

The able writer goes on to say that Spiritualists should "organize," and make themselves "a power that shall be felt in every relation of life, a power competent, in a measure, to meet the demands of the hour."

Again he says:—"Let man be the one holy, invisible object in the universe, and all else second and subsidiary to him. That he may be so, let man be the one object of our highest and holiest reverence and worship."

The last sentence gives us a clear view of the God of the Spiritualists, as revealed to them by the spirits.

Here we learn that "MAN" should be "the one object of our highest and holiest reverence and WORSHIP." This is the teaching of the "new religion" taught by the spirits,—only a system of self-worship. It will be readily seen that the God of the Bible is entirely rejected; and that when the Spiritualists speak of God, they mean something very different from the christian's God. It is high time the veil was thrown off, and the people allowed to look at things as they are. Spiritualism denies "Father and Son," hence it bears the special mark of the "antichrist."

SUPPLIES FOR THE FREEDMEN.

Cold winter is upon them, and thousands are suffering from want and destitution. Their special needs now are clothing and bedding; and whatever more is done for them in this direction must be done speedily. The Treasurer has just sent five boxes and barrels to Elder Himes, at St. Louis and Memphis, and there is a call for more. Who will bestir themselves at once in this matter? Come, sisters, here is work for you. The poor suffering freedmen call for help. Will you give it, in the name of the Lord, and receive the Lord's blessing?

The inquiry is often made, What kind of supplies are needed for the freedmen? We answer, briefly, as follows:—

1. Cast off clothing, for old and young of both sexes, including hats, caps, shoes, socks, and outer and under garments of every description. Also, new clothing, or materials for the same, plain, coarse, and substantial. Garments for the women and children may be made of grey and blue flannels, denims, and heavy unbleached cotton. Pieces of old cloth for mending will always be of use.

2. Bedding, second hand or new; bedquilts, comforters, blankets, sheets, ticks, pillow-cases, etc. Also, materials for the same.

3. Sewing materials, and every thing needed in the manufacture of clothing, such as thread, yarn, tape, buttons, hooks and eyes, needles, pins, knitting-needles, scissors, thimbles, etc.

4. Light kitchen ware, such as tin plates, pails, cups, basins, baking-pans, spoons, knives and forks, etc.

5. Books, for general reading, of a plain and simple character. School books and Sunday-school books, old or new; Bibles, Testaments, primers, slates and pencils, steel pens, pen holders, ink stands, ink, writing books, paper, etc.

Pack them closely and carefully in a barrel or box (a barrel is better), mark and forward them to GEO. T. ADAMS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, at the same time enclosing in a letter to the same address a notice and list of the articles sent.

Come, sisters, set the kind and busy hands at work, at once, for the poor freed men, women and children. Let King Lemuel's eulogy of the virtuous woman, whose good deeds praise her in the gates, be yours:—

"She seeketh wool and flax,
And worketh willingly with her hands. . . .
She stretcheth out her hand to the poor;
Yea, she stretcheth forth her hands to the needy."

Then shall you, like her, be the "blessed" of the Lord, and "rejoice in time to come."

For the World's Crisis.

"LIFT, OR DIE."

DEAR SISTERS:—Did you read in the Crisis of Dec. 6th, the anecdote of the raising of a mill, and Bro. Grant's appeal? What were your emotions and resolutions while reading it? Did your hearts respond to the appeal, and did you say, to yourself and to God, "I will lift;" or did you excuse yourselves, and say, "I am so weak and little I can do nothing if I try?" Have you forgotten that

"The little moments, humble though they be,
Make the mighty ocean of eternity"?

The beautiful Temple of God, which is composed of living timbers, is near completion. The last "bent" is being raised; and it goes to its place the hardest of all; for it has not only the natural earthly attraction pulling it down, but it has to go against opposition, error, tradition, superstition, unbelief, and the horrible delusions of the spirits of devils. There have been a faithful few, who have been out in the wilderness, among the mountains, and over to "Hiram's," gathering in timber for the last broadside of the building. They have spent, under the dictation and direction of the master-builder, the vigor of youth and the strength of manhood, hewing and bringing in the different sticks and fitting them together. Now they are trying to raise the broadside to its place and secure it, lest the tempest, the whirlwind, and the flood, which is coming, shall strike and tear it asunder, and carry it into the stream that runs down to perdition.

There are but few who are lifting, and the burden is heavy. Sometimes it seems as though it was settling back to earth. The world stands looking on. If it falls, it will not only crush the timbers, and the workmen, but the spectators who look on are in danger, for if it falls their doom is sealed. Say, sisters, shall we rush to the rescue? Will we place ourselves shoulder to shoulder with the brave workmen who have toiled and lifted so long? Shall we not give what little strength we have to so good a cause? We may be weak, but can we not lift one pound? If we can, a hundred of us can lift a hundred pounds—that will be something.

The master-builder is crying, "Lift, or die!" Shall we look idly on and see the tired workmen under that immense load, straining every nerve for victory? Our friends and neighbors are in danger. Our sons and brothers are being led away by the errors of the wicked. Our children are being enticed by the vain allurements of an ungodly world. We must lift, and do what we can to save them. The longer we delay, the greater will be the peril. It will avail us nothing to run away, for "if" we "run from the fear" we "shall fall into the snare." Ye who have borne the burden so long, will you give over the struggle and say, "it cannot be done?" "No!" you every one exclaim, "no, we will still live or die." Sister! brother! lay member of the church of Christ, shall we look on and wish them success, but refuse to touch the load ourselves? No! we, too, must "lift or die!"

O for one general rally! Eternal life is at stake! The tide of evil is rising higher, and growing stronger. Soon every thing that is not made fast and secure on the eternal Rock will float away and sink into the dark caverns of eternal night. If we would find ourselves and our friends in the "world to come," we must take hold of the work and lift. Let every man, woman and child be at their post. Mothers! lift for yourselves and your children. Wives! lift for your husbands. Fathers! lift for your sons and neighbors. Sisters! for your brothers; young men for your companions and friends; children, for your parents; christians, for yourself and the world. Once more, all together, "LIFT—or die!"

Sinner, there is a chance for you. The building is nearly completed, but there is a little more timber wanted for the roof. Some of God's hewers are still out, trying to collect a few more sticks. Will you not be gathered and join in the work? Whoever works upon this building will have a place in it secure from the storm which is about to burst upon a wicked world. Make application without delay. The Master will not turn you off if you apply soon. Make haste, for time is short. When the building is completed there is to be a great feast in honor of the Master-builder. O, come while yet there is room. When the Master cries, "It is finished," and shuts the door, it will be too late. God help us to be in earnest, and work while the day lasts, for the night cometh, in which no man can work.

For the World's Crisis.

SCATTERING.

The article about scattering, by Bro. J. T. K., in last week's Crisis, is good so far as it goes; but there is more about scattering. Says Jesus, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Again,—"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Paul exhorts the elders to "take heed unto themselves and the flock," for, said he, "I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock." Then there is danger even among ourselves of being deceived. Hear Paul again. "Of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Would limits allow, I would quote from 1 Cor. 3: 1; John 4: 1, and comment on same; but do "suffer the word of exhortation" from Paul, Rom. 16: 17, 18,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions . . . . (sects,—see margin 1 Cor. 11: 18), contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple" (or harmless—margin).

When the Shepherd of Israel was smitten, the sheep (such as did not "turn away and walk no more with him") were scattered, but were soon gathered into little flocks with under shepherds, and the word of God prevailed. Truth was mighty; Satan's empire was shaken; and he soon commenced his dividing work. How many willing tools he found ready to do his scattering work, who had "crept in unawares"; and the story of the nominal church ever since abounds with sickening details of the horrid work done by these "ravening wolves," exciting the satire of the Pagan and Infidel historian, as they wrote the history of these professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Thus was much of the strength of the early christians worse than lost, being diverted from their specific work of preaching Christ and the resurrection, and salvation only in his name. They expended their strength in battling for their leaders, who were continually leading off disciples and making new sects.

So in our times, especially in 1840, and on, the specific work has been to arouse a sleepy church, and proclaim to the world the speedy coming of earth's rightful King; and in our land, after the death of Bro. Miller, thousands cut off from the sects have followed apostolic precedent and formed little churches; and how God once did bless them! But history repeats itself again. Satan still lives, is the "same old serpent"; and see the sad results! a shut door in '44, and since then see the side issues; see the disciples who follow their leaders, "who by good words and fair speeches deceive the simple." This may seem unjust, but all cannot be right. And now we have Seventh-day, future age, no life to the wicked, three or four definite time divisions, and several minor ones, some on ordinances, such as feet-washing, re-baptizing, and some very particular about the mode, when I think it immaterial how, provided we agree that they must be buried—immersed.

Like the early christians, many of our people now, instead of keeping at their specific

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

VALUABLE PREMIUMS

For New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

Grover & Baker's ($55) SEWING MACHINE,

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, BUSINESS AGENT.

The Premiums—New Subscribers.

Brethren and sisters are taking hold of the work of getting new subscribers with commendable earnestness. We are pleased to see it, and trust that others will be stirred up in like manner to engage with zeal and interest in the same good work. Thus shall they and we both reap a double benefit;—they, the premiums as the reward of their labor, and the satisfaction of having contributed their share in spreading the truth; and we, an increase of circulation, and a consequent enlargement of usefulness. Keep the ball rolling, brethren; the working time will soon be over. We give below a few extracts, as specimens of letters we have received:—

A minister in Western New York writes:—"I am going in for the Sewing Machine. I send you two subscriptions to-day. Look out for more in two weeks. I mean to make them all up (thirty-two) in January. I am pretty sure I can." Jan. 7th he writes again: "Enclosed I send you the following additional names (seven) with the money,—new subscribers. Please add them to my list for the Sewing Machine."

Another in the same State sends us five names, with the money, all "Sewing Machine" subscribers. Another eleven, another seven, and so on.

A sister writes from Niagara Co., N. Y.:—"A sewing machine is an article that I need, but I have no means to purchase, and no way of getting one except in the way you propose—getting new subscribers. So I have concluded to try. I may fail of getting the required number, but shall not regret it, if I do, for I highly esteem the paper, and would like to help increase its circulation. I send you the names of two new subscribers, to begin with, and expect to send more soon. $5.00 enclosed." M. Y.

A brother in Vermont writes:—"Enclosed is $10.00 for four new subscribers for the World's Crisis for one year . . . Please send me a Bible Dictionary."

A sister in Rhode Island writes:—"I have long wanted a Concordance, but knew of no way to get one until I saw your kind offer in the Crisis. I have succeeded in getting three new subscribers, with the money, for the new year, for which please send me a Concordance."

And so they come,—threes, fives, tens, and so on.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

1866.

The year to which many have looked for the end of the temporal power of the Pope has now begun. We may reasonably expect great events before twelve months are gone; but we cannot speak definitely till the veil is lifted that now hides the future. We feel anxious to have the days and weeks hasten along that we may witness the coming events. We long for the time when Jesus shall appear in all his glory. O come, loved One, and come quickly.

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."—Dr. Watts.

Dear brethren and sisters, ours is a heart-cheering hope,—no other can compare with it in value; and it is continually growing brighter. It never looked so precious as now. The thought of soon seeing Jesus and the loved ones sleeping in him, is enrapturing. We can afford to be "made as the filth of the earth, and . . . the off-scouring of all things" (1 Cor. 4: 13) for such a "blessed hope" as this. Let us not be ashamed of it in any company where we may be placed. If the enemies of the cross sneer at us,

"Let us never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the world,
For we've all got the cross to bear;
It will only make the crown the brighter to shine,
When we have the crown to wear."

The more boldly we stand up for Jesus and his truth, the better we feel. It is no time to be cowardly, if we expect to be ready for the coming of our Lord. The brave soldiers of the cross are the ones who will wave the palms of victory, when the King comes. If we "put on the whole armor of God," we have nothing to fear; for we shall "be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Our foes are strong, but He that is for us is stronger than they all.

We may look for severe conflicts with the enemy this year; and unless we are wholly consecrated to the service of the Lord, we must not expect to conquer. Perilous scenes are before us; but with the christian armor on, no weapons formed against us will prosper. Let the consecration be complete, and our victory is sure.

PORTSMOUTH.

We spent the last day of the year 1865, at Portsmouth, N. H., and felt the approving smile of our heavenly Father. It was a good day in the Lord. A large audience was out all day; and in the evening seven came forward for prayers. The church is evidently gaining ground. One was converted a few evenings since, and appears decided to live a christian life; others are almost persuaded to start in the service of the Lord. There were thirty-six exhortations after the sermon, which were really comforting. Nearly all seemed resolved to live nearer to the Lord during the remainder of their lives. We could truly say it was good to be there.

TRACTS, TRACTS.

Now is the time to scatter tracts. We hope our brethren will take hold of the work in earnest this year. Time is short, the field is wide, and many hungry ones are waiting for the food that the tracts may afford. Let every one do something. All can help in this useful work if they cannot go and preach themselves. A little money laid out in tracts may be the means of saving many souls. Come, help us give the last notes of warning to the world.

☞ The article headed a "Crisis at Hand," is from a Baptist minister. May the Lord strengthen him to sound the note of alarm to a sleeping world. Many are waking up to see the perils of these times, and that we are almost to the end of the present dispensation; while the mass of the people seem to be more careless than ever.

AGE OF PROGRESSION.

We hear much about the progress of these days, and we are not disposed to dispute the fact; but we inquire in what direction is the progress? Is it for the better, or for the worse? Is it progress backwards, or an advance to a better state of things? The Bible answers,—"worse and worse," and we think facts are abundant to confirm our position.

The following is the dedication notice of the first Congregational church established in Troy, N. Y., about forty years ago. The minister's name was Shipman. One of the leading members was P. P. Stewart, who still holds fast to his principles, and who has invented the best cooking and parlor stoves. One acquainted with his life says:—"He receives his thousands per year, and gives most of it to the poor, and lives and dresses plain. His wife goes out in the streets and hunts up the poor children and feeds and clothes them."

The following is the dedication notice:—

"RELIGIOUS NOTICE.—The church in Seventh street, if Providence permit, will be opened for the worship of God and the accommodation of the public, next Sabbath, the 16th inst. Dedication sermon in the morning by the pastor, and a sermon by Marriot Bates in the afternoon. The public generally are invited to attend.

As we are happily free from debt, except $600 that will be due some years hence, for the lot on which we built; and as we find difficulty in obtaining religious instructions in an honorable way, we do not invite worshipers that we may profit by their presence. Their [illegible] would pain us if we understood it to signify compassion for our weakness; and none need stay away for fear of oppressive taxation. We neither sell nor rent the house of God, much less do we dishonor God and corrupt his worshipers by resorting to 'donation parties' or 'religious (?) fairs' to support either 'our poor, our benevolence, or our worship,' yet all are amply supported.

The pulpit is honest, because free from all jurisdiction but that of God. It does not consult, but forms public opinion. It rebukes all sin—encourages all reform—teaches that honesty and humanity are the essential constituents and ornaments of piety—that God is dishonored when man is wronged, and that the gospel is an adequate remedy for all evils. Admission to ordinances is tendered to all on the same terms as is admission to the 'supper of the Lamb in heaven.' All who wish to share with us in rich and priceless privileges, may do so 'without money and without price.'"

4. We are now ready to inquire into the true cause of the phenomena of spiritual manifestations; and in answer to the question from what source do they proceed, we answer, from DEMONS. Who are they? "The angels that sinned," called also "evil angels," "unclean spirits," and "devils," or, more properly, "demons."

Who are the angels? An order of beings higher than man, who were created before the human race. When speaking of the origin of man, the Psalmist addresses the Lord and says:—"Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Then it follows that the angels existed before men, and are a little higher. Man could not be "made . . . a little lower than" himself; neither could he be made "a little lower than the angels," when there were none in existence. This proves that angels are not the spirits of men; for if they were, then there could be no angels till some man died; but when the first man was created, he was made "a little lower than the angels" who were then in existence.

The angels were on probation. This is evident from the fact that some of them "sinned." 2 Pet. 2: 4. Those that "kept . . . their first estate" are called the "holy angels," or "the angels of God"; while the "evil angels" (Ps. 78: 49) are called the devil's "angels."

The angels resemble men in their exterior form, and on this account have been mistaken for men. Hence we read—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 2. This proves that they are not disembodied human spirits, as some claim; because such could not eat and drink, and have their feet washed, as was the case with the angels who visited Lot, and others. In relation to those it is said—"There came two angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom; and Lot seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face to the ground; and he said, Behold now, my lords turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet. . . . And they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat."—Gen. 19: 1-3. This account proves very clearly that they are real persons, with tangible organisms, like men; yet they are not made of dust as are men. This fact we learn from Jesus, who said, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 39. We read of Jesus,—"He took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham" (Heb. 2: 16); consequently, there is a difference between the nature of angels, and Christ. But the fact that angels are not "flesh and bones" or made of dust, like men, does not prove that they have no personal organisms; unless it be proved that every thing that is not made of "flesh and bones" is an immaterial thing, which would be truly nothing. A watch is not made of "flesh and bones," but it is a tangible object, that may be handled. So with the angels. There are many substances of which they may be formed, and not be "flesh and bones" like the Savior, who "took on him the seed of Abraham." We find no proof in the Bible that "a spirit," or an angel, is an immaterial being, or an etherial essence; but directly the opposite is most clearly taught,—that they are as truly real persons as are men; and so resemble them in their form, that they have been mistaken for human beings.

The good angels never have claimed that they were the spirits of men, or that they ever lived on our earth. They have always come on important business, spoken in harmony with the Bible, and have appeared in their own persons, instead of choosing some medium through whom to operate.

The angels have power to render themselves invisible, or to be seen by us, as they may choose. This is shown in the case of Balaam, when he was riding to a certain place for the purpose of cursing the children of Israel. When on his journey, "the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him." The animal he was riding "saw the angel," and endeavored to go around him. This was attempted several times, which caused Balaam to get angry at his beast, and to smite it with "a staff." After that, "the eyes of Balaam were opened, and he saw the angel." Num. 22.

We now see that angels are a class of beings higher than men, resembling them in their exterior form, but not formed of dust like men; that they were on probation, and some of them sinned and were afterwards called "evil angels," "unclean spirits," or "demons." We can see no way to avoid this conclusion only to deny the Bible.

We are aware that some hold that demons are nothing more than men's propensities; but we think a very little examination of the Scriptures on this point is sufficient to show that it is opposed to the Bible. In Jas. 2: 19, we read—"Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble." It cannot be said of men's propensities that they "believe and tremble." Again, the demons were the first to declare that Jesus was the true Messiah, by saying, "Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he rebuking them suffered them not to speak, for they knew that he was Christ."—Luke 4: 41. Is there any ground for saying that these were human propensities that were talking about Christ? We think such an idea is so absurd, that the candid have only to look at it to cause them to reject it.

Some claim that demons are the spirits of wicked men; and that the spiritual manifestations proceed from them. But those who hold this position, so far as we know, also teach that when wicked men die, their spirits go into "hell torment." We would like to ask the advocates of this view, how these wicked spirits of men got out of hell so as to come and visit their friends here upon the earth? Did they break out? or has the Lord let them out before the day of judgment? We wait for an answer; and remark in passing, that the demons of the Bible are never called human spirits; but are always spoken of as wicked beings, who are lying and "seducing spirits," co-operating with the Devil—the Prince of demons.

We next inquire, where do these demons dwell? In 2 Pet. 2: 4, we read, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." Where is the hell in which they are "reserved unto judgment"? We would state that the word here rendered "hell," occurs no where else in the Bible. Then, if we can ascertain the meaning of Tartarus in this passage, we shall know where the demons "are reserved unto judgment."

How shall we best ascertain the meaning of Tartarus? It is not the place where wicked men go at death, for they go to sheol or hades. It is not the place where the wicked are to be finally punished, for that is in gehenna. The word is not used to represent the abode of men in any condition; it is only applied to "the angels that sinned." Where is this Tartarus? Who will inform us? If we ask the heathen, some of them will tell us it is a place so deep in the earth that it will take a mass of iron nine days to fall to it, and when we get there we should find a place surrounded "by a river of fire, and by a triple wall, and guarded by a three-headed dog." They also taught that in this place is one Sisyphus trying to roll a stone to the top of a hill, which he will never succeed in accomplishing; another is doomed to perpetual thirst, in sight of plenty of water; another is continually treading upon a revolving wheel; another has a "vulture eternally devouring his entrails," etc., etc., all of which can only pass for heathen fables.

But the ancient Greeks also gave the word quite a different signification, which harmonizes with the Bible. "Dr. Wm. Ramsey, an able and learned writer, says,—'The word Tartarus means, according to Greek writers, in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of this material system.' . . . Dr. R. remarks, 'That place is, probably, at present, within the atmosphere of our earth.'

"The learned Ralph Cudworth, D. D., in his 'Intellectual System,' vol. iii., p. 363, while speaking of Peter's remark, says:—'And by Tartarus here, in all probability, is meant this lower caliginous (i. e., dark) air, or atmosphere of the earth, according to that of St. Austin concerning these angels, 'That after their sin, they were thrust down into the misty darkness of this lower air.' (De. Gen. ad Lit. lib. 3, cap. 10.)"

Suidas, an ancient writer, says it signifies "the place in the clouds," or, "in the air." It will be remembered that it is said of the great leader of the hosts who are opposed to the Lord, that he is "the prince of the power of the air."—Eph. 2: 2. The Scriptures also tell us of "the rulers of the darkness of this world," and of "spiritual wickedness in high places"; or, more literally, "wicked spirits in aerial regions."

Dr. Parkhurst, the lexicographer, says:—"It appears from a passage in Lucian, that by Tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds of this material creation."

Empedocles says:—"Our dull, lack-lustre globe is the doomed haunt and dungeon of evil angels, envious and malignant demons."

Dr. Whately says:—"The word used by Peter, which our translators render 'cast down to hell,' or 'Tartarus,' is to be understood of our dark, gloomy earth, with its dull clouds, foul vapors, and misty atmosphere. . . . Socrates called the abyss, or sea, Tartarus, as does also Plato, who elsewhere calls our dim, lack-lustre earth itself also Tartarus. Plutarch says our air . . . is called Tartarus, from being cold. Herein he is followed and supported by Lucian. And both Hesiod and Homer call it the 'aerial Tartarus.' In no other sense or way can St. Peter be understood and explained." Lucian says, "The great depth of the air is called Tartarus."

Grotius, an ancient and learned writer says: "That is called Tartarus which is lowest in anything; whether in the earth, or in the water, or, as here, in the air."

We think the point is now clearly established, that the word Tartarus, in 2nd Peter 2: 4, signifies the regions round about this earth. When Jesus was here, he frequently encountered the demons. As they were then in Tartarus, it follows that the word signifies "the bounds or verge of this material creation," as stated by Dr. Parkhurst, and not a place in the midst of the earth or sea. Had Jesus been in the sea, or in the earth, when talking with them, then there might be some reason to think that Tartarus meant the "lowest" part of the one in which he was situated; but as he was upon the earth, in the "airy Tartarus," none other could be meant.

Having found the locality of the demons, or "the angels that sinned," and that they are here "reserved unto judgment," we now pass to inquire what are they doing, and how do they accomplish their work? This will lead us, we think, to the true explanation of all the spiritual manifestations.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

The state of Europe is fast passing into a most interesting condition. The evidence is increasing on all sides to show that important changes must soon take place in the political affairs of the old world. All eyes are now turned to Italy and the critical condition of the Pope. We see but little room to doubt that the present is the last year of his temporal power. And when that is gone, we do not see how Papacy can prevail any more; for Daniel "beheld, and the same horn made way with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."—Dan. 7: 21-22.

An Italian correspondent of the New York Herald writing from Florence, under date of Dec. 7th, 1865, says:—

"It is not difficult to see that the peace of Europe is maintained solely through the general fear of assuming the responsibility of breaking it; and who can tell whether a war may not be brought on to-morrow by the mere force of present circumstances? Austria and Prussia may determine to settle the question of the duchies by an appeal to arms. Italy may bring on a war by invading Venetia, or Austria may attack Italy to-morrow. No one can know with any certainty whether a general or partial conflagration may not burst forth within a month."

We find the impression is deepening among thinking and observing men, that a great crisis in human affairs is to be opened soon. Among Bible students of all denominations, there is an increasing conviction that "the end of all things is at hand;" while the wicked are becoming more and more reckless. It looks like the time just before Daniel is to stand up for his lot, when "the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand." Now is the time for special prayer and watchfulness, if we would be ready for the coming of the Son of man.

ADVANCE OF CRIME.

The evidence continues to increase in favor of the sad fact, that crime is rapidly advancing in all directions. The passions of men are let loose as we have never seen them before. There seems to be an utter recklessness as to all the requirements of the Lord. Self-gratification appears to be the rule of action. Thieves, robbers, and murderers, multiply on every side. Sodom's days have returned; and we may expect to see the Redeemer soon. "The harvest is ripe." Soon the reapers will begin their work. Shall we be found among the wheat and be saved? Let us double our diligence, that we may be all ready.

CRIME IN TENNESSEE. The editor of the Nashville Union says:—"The vicinity of this city is full of thieves, robbers and murderers. Crime in every grade is rampant—goes almost unchecked. The malefactors go in gangs and single; they are both black and white, and sometimes these two classes operate together. They hover around from two to five miles from the city, so that they are out of the jurisdiction of the police, yet are near enough to waylay and rob all parties approaching or departing from the city.

They go armed to the teeth; carry rifles, government muskets and pistols; and are entirely reckless of human life, murdering as if it were a delightful pastime. They appear to take so much pleasure in killing that they would rather strike down their victim than to rob him unscathed.

Who these men are, and whence they come, it is difficult to say; but they conduct their operations with a boldness that must satisfy any one that they are beyond all redemption; that there is but a single way of preventing their further inroads—by hanging them. The ordinary penalties of the law have no terror for them."

MAN-WORSHIP, OR THE SPIRITUALISTS' GOD.

When we hear the Spiritualists talking about God, we know that many do not understand what they mean. The following from the Religio Philosophical Journal, of Oct. 14, 1865, an able Spiritualist paper, published in Chicago, will give the reader some idea of the views of Spiritualists, and the doctrines taught by the spirits. The writer says:—

"The world in all ages and nations has been befooled, befogged and bedeviled by a religion of fiction; it calls for a religion of fact. The God of Christendom and heathendom is but the hero of a stupendous romance. Angels, men and devils are minor characters of the romance; and eternity the great stage on which they have performed, and are still to perform. The human soul is fast outgrowing the religion of romance. It is calling loudly for a reality; for a simple matter of fact, every day practical God, and an immortality that shall come to it as a living reality. The progressive human soul calls for a God of immortality, that shall come to it and be made manifest in living men and women, and in all living relations. Millions are calling for a God to live with them, to care for them in going out and coming in. Millions are looking and longing for a flesh and blood God, whose presence and endorsements they can see and feel. They long for a God that can look at them through two living, loving, human eyes; that can hear them with two human ears; that can love them through a loving, tender, human heart, and fold them in a gentle, unselfish, human bosom.

My friends, my heart is very full when I speak or write on the needs of human nature, as they are being made manifest. I have one great starting point in my religion. It is this: Man's natural demands are God's only commands. . . .

Oh, that the time I have spent in looking after God and eternal life in that old Bible and among the dark sepulchres of the dead past, had been spent in studying the record engraven on my own body and soul.

Of all the obstacles to the freedom and progress of man, the popular theology is the greatest. To free the human soul from its despotism is the one great work of the present age."

The able writer goes on to say that Spiritualists should "organize," and make themselves "a power that shall be felt in every relation of life, a power competent, in a measure, to meet the demands of the hour."

Again he says:—"Let man be the one holy, invisible object in the universe, and all else second and subsidiary to him. That he may be so, let man be the one object of our highest and holiest reverence and worship."

The last sentence gives us a clear view of the God of the Spiritualists, as revealed to them by the spirits.

Here we learn that "MAN" should be "the one object of our highest and holiest reverence and WORSHIP." This is the teaching of the "new religion" taught by the spirits,—only a system of self-worship. It will be readily seen that the God of the Bible is entirely rejected; and that when the Spiritualists speak of God, they mean something very different from the christian's God. It is high time the veil was thrown off, and the people allowed to look at things as they are. Spiritualism denies "Father and Son," hence it bears the special mark of the "antichrist."

SUPPLIES FOR THE FREEDMEN.

Cold winter is upon them, and thousands are suffering from want and destitution. Their special needs now are clothing and bedding; and whatever more is done for them in this direction must be done speedily. The Treasurer has just sent five boxes and barrels to Elder Himes, at St. Louis and Memphis, and there is a call for more. Who will bestir themselves at once in this matter? Come, sisters, here is work for you. The poor suffering freedmen call for help. Will you give it, in the name of the Lord, and receive the Lord's blessing?

The inquiry is often made, What kind of supplies are needed for the freedmen? We answer, briefly, as follows:—

1. Cast off clothing, for old and young of both sexes, including hats, caps, shoes, socks, and outer and under garments of every description. Also, new clothing, or materials for the same, plain, coarse, and substantial. Garments for the women and children may be made of grey and blue flannels, denims, and heavy unbleached cotton. Pieces of old cloth for mending will always be of use.

2. Bedding, second hand or new; bedquilts, comforters, blankets, sheets, ticks, pillow-cases, etc. Also, materials for the same.

3. Sewing materials, and every thing needed in the manufacture of clothing, such as thread, yarn, tape, buttons, hooks and eyes, needles, pins, knitting-needles, scissors, thimbles, etc.

4. Light kitchen ware, such as tin plates, pails, cups, basins, baking-pans, spoons, knives and forks, etc.

5. Books, for general reading, of a plain and simple character. School books and Sunday-school books, old or new; Bibles, Testaments, primers, slates and pencils, steel pens, pen holders, ink stands, ink, writing books, paper, etc.

Pack them closely and carefully in a barrel or box (a barrel is better), mark and forward them to GEO. T. ADAMS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, at the same time enclosing in a letter to the same address a notice and list of the articles sent.

Come, sisters, set the kind and busy hands at work, at once, for the poor freed men, women and children. Let King Lemuel's eulogy of the virtuous woman, whose good deeds praise her in the gates, be yours:—

"She seeketh wool and flax,
And worketh willingly with her hands....
She stretcheth out her hand to the poor;
Yea, she stretcheth forth her hands to the needy."

Then shall you, like her, be the "blessed" of the Lord, and "rejoice in time to come."

For the World's Crisis.

"LIFT, OR DIE."

DEAR SISTERS:—Did you read in the Crisis of Dec. 6th, the anecdote of the raising of a mill, and Bro. Grant's appeal? What were your emotions and resolutions while reading it? Did your hearts respond to the appeal, and did you say, to yourself and to God, "I will lift;" or did you excuse yourselves, and say, "I am so weak and little I can do nothing if I try?" Have you forgotten that

"The little moments, humble though they be,
Make the mighty ocean of eternity"?

The beautiful Temple of God, which is composed of living timbers, is near completion. The last "bent" is being raised; and it goes to its place the hardest of all; for it has not only the natural earthly attraction pulling it down, but it has to go against opposition, error, tradition, superstition, unbelief, and the horrible delusions of the spirits of devils. There have been a faithful few, who have been out in the wilderness, among the mountains, and over to "Hiram's," gathering in timber for the last broadside of the building. They have spent, under the dictation and direction of the master-builder, the vigor of youth and the strength of manhood, hewing and bringing in the different sticks and fitting them together. Now they are trying to raise the broadside to its place and secure it, lest the tempest, the whirlwind, and the flood, which is coming, shall strike and tear it asunder, and carry it into the stream that runs down to perdition.

There are but few who are lifting, and the burden is heavy. Sometimes it seems as though it was settling back to earth. The world stands looking on. If it falls, it will not only crush the timbers, and the workmen, but the spectators who look on are in danger, for if it falls their doom is sealed. Say, sisters, shall we rush to the rescue? Will we place ourselves shoulder to shoulder with the brave workmen who have toiled and lifted so long? Shall we not give what little strength we have to so good a cause? We may be weak, but can we not lift one pound? If we can, a hundred of us can lift a hundred pounds—that will be something.

The master-builder is crying, "Lift, or die!" Shall we look idly on and see the tired workmen under that immense load, straining every nerve for victory? Our friends and neighbors are in danger. Our sons and brothers are being led away by the errors of the wicked. Our children are being enticed by the vain allurements of an ungodly world. We must lift, and do what we can to save them. The longer we delay, the greater will be the peril. It will avail us nothing to run away, for "if" we "run from the fear" we "shall fall into the snare." Ye who have borne the burden so long, will you give over the struggle and say, "it cannot be done?" "No!" you every one exclaim, "no, we will still live or die." Sister! brother! lay member of the church of Christ, shall we look on and wish them success, but refuse to touch the load ourselves? No! we, too, must "lift or die!"

O for one general rally! Eternal life is at stake! The tide of evil is rising higher, and growing stronger. Soon every thing that is not made fast and secure on the eternal Rock will float away and sink into the dark caverns of eternal night. If we would find ourselves and our friends in the "world to come," we must take hold of the work and lift. Let every man, woman and child be at their post. Mothers! lift for yourselves and your children. Wives! lift for your husbands. Fathers! lift for your sons and neighbors. Sisters! for your brothers; young men for your companions and friends; children, for your parents; christians, for yourself and the world. Once more, all together, "LIFT—or die!"

Sinner, there is a chance for you. The building is nearly completed, but there is a little more timbers wanted for the roof. Some of God's hewers are still out, trying to collect a few more sticks. Will you not be gathered and join in the work? Whoever works upon this building will have a place in it secure from the storm which is about to burst upon a wicked world. Make application without delay. The Master will not turn you off if you apply soon. Make haste, for time is short. When the building is completed there is to be a great feast in honor of the Master-builder. O, come while yet there is room. When the Master cries, "It is finished," and shuts the door, it will be too late. God help us to be in earnest, and work while the day lasts, for the night cometh, in which no man can work. B. P. FRENCH.

SCATTERING.

The article about scattering, by Bro. J. T. K., in last week's Crisis, is good so far as it goes; but there is more about scattering. Says Jesus, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Again,—"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Paul exhorts the elders to "take heed unto themselves and the flock," for, said he, "I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock." Then there is danger even among ourselves of being deceived. Hear Paul again. "Of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Would limits allow, I would quote from 1 Cor. 3: 1; John 4: 1, and comment on same; but do "suffer the word of exhortation" from Paul, Rom. 16: 17, 18,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions . . . . . (sects,—see margin 1 Cor. 11: 18), contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple" (or harmless—margin).

When the Shepherd of Israel was smitten, the sheep (such as did not "turn away and walk no more with him") were scattered, but were soon gathered into little flocks with under shepherds, and the word of God prevailed. Truth was mighty; Satan's empire was shaken; and he soon commenced his dividing work. How many willing tools he found ready to do his scattering work, who had "crept in unawares"; and the story of the nominal church ever since abounds with sickening details of the horrid work done by these "ravening wolves," exciting the satire of the Pagan and Infidel historian, as they wrote the history of these professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Thus was much of the strength of the early christians worse than lost, being diverted from their specific work of preaching Christ and the resurrection, and salvation only in his name. They expended their strength in battling for their leaders, who were continually leading off disciples and making new sects.

So in our times, especially in 1840, and on, the specific work has been to arouse a sleepy church, and proclaim to the world the speedy coming of earth's rightful King; and in our land, after the death of Bro. Miller, thousands cut off from the sects have followed apostolic precedent and formed little churches; and how God once did bless them! But history repeats itself again. Satan still lives, is the "same old serpent"; and see the sad results! a shut door in '44, and since then see the side issues; see the disciples who follow their leaders, "who by good words and fair speeches deceive the simple." This may seem unjust, but all cannot be right. And now we have Seventh-day, future age, no life to the wicked, three or four definite time divisions, and several minor ones, some on ordinances, such as feet-washing, re-baptizing, and some very particular about the mode, when I think it immaterial how, provided we agree that they must be buried—immersed.

work, are divided off in little hostile camps, expending their valuable time in doing all they can to cripple the influence for good of all of those who differ from them and their leaders. "Rule or ruin" seems to be the motto of some, and ruin is the result in many places. Satan triumphs and the sects around rejoice.

This is no fancy picture. You can find many a church which was once flourishing, now well nigh ruined by this neglect of taking heed to Jesus and Paul; and when some good watchful ones attempt to exclude or keep out these dividers, they are called all kinds of hard names; and so the cause bleeds, and the meek and faithful ones, who have sacrificed all for the truth, are left to mourn over the wreck that fanaticism has made, and see all their past sacrifices worse than thrown away.

O that we could all see how possible it is for the best to be mistaken sometimes, and that others may possibly be nearer the truth than ourselves. O let us see to it that we are gathering with Christ. J. T. DIXON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. D. W. Miller.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that the burden of the word of the Lord is upon me, and am constrained to write to the scattered sheep and lambs, and preachers of the flock of our Lord, who are waiting for his coming. Are you aware of the times we are living in? are you purifying yourselves even as He is pure, that he may have a church to present to the Father, without spot or wrinkle? or are you riding some hobby that keeps you from purifying yourselves? Come, brother and sister, leave off those hobbies which will be your destruction, and examine yourselves, and see if your bodies are fit temples for the Holy Spirit to dwell in. Now to have our bodies fit temples for the Lord to work in, we must purify ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh. And of all the filthy habits that christians have, is the use of tobacco. The Lord deliver me from hearing a preacher who uses the weed. Talk about the Lord's coming, and of that pure people the Lord will find when he comes. Can such a man preach about the impurities of the church? My Lord, help the preaching brethren to get the mote out of their own eye, or mouth, then they can see to help their brother to purify himself, even as He is pure—Christ is pure. By getting pure ourselves, we can see how obnoxious such impurities are in others.

There are other imperfections in the church. There are extravagances in a great many things, that the preaching brethren do not dare touch, as a general thing; but I thank the Lord and am glad that he has some watchmen who will expose all these little sins, and try to purify the church, reproving the use of tobacco, tea and coffee, and rich food, for all such as use those things make themselves weak in the faith.

I write what I know by experience. May the good Lord help the dear children to overcome. My dear brother or sister, would you give to our Lord and Master tobacco, or any thing that defiles the temple at his coming? Nay, verily. O may the Lord help you to purify yourselves, even as He is pure.

If any of the churches in New England or Canada want such truths as I think belong to the church down here just prior to His coming, I am at liberty for a few weeks.

D. W. MILLER.

Brattleboro', Vt., Box 428.

From Z. A. Waterhouse.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—How cheering the thought that we, who read the Crisis from week to week, as it comes laden with the experience and teachings of those whom God has raised up to give to his scattered children their meat in due season, shall so soon meet in the kingdom and presence of Christ, our dear Redeemer, and all our dear friends, who have died in faith, and are now waiting for the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, to awake them from their dusty beds. Yes, if we are faithful, we shall soon meet with all the redeemed, to be separated no more for ever. How blessed the thought. Here we meet and have some sweet foretaste of the joys to come, but we have to separate, and it is often painful; but, dear brothers and sisters, there is a glorious meeting just ahead, when all those that look for and love the appearing of Christ, shall meet to part no more. I want to be all ready, clothed in the righteousness of Christ, that I may be found without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, when he comes.

Every thing in this world seems to be going to destruction. Let us take hold of the promises by faith, and hold on by obedience, and soon we shall have a home in the kingdom. It is truly encouraging to me to hear from those who write for the Crisis, although most of them are strangers to me. As I read what this brother, or that sister writes, my heart goes up in silent prayer for the dear Lord to bless them and their communications to the good of all who read them.

How thankful we should be that we have been led to see and believe the truth that God has revealed, and willing that God should be his own interpreter. When viewed in this light, how plain and easy to understand. Praise the Lord! dear brothers and sisters, do not be discouraged.

The storm will soon be o'er,
The battle soon be fought;
The faithful soon will soar
To the land of heavenly light.

Yes, soon our great High Priest
Will be our glorious King;
And then with him we'll rest,
And hallelujahs sing.

So. Poland. Z. A. WATERHOUSE.

From Sr. E. Slocum.

ELDER GRANT:—Dear Sir,—I write to you because I believe the Advent people, as a body, have more light on the Scriptures than any other denomination. I agree with them in many points. I now take the liberty to ask you, or some of God's true watchmen, some questions. Have the vials of God's unmixed wrath been poured out? They are often spoken of in Revelations, particularly in chap. 14: 10; chaps. 15, 16, 19; Jer. 30: 7; 25: 15; Ps. 75: 8; Isa. 51: 17; Zeph. 1: 18; Job 21: 20; Dan. 12: 1,—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people, and there shall be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Are these Scriptures to be understood by God's people before their fulfillment? Will not God's judgments be mixed with mercy while Christ sits on the mercy seat? Are we to understand what is to cause this time of trouble? These prophecies all seem to be linked together. God never sent judgments without first giving his people warning. Some tell me that we are now living under the pouring out of the sixth vial, or sixth plague, which seems to me to be confusion, because God's judgments always have been mixed with mercy, and I understand will be while Christ sits on the mercy seat. Can they be poured out before the servants of God are all sealed and Christ ceases to be mediator?

It is important that we understand this, for we cannot live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Let us watch and be sober, and have the evidence daily that our names are written in the book of life; that God may say to us, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity.

MRS. E. SLOCUM.

North Kingston, R. I.

From Bro. G. O. Atkinson.

MR. EDITOR:—Allow me, through the columns of your paper, to tender my sincere and hearty thanks to the christian brother through whose benevolence I have received the Crisis the last six months. As a religious paper I value it highly. While there are some points of doctrine which I am not prepared to endorse, yet its pages constitute a well filled storehouse of spiritual nourishment for christians, solid food for the men and women, and milk for the babes in Christ.

If it is possible to find among God's people that Christian grace which is the grand condition of discipleship, self-denial, we find it among those represented by the Crisis. Though other christians may accuse them of being over-zealous, they may answer with the great apostle to the Gentiles, "Whether we be beside ourselves, it is for God," etc. Would that christians of all denominations were as cross-bearing and self-denying as they. Could I make it consistent with my limited means, I should consider it greatly to my advantage to secure the Crisis as a constant guest.

The only members of your denomination living within the precincts of my parish, are a brother and sister, whom I suspect were the means of my receiving the Crisis, whom I value highly as earnest laborers for Christ, and efficient aids in our social meeting. O that we may all be as earnest to set our house in order for the Master's coming.

That the blessing of God may rest upon all the readers and doers of the teachings of the Crisis, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,
GEO. O. ATKINSON.

So. Windham, Vt.

From Bro. C. H. Shepherd.

BRO. GRANT:—If ever the church of Christ could have more courage to stand up for him one time more than another, I think it is now, for all the evidences speak plainly that his coming draweth nigh. O, glorious day! how it makes the christian's heart leap for joy when contemplating the appearing of the Son of God, coming to gather his saints from every land. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all those who sleep in the dust, will be awakened, the living changed, caught up to meet him in the air. All will be there. What shouts of joy, what music, and songs of redemption will be sung by that immortal company. Everlasting happiness. I want to be with them, joining in the victor's song, praising God for ever. If we would be there, we must be humble, Christ-like, long-suffering, kind, ready to every good word and work,—be the chosen, walking in the straight and narrow way, seeking for knowledge and understanding; for it is said in God's word,—"The wise shall understand"—"Knowledge shall increase."

Something is to be understood concerning Christ's second coming; for it is promised by One who never lies. Who will believe the word of God, and not fear to disclose his truth to a guilty world?

Yours in hope of deliverance when Jesus comes, CHARLES H. SHEPHERD.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me in the Crisis to apprise my brethren why I have not answered my letters and filled appointments of late. I have been suffering for six weeks from inflammation in one eye, at times very painful; when I could neither read nor write; but by the blessing of the Lord I seem to be getting better. My wife is still sick, and wasting; only able to be got up while her bed is being made, and unless the healing hand of the Lord should be put upon her, she must soon fall asleep in Jesus. I am tied pretty closely at home at present, for want of help. But the Lord is good, and with cheerful hope my head is uplifted, knowing redemption nigh. Pray for us. L. BOUTELL.

BRO. GRANT:—A happy New Year to yourself and to your co-laborers. You were remembered by name at the family altar this morning, as we renewedly presented ourselves and all that we have a New Year's gift to our heavenly Father through our Lord Jesus Christ.

A happy New Year to our paper, and to all its readers.

A happy New Year to the saints of God scattered abroad; yea, to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth.

Hammonton, N. J. E. S. WILLARD.

From Bro. S. French.

BRO. GRANT.—We have been much strengthened by a visit from our Bro. J. T. Dixon, who came here to aid Bro. Carpenter in a protracted effort to revive the work of the Lord in this place. The discouragements were great, cause very low, caused by divisions and backslidings, etc. Bro. C. left to be gone a few weeks, leaving Bro. D. in charge. Before he left the divisions were mostly settled, and although much discouraged by lack of interest on the part of many in the church, yet we feel good has been done. Backsliders have returned, and now work with us. Sinners have requested prayers. Some have decided to go with us to Mt. Zion, and the last meeting before Bro. D. left seemed like old times.

Bro. D. has done much good by visiting in this place. He is a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." As our beloved Bro. C. talks of leaving in the spring, we have requested Bro. D. to become our pastor, as he seems to be the man for this place, providing Bro. C. leaves.

Brethren, pray for us, that we may not come short of eternal life. S. FRENCH.

For the World's Crisis.

A CRISIS AT HAND.

Editor of the World's Crisis:—

BRO. GRANT:—On observing your remarks relative to the development and career of Napoleon, as a monarch of unprecedented subtlety and ambition, and destined very speedily to the acquisition of tremendous power, I said immediately, "That is true; every word of that is truth." The fact is, we are indeed approaching a crisis of unparalleled magnitude. It is utterly useless to deny it. That the next year, 1866, is to be a year teeming with great events, and portentous with solemn and awful issues, will soon become evident to all but the unhappily incredulous or foolishly shortsighted. And yet how sad and singular it is that any such future seems to be deprecated by so many religious papers of the day, as unlikely or impossible! What an awaking awaits the slumbering religious world.

In my humble judgment, the 1260 years have three grand starting points in history; the first in 533, the epoch of the Justinian decree; the second, 588, the year when John the Faster assumed the title of universal bishop; and the third in 606, when Boniface III. was created the first Pope by that bloody usurper Phocas. The respective expirations of the prophetic period are obviously in 1793, 1848, and 1866.

There are five or six identifications of Napoleon as the terrible man of prophecy, by the numerical evolution of the prophetic number 666 in his name. One or two of these, which I observed and communicated to the Prophetic Times, I may mention, though perhaps of less importance than the others, viz: L. N. Kalonmeros, the Greek for Bonaparte, and the actual name of the Bonaparte ancestry, before removing from Greece to Italy. To this may be added Comnene Ellonikos—Comnene, the Greek; another family name of the earlier stock in Greece.

But there is now very marked and special interest in the accomplishment of that mighty enterprise, so significant as a grand prophetic signal, the return of the Jews to Palestine, under the direct superintendence of Napoleon. That he is inaugurating steps for the accomplishment of this restoration, is very strongly indicated; and it is very likely to be one of the peculiar and striking characteristics of the great prophetic year before us, that Napoleon will guarantee and achieve the settlement and nationalization of the Jews in the land from which they have been exiles for nearly eighteen hundred years. The conditions of the prophecy in Daniel strictly require that the treaty shall cover or embrace in its provisions a period of seven years. When this development occurs, when this covenant is ratified and published to the world, what a thrill of lively and powerful conviction will every sagacious student of prophecy and observer of events experience. What a mighty import will this achievment convey. What assurance of the identity of the agent, as the very person predicted years ago to accomplish a peculiar work, significant of the startling and positive proximity of the revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven.

Let the slumbering world beware! The stupendous crisis of the world is at hand. Though philosophy may deny or deride the possibility, yet among all other mighty evolutions and portents of the immediate future, the treaty of the Jews has a place of the greatest and most unequivocal importance.

Though I have much to write, and with your approbation may communicate some hints pertinent to the exceedingly solemn period we are now approaching, I will close this article by an intimation of what I understand to be the probable fulfillment of the prophecy in Daniel relative to this last and greatest of earthly monarchs,—"He shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver," and "he shall scatter among them the prey, and spoil, and riches."

1. He will probably engage the co operation of those Jewish money-kings, the Rothschilds, in promoting the conversion and settlement of the Jews in Palestine.

2. He will probably cause the immense resources and wealth of the Catholic church to be sequestered by the civil governments of Europe, for the replenishing of their treasuries and the relief of their embarrassed finances. Turkey has recently thus preyed on the spoil of Mohammedanism, at least in part.

3. He will probably gain possession very soon of most of the richest mines of precious metals in the world.

4. All the currency of civilized nations will soon be conformed to the French standard. Please to mark these suggestions. C. O.

NEW YEAR'S DIALOGUE.

A. Have you read the "Ten Rules" presented in the Crisis by the Editor?

B. I have; and would be glad to subscribe to them if I thought it possible for me to live up to them.

A. Do you think they go beyond the letter and spirit of the New Testament?

B. No. I cannot compare them to a heavy burden "grievous to be borne," but it seems like that light burden and easy yoke of which our Savior speaks.

A. Then why not subscribe, or, in other words, wear the yoke?

B. I have so often made resolutions, and failed to keep them.

A. That is well said. Now be patient with me while I draw a parallel case. Suppose a man is in a small boat on a large river, and the current is moving him toward the great falls. There are islands here and there in the river, and as the current bears the man towards the jaws of certain destruction, he passes near one of these islands. He tries to gain the shore, or land his boat at the island; but he fails. The current is too strong for him, and with a sinking heart he sees the danger nearing. But he turns his eye and sees another island near. He makes another frantic effort, but he is so weak he finds himself carried past, and as point after point is passed, he sinks down almost paralyzed by fear, and is on the point of giving up in despair. But just here he is aroused by a friendly voice near him, shouting—"You have one chance more. We have stretched a rope across the stream, and you are now very near it. Delay not a moment. It is your last chance. If you pass that rope, no human power can save you." Once more he makes an effort to escape the doom that awaits him. His boat has reached the rope, and he seizes it with the grasp of one who knows his life is at stake. The current is so strong that the boat is carried away, but the man still clings to the rope. The friendly voice again shouts, "Hold on, don't be afraid; hold on a little longer and you will be safe." And he does hold on, and soon help reaches him, and he is carried safely to the arms of his friends on the shore. Brother, do you see the point?

B. Yes; and I certainly think my danger is as great as that of the man in the boat. But what can I do? I might, perhaps, keep the first rule, but the second and third I have never been able to keep for a great length of time. It does seem impossible for me to bear everything patiently, and when I am provoked I am pretty apt to speak unkind words.

A. It may seem impossible to you, but GOD will help you. Will you try?

B. I want a deeper sense of the Divine PRESENCE—an abiding sense, to help me and as it were to awe me into obedience. If I could feel and realize that Presence as I do the presence of a man that I can see, it seems to me I could always be calm, always mild, always gentle, always discreet.

A. But that would be an outward restraint which is not the kind of influence or motive of action for us in this present state. It is CHRIST within, the hope of glory; it is entire conformity to the will of GOD, that should lead us to act out what we feel within, that is, the working of the Holy Spirit.

B. I think I feel the full force of your persuasions. I do not object to anything you have said. And I do not wish to argue the case, but will only state one thing more, feeling all the while that I cannot justify myself or escape the judgments of God by such an excuse. All I have to say now is this: you know I have a very peculiar temperament and organization. The organs of my mind are so out of balance, and my mental and nervous state so excitable, that the least thing sets me ablaze, as a single spark may explode a magazine.

A. No one knows your need of help better than your Maker. He can take all these things into consideration. And you know the apostle says, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Does not this meet your case? You say you have a peculiar liability to sin. In other words, sin abounds with you. Just in proportion to your need of help you shall have it. Every case is fully met, from the first to the last. And where there is no strength either to choose or refuse, as in the case of infants, salvation reaches even there. Do you doubt whether it reaches your case?

B. No; I do not doubt. I earnestly desire to feel the healing touch of the great Physician. I desire to obey him in all things. O help me to take thy yoke upon me, and learn of Thee. All my weakness is known to Thee, and oh! help me henceforth to live as becometh an heir of glory. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Obituaries.

BARROWS. Died in Bridgewater, Vt., at the residence of his father, Sept. 16th, 1865, George W. Barrows, of Williamsburg, N. Y., aged forty-nine years and eight months.

Thus the just and the good pass away; but blessed be the name of Jesus, he has promised to bring them back to life again, to reign with him in glory.

Then rest thee, brother, sweetly rest,
In long and dreamless sleep;
While ever in our loving breasts
Thy image bright will keep.

W. A. ABBOTT.

CURTIS. Died in Bowdoin, Nov. 14th, 1865, Sister Rebecca Curtis, aged sixty years.

Sister Curtis was a great sufferer, but bore her sufferings with christian patience and submission. She sleeps where

"No pain, nor grief, nor anxious fear
Invades the bounds; no mortal woes
Can reach the peaceful sleeper here;
While angels watch the soft repose."

H. D. REED.

VARNHAM. Died in Bowdoin, Dec. 25th, 1865, of fever, Sister Maribla A., daughter of Ralph and Sister Saloma Varnham, aged twenty-four years.

Sister M. had a pleasant and lovely disposition, and was beloved by all who knew her. Death had no terror for her.

"And is that lovely shadow fled,
The blooming numbers of her years
So soon enshrined among the dead?
She justly claims our pious tears."

H. D. REED.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Advices of the 20th ult.

A treaty of commerce between England and Austria had been drawn up, and would be signed immediately.

FRANCE.

Prince Napoleon arrived in Paris on the 18th. The Liberte says Prince Napoleon went to the Tuileries on the 18th.

The cattle plague was increasing.

There has been a slight increase in the deaths from cholera in Paris.

ITALY.

It was reported at Florence that the Ministry had tendered their resignations. The Provisional Budget was under debate in the Chamber of Deputies, and was meeting with some opposition.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Jan. 2. Gen. Sweeny has issued an appeal to the Fenians not to waste their energies on intestine strife, and says: "Let deeds, not words, be your motto. Strike before it is too late and the golden opportunity is lost. Our situation is that of two armies whose chiefs cannot agree upon a line of operations. The vast extent of the British dominions offers many vital points, and as we cannot reconcile our views, let each follow his chosen general, and attack where his judgment tells him are the best chances of success. Let this disgraceful squabble cease at once. On the field of battle we will forget personal rancor and factional prejudice, to remember only our country and her wrongs. Out of our difficulties I can see but one way to escape; it is to call in each State a convention of delegates from different circles to decide in whom they will repose confidence, and then in silence allow Col. O'Manony and myself each to work out his respective plan for the freedom of Ireland."

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 2. At a meeting of Fenians to-day, composed of officers who have served in the Union army, resolutions were adopted supporting Gen. Sweeney, and urging him to call a Military Convention at some central locality. A resolution was also adopted that both of the contending parties who now divide the Brotherhood give way in favor of Gen. Sweeney and the Military Directors. Forty officers signed the resolutions, which were sent to General Sweeney.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 5. At the monthly meeting of the District of Chicago Fenian Brotherhood to-night, which was attended by the entire military and civic organization, the Fenians pledged themselves to furnish Gen. Sweeney two regiments fully armed and equipped.

☞ A gentleman just returned to New Orleans from Arkansas, reports that place to be in a dreadful unsettled, disorganized condition. In many parts of the country the inhabitants are actually threatened with famine. Life and property are everywhere insecure, and murders and robberies are of almost every day occurrence.

☞ A negro preacher, while holding forth to the colored soldiers at Port Hudson, said: "De whole ob God's relation to us am like de wheel. De Lord Jesus Christ am de hub, de christians am de spokes, and de tire am de grace of God a binden em all together."

Protracted Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting holden in New Bedford, Mass., commencing Sunday, Jan. 14th, and to continue as long as the interest may demand. Brethren and sisters from abroad are invited to attend. We earnestly solicit an interest in the prayers of all God's children. O pray that the perishing may find Jesus.

JOSEPH W. THOMAS,
CHARLES E. PIPER,
A. DAMON.

Notice.

A series of meetings will be held at Shinnecock, near Southampton, Long Island, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, Jan. 18th, and continuing one week, or more, as Providence may dictate. Sister A. E. Smith, and Sister S. Boide, of New York, will be present to help on with the good work.

Bro. David Bunn will meet at Riverhead on that day. WM. WILKINS.

Conference.

Our Eastern Maine Conference will be held at Frankfort Mills, commencing Thursday, the 25th day of January, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. It is expected that the lovers of Jesus will come prepared to labor effectively in his cause. By order of the Committee.

M. YOUNG, Clerk.

Quarterly Conference.

There will be a conference at Round Pond, Bristol, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Jan. 18th, 1866, and continue over Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to come to Round Pond with the spirit of worship. S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Notice.

I will commence a series of meetings at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday, Jan. 21st, and continue, as duty may require, through the week, holding over Sunday, Jan. 28th. S. S. BREWER.

Notice.

We will commence a series of meetings at Salem, Mass., Sunday, Jan. 14th, and continue evenings through the week, as may seem duty.

S. S. BREWER,
DR. A. DECKER.

THE PILGRIM'S SONG OF HOPE.

TUNE—"Tramp! tramp! tramp!" or its sequel, "On! On! On!"

Soon the glorious day will come
When the Savior will appear,
And will gather all who're waiting for the Lord
Safe into the promised land,
Where in joy and peace they'll stand;
So 'tis promised in the holy, sacred word.

CHORUS.

Come! come! come! the saints are calling,
Savior, come to earth again;
Come and banish all the strife,
Bring the sleeping ones to life,
And restore the earth to its Edenic bloom.

See! the signs in every land
All proclaim His coming near;
Signs in sun and moon and stars have all appeared;
Nations now are all distressed,
Men's hearts now are sorely pressed,
For the fear of what is coming on the earth.

Everywhere throughout the land
Demons, a united band,
To deceive the wicked nations have gone forth;
But the children of the Son,
Who have got the armor on,
Satan cannot them destroy or lead astray.

Spirits tell us there's no truth
In the sacred word we love,
Which declares, to save a sin-polluted race
Jesus died upon the cross,
Suffered shame and grief and loss,
By his blood to reconcile us unto God.

Now with them we will not hold,
For their coming is foretold
In the book they love to trample under foot;
But we'll trust in Jesus' name,
And his love and mercy claim,
That a home with them may be our happy part.

Come, my brethren, let us be
Girded for the strife anew,
Jesus over all our foes will vict'ry give;
So we'll keep his precepts pure,
And unto the end endure,
That amid the new earth's glory we may live.

Child of sorrow, look above,
Jesus smiles on thee in love,
And will shortly banish all thy grief and woe;
Soon he'll come and wipe the tear
That has flowed so often here—
Glory, honor, wealth and beauty thou shalt know.

Let our lives be holy, pure,
Hardness may we well endure;
Jesus helps us all our toilsome journey through.
All from strife and fashion free,
From the world unspotted be,
Then with joy we'll hail the coming of the day.

THE FOUR CHICKENS.

In the spring of 1864, through a multiplicity of the cares and labors incident to city service, my wife became feeble, and manifested very marked tendencies toward consumption. It was therefore concluded that we must move, or she must die. The providence of God guided us in the matter; and after much vain seeking for rents and places, we packed our goods and started for Lawrence, not knowing whither we went. No proper tenement could be found to rent, but there was one for sale, which I had nearly concluded to take, and indeed I had written a letter requesting a friend to close the bargain, but could not bring my mind to mail it, and so I have it in my drawer to this day.

On arriving at L. with my family, about the first of June, I went to look again at this place, quite inclined to take it. But just then I heard of another, only a few rods distant, at the same price and much more desirable, with a garden all planted and growing, plenty of fruit, excellent water, and all ready to our hand. It was purchased, the money being borrowed and since repaid, and in one week we were in it, at home. It was quite in the country,—though surrounded by neighbors,—high, dry, sunny, and airy, and very pleasant with its trees and flowers and fruits. Very little, however, did I enjoy them, as I am a wanderer to and fro. But my wife's cough wore away, my poor old mother seemed to gain in health, my two boys played under the shade trees and got more brown and healthy, and my little daughter, who came to us there to fill an aching void—made years ago by the opening of a little grave—grew, and crowed, and played, as wonderful babies always do.

Once or twice in a month, or two months, or three months, I got home to spend a day, but for the rest of the time I could only pray for them and commit them to the keeping of God.

Returning at one time from a tenting tour in Maine, a christian friend gave me a box of chickens to carry home. Accordingly we engaged in the keeping of "live stock," farmer like. But they must have a house, or they would scratch the garden up, and so good old father R——, the carpenter, came and built it, and so the chickens were taken care of. But these, though they crowed, scratched, layed, and cackled, after the most approved fashion—all but the laying, which was too scanty—were not "the four chickens" I began to write about.

A few weeks ago, a widow lady called on my wife, and said to her that she wished her to take four chickens and keep them for her. She told her story. She had lived in the west, and had a husband and children. One by one they sickened and died,—husband, children and all; and she was left alone. Her youngest child had a pet chicken, and when the last of her darlings was laid in the grave, this little pet came to be precious to her, as such things are to the desolate, and bereft, and broken-hearted. So she kept it, cared for it, in process of time, came three others; these were the four chickens. She had left her old home, come back to the East, brought these little waifs all the long journey, and now was nursing and working out, and had no place to put them, and wanted them to be kept there. So my wife yielded her consent, and the good woman brought her homely little treasure, and her corn and meal, and oats, and buckwheat, to feed them.

The little things brought sad memories to her. "There," said she, "that is all I have left of my home and family," and then she buried her face in her hands, and sobbed and wept as if her heart would break. All this was very simple, no doubt; but mothers whose little ones are mouldering under the green-sward, and who weep over little socks and half-worn baby-shoes, will not laugh at it very much.

She came often to see her pets, and talked just as many others in the same condition would about what she had lost, and all she had left. "To be sure it seemed simple, but doesn't God take notice of sparrows? and chickens are much greater than they.

Our house stands on a corner, broadside to one road on the north, and the west end of it has an extension and a wood-house. In the rear runs up a flight of stairs to an attic fitted for a school-room, and under these stairs lay some pine leaves and boughs which the children had gathered from a clearing to kindle the fire. Next to the wood-house, then, after a passage-way, comes the kitchen, then the sitting-room and chambers, and then, fronting the road, the library with its varied stock of ancient and modern, musty and dusty, tomes. There is a little four year old boy about the house some where, a frank, shy, cunning, roguish, merry fellow, full of quaint sayings, odd plans, and wise undertakings, who was uneasy when he went there because he wanted "some noise," and who has been manufacturing a large stock of the article ever since. He likes everything that is new, or which smacks of business and enterprise. A little while ago, one raw November day, he was experimenting with matches. Just what he did, or how much, he never was inclined to relate very particularly. But at last, having done all, and perhaps more than he wanted to, at the windward end of the house, he ran away into a neighbor's field.

Pretty soon there is a whiff of blue smoke whirling on the wings of the stiff northwester, then another follows it from under those back stairs. And then a bright red flame bursts up among the pine leaves and runs up on the clapboards. The wind is very strong, blowing directly towards the house, and the family are away in the sitting-room, and have no fear of any danger. No one is passing by, and the fire makes the best use of its time. There are no men in the neighborhood, all are away at work, and a few minutes will be enough to leave the house a heap of ruins, and the library a mass of charred leaves whirling in the wind.

But just then comes a woman, breathless and excited, trying the doors and windows as if in frenzy,—they open the door to see their friend, who comes to look after her chickens, and to hear from her lips the cry of "fire!" A few buckets of water saved the house; but if we had not had that widow's four chickens, —what then?

A few geese by their cackling once saved Rome. A crowing cock preached an Apostle a sermon which he never forgot; and the widow's chickens saved the house from the devouring flames.

I came home a few days later, and when I inquired who had been "a good boy," I found one little fellow with rather a sober face. It took him quite a while to tell his story,—it came out piecemeal fashion; but after he had broken the ice, the rest helped him, and his mother said he "had repented, and had been forgiven, and had asked God to forgive him, too; and so it was all made right.

But I felt a strange, sickly feeling creep over me, as I thought of my poor wearied wife's resting-place, of the few household comforts that she called her own, of the books that I had gathered in the searchings and studies and journeying and toil and poverty of many years, and thought how narrowly all had escaped. I went out and stole one hasty glance at the burned clapboards, and came away in silence. I looked, too, with a kind of reverence upon those chickens, as I carried them their morning meal, and I meditated solemnly on the whole.

The scorched boards are there now. I do not want them repaired or painted over. Let them stay, and let them preach. Will they talk to any one else as they do to me? Will any one else hear them say, "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth," and "the tongue is a fire"? Will they say, "When thou passeth through the fires, I will be with thee, and the flame shall not kindle upon thee"? Will they say, "The very hairs of your head are all numbered"?

And then those chickens. We will take good care of them now, for if they are not our all, like the widow's, yet still they bring strange thoughts to our minds. We think of Him who said, "How oft would I have gathered you as an hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." But we are willing to be thus gathered. Under his sheltering wing flood or flame cannot pursue us; all is peace. God has kept those little fowls and provided for them, and as they eat their daily portion they preach to me, and their text and sermon are all one: "God feedeth them"—"How much more are ye better than fowls." And I write this memorial in thankfulness that God gives me simplicity of spirit to see his mighty power in great things, his guiding hand in little things, and his loving kindness in all things. H.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article, we were investigating the word destruction and the word punishment, which plainly show nothing more nor less than eternal death to the wicked. But we are required to believe, when we read the words "destruction," "punishment," "perish," and "death," that they mean eternal life in misery. But Mr. Webster says the word destruction means ruin, or eternal death, and we certainly know better than to understand the word "eternal death" to mean eternal life in misery.

We will now turn to another passage found in 2 Thess. 1: 7–10, where we have St. Paul's words, which tells us what kind of punishment the sinner must receive, when Christ comes "with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance" on the ungodly, and declares that they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be . . . admired by all them that believe, in that day." Shall we alter the word destruction, and the word punished, and call it punishing "with everlasting" preservation of life in misery, "from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power"? Would this be honest, to change the word of God to suit our creeds?

Some of our most popular theologians tell us, that after the wicked have been groaning and writhing in dreadful agony for millions of years, their sufferings are but just begun. This is the fruit of a belief in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, which originated from Satan in the garden of Eden, when he said, "thou "shalt not surely die"; and the same doctrine was adopted by the heathen philosophers, and heathen priests, and was received by the Roman Catholic church, and then by the Protestant churches. It became a popular doctrine in the Catholic church, and a mighty lever to compel the people to pay over their money to keep out of purgatory.

What conclusion must we draw from the foregoing description of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and endless misery? We answer, that God has made millions of immortal souls, and put them into polluted bodies, where they will become wicked, and grow up in a world of sin and wickedness, where they cannot repent, unless compelled by divine grace, as the orthodox tell us; and then only about one out of ten or twenty is ever brought in and converted so as to be saved, and the rest consigned to endless suffering in the lake of fire and brimstone. O horrible! horrible!! What kind of a character does the doctrine reflect on God, whose name is love? B. PERHAM.

WORTHY OF ATTENTION.

Dear brethren and sisters, greeting:—To how many will the following charge apply?—"Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." Dear friends, "take heed!" The glorious day, aye, the trying day, is hastening, "and who shall be able to stand?" Are we "watching unto prayer"? praying always"? overcomers? Let us carefully heed the admonition contained in the following tract, published at the office of "The Earnest Christian," No. 62 Buffalo St., Rochester, N. Y. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." S. L. MANLY.

Palmyra, N. Y.

LOSS OF FIRST LOVE.

Here is a man who has been truly converted to God. The work was thorough. Years rolled away. He was properly instructed in all the doctrines of christianity. He has pursued a straightforward course, devoting himself to the service of God. His faith was evidenced by his works. He used his personal influence to bring all within his reach to the cross of Christ. His exertions to do good were unceasing and performed in a good spirit. He was one of the few who did not grow weary in well-doing. In the providence of God, he lived in a land where persecution raged unto death against the followers of Christ. But he endured all without faltering. Others yielded to the suggestions of fear, and turned back to the world; but he stood like a rock in the midst of the ocean, and defied the fury of the waves. The trial of his faith worked patience.

He loved righteousness and hated iniquity. Like the Psalmist, he resolved "not to know a wicked person,"—not to have one among his associates. Popular and wealthy sinners found no apologist in him; he was bold to unmask and expose hypocrites wherever found, and whatever their pretensions. He did not receive as ministers of Jesus Christ all who laid claim to that character, but tried them by their fruit, and rejected mere pretenders. What do you think of such a man? What would you think of a church composed of such members? Would it not be regarded as a model church? Would not he be deemed uncharitable who should question their claims to piety? To such a church our glorified Savior told John to write,—"I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hath labored, and hast not fainted." What a catalogue of christian virtues! What a record of devotion to the cause of Christ! Orthodox in creed, active in labors, patient in suffering for Jesus' sake, were not these christians in a state of salvation? If this church was not in the way to heaven, what church is at this day? Yet of these our Savior said, "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." Somewhat! then there was not much that was wrong; nothing of immoral tendency is alleged; no heretical notions had been entertained; the correctness of their faith was unquestioned; no wrong spirit toward their opposers had been indulged; no sinful temper had gained the ascendancy; they were not lacking in kindness to the poor, or in their contributions for the cause of Christ; they were not destitute of love; all that could be brought against them was, that they had lost their "first love." Their fervor was gone; their emotions had cooled down; their hearts no longer glowed and burned with love for Christ; they served him more from principle than from the holy impulse of gushing affection. Was this loss a serious one? Yes, a fatal one. In their own estimation, and in the eyes of the world, they were good christians; but He who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire pronounced them FALLEN. No increase of activity could avail them. A greater punctuality in attending upon the ordinances of the church could not answer the purpose. The command of Christ was,—"Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

If a church planted by Paul, and in the course of three years' faithful labor carefully instructed by him in all the christian doctrines and duties, could, during the lives of some of the apostles, thus fatally lose the grace that saves, while to outward appearance all was right; is there not reason for us to examine carefully our hearts? We may be deceived. We may think we are better off than when we were first converted; we may congratulate ourselves upon our freedom from those powerful temptations that assailed us then, and because we are settled, and "living from principle," and have no "ups and downs," conclude that all is going on smoothly, when Jesus writes against us,—"THOU HAST LEFT THY FIRST LOVE." That we may know whether we are liable to this charge, let us consider,

I. THE ELEMENTS OF A CHRISTIAN'S FIRST LOVE.

1. It is universal. God is the supreme object of affection. There is a charm in the very name of Jesus. We love his cross, his will, his word. But in subordination to God we love everybody. How often do we hear the young convert say, "Why, I have not an enemy in the world." He loves all mankind, without regard to their rank, their wealth, or the figure they make in the world. He pities the wicked and feels tender compassion for all, but loves as his brothers, those who love Jesus. Denominational lines do not limit his affection. His love is without partiality. He loves those most ardently whose love for Christ is greatest.

2. It is self-denying. A christian in his first love is ever ready to make sacrifices for the good of others. He can forego his own ease and comfort that his fellow-men may be made better and happier. When he goes to church he takes the largest conveyance at hand, that he may carry some who would not else enjoy the means of grace. He is ready when circumstances demand it to lay down his life for the salvation of souls. A pious miner was sinking a shaft with an unconverted man. They were preparing to blast, when by accident the fuse took fire. In a few minutes the explosion would take place. They both sprang into the bucket and gave the signal to be drawn up. The man above was unable to elevate them both at once. The pious man jumped out saying, "I am ready to die but you are not." The bucket reached the top just as the explosion took place. The christian man was miraculously preserved. The other never rested till he became a christian.

3. A christian's first love is ardent and bold. Its warmth is seen in the expression of the countenance, it is felt in the grasp of the hand, it is manifested in the cordial, accommodating manner, that no studied politeness can successfully imitate. His words are like breezes from the tropics in the winter season, carrying a genial warmth into the most frigid atmosphere. Visit a friend just converted to God. You may be ignorant of his conversion, you hardly need to wait for him to tell you. A glance at his very appearance reveals the glad intelligence. The boldness of the young convert, warm in his first love, is a matter of common observation. How ready are even those who are the most retiring, to testify to crowded audiences, when their hearts are warm with new-born love, their knowledge of the power of Christ to save! How willing they are to labor for the salvation of souls. One person, acting under the warm impulse of a loving heart, will do more to bring souls to Christ than a score can possibly do who are actuated by sectarian bigotry, or the cold calculations of worldly policy. His love does not expend itself in mere wishes for the revival of God's work, but he wrestles in prayer and prevails; he labors from house to house to persuade men to be saved.

4. It is spontaneous. It does not result from reasoning, nor arise from mere convictions of duty. Amiable traits in others do not originate it. Whoever is born again by the Spirit of God feels this love springing up at once in his soul. It is like the fires of the volcano, obtaining the fuel it feeds upon within, and not from without. Hence it burns with an inextinguishable blaze. It is not chilled by coldness nor silenced by neglect.

II. THE GUILT INCURRED IN LOSING OUR FIRST LOVE.

1. We insult Christ. Make the matter a personal one. There is a man whose life you have saved at the risk of your own. At a great sacrifice you have supplied him with every means of happiness. His warmest gratitude is excited. He loves you, and manifests his love in every proper way. But, by and by, he declines in his attachment. You love him ardently and continue to lavish upon him your benefactions. But he shuns your society, and when a meeting is unavoidable, greets you coldly. When others praise you he yields a cold assent. You feel injured more by his neglect than you would by open acts of hostility from an avowed enemy. Thus, by every one who loses his first love is Christ wounded in the house of his friends. His spouse—his chosen one, whom he tenderly loves, proves unfaithful to him. The most solemn vows are violated, and that too in the face of every obligation to fidelity.

2. We injure his cause. The world understands us as saying that we are disappointed, that Christ does not afford that delight in his service which we anticipated. He whose servants are always leaving him, is reputed to be a bad master. Nothing so discourages sinners from embarking in the cause of Christ, as the coldness generally manifested by those who have for a few months been in his service. The loss of his "first love" by christians hinders the conversion of the world more than all other causes combined. Ponder this statement, and the more you reflect upon it, the more you will be convinced that it is true. The guilt, then, of those who lose their first love can only be measured by the worth of souls.

3. The guilt of those who lose their first love is greater than that of those who never made a profession of piety. They sin against greater light. They have known, as no unconverted person ever has, the joys of salvation. Their path should have shone more and more unto the perfect day. The motives pressing upon them to live a life of godliness have been more clearly seen and more fully appreciated. But instead of going on they have gone back. As the obligations for them to love Christ increase, the affection they really feel for him diminishes. Was it an act of mercy on the part of God to stoop down to us in our wretchedness and guilt and adopt us in his own royal family? Each day he gives us a fresh token of his loving kindness. He unveils new beauties in his character. Our love should then continually increase.

We urge you, dear reader, to examine yourself on this point. It is so easy to be deceived. The loss of first love does not imply our falling into any open sin. Christian morality may be as strictly observed as ever. There may be punctual attention to all the forms of religion. No startling external symptoms reveal the hidden disease that is preying within. The dropsy kills not less certainly than consumption: the victims of the one waste away, while those of the other assume the appearance of an improved condition of health. The danger of those who have lost their first love is all the greater from their unconsciousness of their loss. How is it then with thee, my brother, my sister? Have you ever had this impartial, self-denying, ardent, bold, spontaneous love? Do you possess it now? Do not say, "I have not that degree of it which I should have." You either have it, or you have it not. If you have not that degree that you had when you were first converted, the case is clear. You have lost your first love. You stand in peril. Your case is one that needs prompt attention. Let us consider then,—

III. THE DIRECTIONS WHICH CHRIST GIVES TO THOSE WHO HAVE LOST THEIR FIRST LOVE.

1. "Remember from whence thou art fallen." Then thou art fallen! If thou hast lost thy first love thou art in a backslidden condition. How hard it is to admit this! but you must make the admission or you can never be restored. Thou art fallen from thy justified state—from the favor of God. Thou hast lost the privileges of an adopted member of the heavenly family. Remember this. Ponder it; dwell upon it; let thy mind become thoroughly imbued with a sense of thy loss; let the continued recollection of it press heavily by night and by day until thy spirits are weighed down with a lively appreciation of thy miserable condition. Let your heart utter the melancholy wail:

"What peaceful hours I once enjoyed,
How sweet their memory still,
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill."

When you have become thoroughly conscious of your loss you will then be ready to obey the second direction.

2. Repent. Do not stop with the remembrance and acknowledgment of thy wretched state. Welcome the tears of penitence. Therefore also now, saith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning: and rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God. Grieve over your fall; fast and weep, and mourn, and break your heart before the Lord. Humble yourself in the dust in his presence; let your fixed purpose be henceforth to please him in all your ways.

3. Do the first works. However honorable may be thy condition among men, before God thou art a sinner. Thou must come to him as such,—as thou didst at the first, when thou wast seeking pardon. Prove your repentance genuine by its fruits. Confess your sins; do not attempt to cover them up. God will bring every secret thing to light. Do not lay the blame on others; every one must give an account of himself to God. Do not palliate your fall as though it was a slight thing to lose your first love. He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all. Go deep. Be thorough. Heartily, honestly, and fully confess all. From your closet go to your family. Tell them how cold and formal you have been; how you have lost the ardor of your affection for Christ and his cause. Begin to labor earnestly for their salvation. Acknowledge how you have let a vain ambition that they might make a figure in the world creep in, and begin in good earnest to teach them to live for a glorious immortality. They have caught from you a worldly spirit, let them now learn from you the worthlessness of all earthly things compared with the salvation of the soul.

4. How hard it is for poor human nature to follow these simple, necessary directions of Christ! Men will do almost anything else first. They will bustle about, increase their zeal, their prayers, their liberality, but how unwilling to humble themselves for a loss of their first love, and repent! Many who have been led up to this point by the Spirit of God, have stoutly refused to yield, and have brought upon them the woe that our Savior pronounced: I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. THEIR LIGHT HAS GONE OUT. They no longer see their condition, or the requirements of God, but really think they enjoy religion, and are in the way to heaven, when their feet are fast taking hold of hell. In this dreadful condition are, we fear, many professed christians, and even ministers of the gospel. From these ranks come the army of persecutors of Holy Ghost religion.

Sincere, but deluded man! If you settle down in your present state your damnation is certain! It will soon be easy for you to believe a lie. Your hold upon evangelical truth is growing weaker. You are now in doubt in reference to things that you once knew with the greatest certainty. Your strict observance of the rules of morality and of the forms of religion, serves as an opiate to your conscience, and God can scarcely awaken you! Every month you continue as you are makes your condition worse, and lessens the probability of your recovery. Insensibility is fast stealing upon you. Go on as you are and you will fall into that most dangerous of all conditions—a religious lethargy. And, when death comes and seizes you with his bony hand, and shakes you over the grave, you will, even then, only partially awake, like one disturbed from an opium sleep, and thus be hurried away to the retributions of eternity to be awakened by the crackling of the fires of hell and the agonizing cries of the damned! O bestir thyself betimes. Hasten to Jesus. Bathe his feet with your tears, and consecrate your life anew to his service. Rest not till fully restored to the favor of God.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

In the year 1861, I enlisted in the army. Prior to this time I contracted the habit of using tobacco, but rather moderately. Changing my mode of living, and being among entire strangers, I sought my only favorite—tobacco, and ere I was aware of the evil, I had become such a slave to the use of the obnoxious weed that I could not be satisfied a moment (unless while eating or sleeping) without either a chew in my mouth, or smoking a pipe or cigar. I knew it was not only a filthy habit, but that, at this rate, it would soon end my days. In the year 1863, I was converted to God. I felt that God had pardoned my sins, and I tried to consecrate my all to him, to be used in any way he should direct. I was made to feel that the sacrifice was accepted. I continued the use of tobacco, intending at some future time to break off from using it. Conscience began to sting, and I knew that I was using that which did not belong to me, (for all was God's) and I was setting a bad example before my comrades. I resolved to quit the use of it. I tried, but it seemed as though the habit was so fastened that I could not break away. Oh, what a dear idol, and how loth was I to give it up! I tried only in my own strength; and concluded I could not give it up; and after a few days used it with greater appetite, if possible, than before. In this way I tried several times, but with the same result. Amidst the smitings of conscience, I continued to use the miserable stuff, pressing the dear idol, as it were, nearer my heart, instead of continuing to strive by the grace of God to rid myself of it; but still professing to be wholly the Lord's, and in all other things, trying to do his will.

About a month after my conversion, I visited a sick brother in his tent; we talked about Jesus, what he had done for us, and what he was still doing. Soon the conversation changed, (it must have been the Lord's doing,) and "tobacco" became the topic. I (although not addressed as one who used it,) could not but admit the habit to be wrong, and spoke of having tried to quit it, but without success. I could not."

"Oh," said my brother, "will you not quit it for Jesus' sake?"

Never, never! can I erase from memory's page the occurrence. The mind wandered back in a moment to the place from which I had been taken. I saw what he had done for me, and then, and there resolved, that by His grace I would use it no more. I took from my mouth a chew and threw it away; took out of my pocket all I had with me and threw it away, went to my tent and likewise disposed of what I had in my valise, and asked God to destroy the appetite for it. It was done, and for more than two years I have not desired it in any way. Praise God! He has power to cleanse us from not only one sin but all. Hallelujah! . . .—Earnest Christian.

PLEDGE OF THE TEE COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

Will you come and join our Sunday School? I really wish you would,
O come and join our Bible class, and learn how to be good;
We learn to sing, we learn to pray, in our sweet Sunday School,
And there we learn of Jesus too, who gave the Golden Rule.

CHORUS.

Will you, will you, will you, will you, join our Sunday School?
Will you, will you, will you, will you, learn this Golden Rule?

To do to others as I would that they should do to me,
Will make me gentle, kind and good, as every child should be.
I know I should not take nor use the smallest thing I see,
Which I should never like to lose if it belonged to me.

And this plain rule forbids me quite to strike an angry blow,
Because I should not think it right if others served me so;
But whate'er kindness I can do, I'll do so e'er it be,
For I am very glad indeed when they are kind to me.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN

AS FATHER, PHYSICIAN, AND PREACHER.

His contract with his children—As bends the twig, so inclines the tree—The child his own doctor—Temperance inculcated—Diet recommended—Cleanliness enforced—The true laws of health—The new religion—A remarkable sermon.

Scar a Sapling in its Youth, and the Gnarled Oak will tell you of it for generations to come.

Having seen Mr. Train's remarkable contract with his children, we asked permission to publish it in the Herald of Health. Mr. Train is an ardent advocate of Hydropathy and Hygiene. While there are two or three points in the article slightly at variance with our practice and preaching, it is both interesting and valuable, and will provoke healthy thought.—Pubs. of Herald of Health.

LAWS OF HEALTH.

The Chinese only pay their Doctors when they are well.

George Francis Train covenants and agrees with his beloved children to pay the following amounts to each, for each and every month the said children refrain from breaking any of the following laws of health:

[It is not to make you love money, except for the good you can do with it, that I make this agreement, but simply as a reward of merit.]

1. Every morning take a bath, first wetting your head and chest with water at from seventy to seventy-five degrees, not over five minutes; running round the room with a linen sheet over you, instead of rubbing with rough towels. Never wash in warm water, - - - - - Five Cents.
2. Every morning brush your teeth, using cold water, instead of powder, sozodont, or other compounds, which ruin the teeth, Five Cents.
3. Play in the open air, exercise by walking, riding, driving, swimming, skating, rowing, running, etc. Dancing is also capital exercise. When older, you will be taught base ball, cricket, ten pins, billiards, single stick, boxing, fencing, use of the pistol, shot gun, and rifle. Remember that earth, water, air, and sunshine are God's physicians, Five Cents.
4. Wear no silk, cotton, woollen, or flannel underclothes next to the skin; being non-conductors, they close the pores; linen, being a conductor, should always be used, - - - - Five Cents.
5. Wear no corsets, tight dresses, tight waistbands, suspenders, or tight shoes, and never use powder, or rouge, or eat slate pencils. Remember that clean finger-nails indicate good breeding, - - - - Five Cents.
6. Drink no water at meals; too much fluid injures digestion, by diluting the gastric juice, - Five Cents.
7. No meat for breakfast; but one glass of new milk, with bread (one day old), boiled rice, or farina, and ripe domestic fruits. (Remember that fruit is gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night.) For dinner, eat any kind of meat (except hog meat) and vegetables. For supper, milk and bread (one day old) will answer. Drink two glasses of water (not ice water) two hours before every meal (six to eight glasses a day). After supper, eat nothing, drink nothing, - - - - Five Cents.
8. Eat nothing between the several meals (which should be every six hours), - - - Five Cents.
9. Always eat slowly and be regular at meals, and sit up straight at the table, - - - Five Cents.
10. Drink no kind of wine, spirits, beer, cider, bitters, or other fermented liquors, - - Five Cents.
11. Use no cigars, tobacco, or snuff, - - - - Five Cents.
12. Drink no coffee, tea, chocolate, cocoa, or any other warm slops, - - - - Five Cents.
13. Take no sugar, - - Five Cents.
14. Take no pepper, - - Five Cents.
14. Take no mustard, catsup, or oils, - - - - Five Cents.
16. No candy of any kind, - Five Cents.
17. No nuts of any kind, - Five Cents.
18. No cheese, - - - Five Cents.
19. Very little butter and very little salt, - - - - Five Cents.
20. No ice-cream or other confectionery, - - - - Five Cents.
21. No cakes, pies, or pastry, Five Cents.
22. No pickles, olives, or peppers, Five Cents.
23. No lobster, oysters, crabs, salmon, or any kind of fish, - Five Cents.
24. Drink no soda, congress, or mineral waters of any kind; they are poisonous, - - Five Cents.
25. Take no salt water baths (the salt closes the pores, irritates the nerves, and is injurious to health), but play in the sand on the beach, - - - Five Cents.
26. Sleep always with your windows open, and do not be afraid of catching cold. Rise early. Retire early. Nine hours is ample. Use linen sheets, - Five Cents.
27. Never sleep during the day time, or read while lying down; especially, never read at night, while in bed, - - - Five Cents.
28. Don't stand over the register, or too near the fire, and always ventilate the room, - - Five Cents.
29. Take no medicines, nor drink Bourbon, even if the doctor advises it. Medicine and intoxicating liquors are poison, - Five Cents.

When twelve years old one more most important law will be added.

Obey these important rules, my darling, and you will set an important example to your elders.

Perhaps you can get your teacher to introduce these simple rules into her excellent school.

For each and every rule broken, said children are to pay said G. F. T. five (5) cents.

Sealed, signed and delivered, in presence of } [SEAL.]

THE NEW RELIGION.

Also, my child, commit this short sermon to memory, and teach it to your little friends at school, and you shall receive ten dollars every Christmas:

Don't drink. Don't smoke. Don't chew. Don't swear. Don't gamble. Don't lie. Don't steal. Don't deceive. Don't tattle. Be polite. Be generous. Be kind. Be neat. Study hard. Play hard. Be in earnest. Be self-reliant. Read good books. Love your fellow-men as well as God. Love your country and obey the laws. Love truth. Love virtue and be happy.

IN SEASON.

"I am very sorry I kept you waiting, Uncle," said George with a blush, as he took his seat in the carriage for a drive; I hope you have not been here long."

"Just thirty minutes," said the old gentleman. Then carefully folding his newspaper, he gathered up the reins and gave them a little admonitory shake.

"I am very sorry, indeed; but you see I was detained and could not get off before." He would have colored still deeper if obliged to explain the frivolous cause of his delay.

"If it could not be helped," said the other, "of course it is all right; but if it might have been avoided, why then it is another matter. Half hours are precious things, my boy, and you will find them so if you live long. Punctuality must be a young man's watchword if he ever hopes to make anything of himself or opportunities. I had a young friend once in New Haven, who went into business for himself, just as you hope to next fall, but he had this standing failing, he was always a little behind time. I remember once he had need of a thousand dollars to make a payment on a certain day. He could have gathered it up easy enough if he had commenced in time. But the day had arrived and he was in a great perplexity. Still there was an easy way out of the difficulty. He ran round to an obliging neighbor, and borrowed the sum for three days. Well, he felt quite at his ease, after the bill was paid, and the three days slipped by thoughtlessly, and he was no more ready to pay the borrowed money than he was the other. It could make no difference with the merchant, he was sure, and he hastened to him with abundant apologies. "It will make no difference at all with me," said the gentleman, blandly, "but it will make much difference with you."

"How so?" asked the other.

"I shall never lend to you again," he said politely, as if it were a pleasant fact he was communicating.

I was young then, and I always remember the little circumstance, and have often been influenced by it. Poor E. did not succeed well. Business men will soon lose confidence in you, George, if you are not always as good as your word, and every one needs the good-will of his fellows. Perfect punctuality should be your lowest aim in this respect. You will lose untold amounts of time for want of it, and cause others to do the same. This is the worst kind of pilfering. Stolen gold can be got back, or replaced, but no power can bring a lost half hour."

MOTHER'S SERMON.

"Mother," said Johnny, "our minister preached about seeking God, but he did not preach little enough for me."

"Did you not get one idea, Johnny?" asked his mother.

"No," answered Johnny, looking down, "I did not get one, not one I could tell to myself."

"I am sorry," said his mother.

"So am I," said Johnny; "but, mother, if you will only preach me a little sermon on serving God, I shall understand it," and he sat down on a cricket before her, putting his hands on her lap.

"I will try, then, Johnny," said his mother, and looking with her eyes full of love on her dear boy, she said: "Some people think serving God means to be honest and industrious, and mind your own business; some think it means to be poor. A long, long while ago men thought they were serving God when they put his people in prisons, when they beat them, and burnt them, and tortured them in many cruel ways. And some people now think if they only go to church every Sunday, they are certainly serving God. But people may do all this, and never serve God at all. In order to serve God aright, two things are necessary; first, we must know what it is he wants us to do; and the second is, we must have help to do it. And the Lord Jesus Christ gives us both of these, Johnny, to help us to serve God. In the gospel he shows us what to do—that we must repent of our sins and believe on him as our Savior, that is, we must become true christians. We never begin to serve God aright until our hearts are changed. Whatever we may do until our hearts are changed, we cannot please God."

"But can we change our own hearts?" asked Johnny.

"Not without Christ," she answered. "He can change our evil hearts by his Holy Spirit, and make us christians. Without him we can do nothing; but with his help we can do all things. So you see, Johnny, that the help we need to serve God must come from Jesus. If we want to be servants of God, we must learn of Jesus. Your father and mother, and your ministers and teachers, Johnny, can show you what to do, but they cannot make you do it. The blessed Lord Jesus can show you what to do, and work in you to do it. He can give you all the knowledge and all the aid you need."

How anxious we should all be to learn of Jesus; and what a blessed teacher is he!—Child's Paper.

THE PILGRIM'S SONG OF HOPE.

TUNE—"Tramp! tramp! tramp!" or its sequel, "On! On! On!"

Soon the glorious day will come
When the Savior will appear,
And will gather all who're waiting for the Lord
Safe into the promised land,
Where in joy and peace they'll stand;
So 'tis promised in the holy, sacred word.

CHORUS.

Come! come! come! the saints are calling,
Savior, come to earth again;
Come and banish all the strife,
Bring the sleeping ones to life,
And restore the earth to its Edenic bloom.

See! the signs in every land
All proclaim His coming near;
Signs in sun and moon and stars have all appeared;
Nations now are all distressed,
Men's hearts now are sorely pressed,
For the fear of what is coming on the earth.

Everywhere throughout the land
Demons, a united band,
To deceive the wicked nations have gone forth;
But the children of the Son,
Who have got the armor on,
Satan cannot them destroy or lead astray.

Spirits tell us there's no truth
In the sacred word we love,
Which declares, to save a sin-polluted race
Jesus died upon the cross,
Suffered shame and grief and loss,
By his blood to reconcile us unto God.

Now with them we will not hold,
For their coming is foretold
In the book they love to trample under foot;
But we'll trust in Jesus' name,
And his love and mercy claim,
That a home with them may be our happy part.

Come, my brethren, let us be
Girded for the strife anew,
Jesus over all our foes will vict'ry give;
So we'll keep his precepts pure,
And unto the end endure,
That amid the new earth's glory we may live.

Child of sorrow, look above,
Jesus smiles on thee in love,
And will shortly banish all thy grief and woe;
Soon he'll come and wipe the tear
That has flowed so often here,—
Glory, honor, wealth and beauty thou shalt know.

Let our lives be holy, pure,
Hardness may we well endure;
Jesus helps us all our toilsome journey through.
All from strife and fashion free,
From the world unspotted be,
Then with joy we'll hail the coming of the day.

THE FOUR CHICKENS.

In the spring of 1864, through a multiplicity of the cares and labors incident to city service, my wife became feeble, and manifested very marked tendencies toward consumption. It was therefore concluded that we must move, or she must die. The providence of God guided us in the matter; and after much vain seeking for rents and places, we packed our goods and started for Lawrence, not knowing whither we went. No proper tenement could be found to rent, but there was one for sale, which I had nearly concluded to take, and indeed I had written a letter requesting a friend to close the bargain, but could not bring my mind to mail it, and so I have it in my drawer to this day.

On arriving at L. with my family, about the first of June, I went to look again at this place, quite inclined to take it. But just then I heard of another, only a few rods distant, at the same price and much more desirable, with a garden all planted and growing, plenty of fruit, excellent water, and all ready to our hand. It was purchased, the money being borrowed and since repaid, and in one week we were in it, at home. It was quite in the country,—though surrounded by neighbors,—high, dry, sunny, and airy, and very pleasant with its trees and flowers and fruits. Very little, however, did I enjoy them, as I am a wanderer to and fro. But my wife's cough wore away, my poor old mother seemed to gain in health, my two boys played under the shade trees and got more brown and healthy, and my little daughter, who came to us there to fill an aching void—made years ago by the opening of a little grave—grew, and crowed, and played, as wonderful babies always do.

Once or twice in a month, or two months, or three months, I got home to spend a day, but for the rest of the time I could only pray for them and commit them to the keeping of God.

Returning at one time from a tenting tour in Maine, a christian friend gave me a box of chickens to carry home. Accordingly we engaged in the keeping of "live stock," farmer like. But they must have a house, or they would scratch the garden up, and so good old father R——, the carpenter, came and built it, and so the chickens were taken care of. But these, though they crowed, scratched, layed, and cackled, after the most approved fashion—all but the laying, which was too scanty—were not "the four chickens" I began to write about.

A few weeks ago, a widow lady called on my wife, and said to her that she wished her to take four chickens and keep them for her. She told her story. She had lived in the west, and had a husband and children. One by one they sickened and died,—husband, children and all; and she was left alone. Her youngest child had a pet chicken, and when the last of her darlings was laid in the grave, this little pet came to be precious to her, as such things are to the desolate, and bereft, and broken-hearted. So she kept it, and from it, in process of time, came three others; these were the four chickens. She had left her old home, come back to the East, brought these little waifs all the long journey, and now was nursing and working out, and had no place to put them; and wanted them to be kept there. So my wife yielded her consent, and the good woman brought her homely little treasure, and her corn, and meal, and oats, and buckwheat, to feed them.

The little things brought sad memories to her. "There," said she, "that is all I have left of my home and family," and then she buried her face in her hands, and sobbed and wept as if her heart would break. All this was very simple, no doubt; but mothers whose little ones are mouldering under the green-sward, and who weep over little socks and half-worn baby-shoes, will not laugh at it very much.

She came often to see her pets, and talked just as many others in the same condition would about what she had lost, and all she had left. To be sure it seemed simple, but doesn't God take notice of sparrows? and chickens are much greater than they.

Our house stands on a corner, broadside to one road on the north, and the west end of it has an extension and a wood-house. In the rear runs up a flight of stairs to an attic fitted for a school-room, and under these stairs lay some pine leaves and boughs which the children had gathered from a clearing to kindle the fire. Next is the wood-house, then, after a passage way, comes the kitchen, then the sitting-room and chambers, and then, fronting the road, the library with its varied stock of ancient and modern, musty and dusty, tomes. There is a little four year old boy about the house some where, a frank, shy, cunning, roguish, merry fellow, full of quaint sayings, odd plans, and wise undertakings, who was uneasy when he went there because he wanted "some noise," and who has been manufacturing a large stock of the article ever since. He likes everything that is new, or which smacks of business and enterprise. A little while ago, one raw November day, he was experimenting with matches. Just what he did, or how much, he never was inclined to relate very particularly. But at last, having done all, and perhaps more than he wanted to, at the windward end of the house, he ran away into a neighbor's field.

Pretty soon there is a whiff of blue smoke whirling on the wings of the stiff northwester, then another follows it from under those back stairs. And then a bright red flame bursts up among the pine leaves and runs up on the clapboards. The wind is very strong, blowing directly towards the house, and the family are away in the sitting-room, and have no fear of any danger. No one is passing by, and the fire makes the best use of its time. There are no men in the neighborhood, all are away at work, and a few minutes will be enough to leave the house a heap of ruins, and the library a mass of charred leaves whirling in the wind.

But just then comes a woman, breathless and excited, trying the doors and windows as if in frenzy,—they open the door to see their friend, who comes to look after her chickens, and to hear from her lips the cry of "fire!" A few buckets of water saved the house; but if we had not had that widow's four chickens, —what then?

A few geese by their cackling once saved Rome. A crowing cock preached an Apostle a sermon which he never forgot; and the widow's chickens saved the house from the devouring flames.

I came home a few days later, and when I inquired who had been "a good boy," I found one little fellow with rather a sober face. It took him quite a while to tell his story,—it came out piecemeal fashion; but after he had broken the ice, the rest helped him, and his mother said he had repented, and had been forgiven, and had asked God to forgive him, too; and so it was all made right.

But I felt a strange, sickly feeling creep over me, as I thought of my poor wearied wife's resting-place, of the few household comforts that she called her own, of the books that I had gathered in the searchings and studies and journeying and toil and poverty of many years, and thought how narrowly all had escaped. I went out and stole one hasty glance at the burned clapboards, and came away in silence. I looked, too, with a kind of reverence upon those chickens, as I carried them their morning meal, and I meditated solemnly on the whole.

The scorched boards are there now. I do not want them repaired or painted over. Let them stay, and let them preach. Will they talk to any one else as they do to me? Will any one else hear them say, "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth," and "the tongue is a fire"? Will they say, "When thou passeth through the fires, I will be with thee, and the flame shall not kindle upon thee"? Will they say, "The very hairs of your head are all numbered"?

And then those chickens. We will take good care of them now, for if they are not our all, like the widow's, yet still they bring strange thoughts to our minds. We think of Him who said, "How oft would I have gathered you as an hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." But we are willing to be thus gathered. Under his sheltering wing flood or flame cannot pursue us; all is peace. God has kept those little fowls and provided for them, and as they eat their daily portion they preach to me, and their text and sermon are all one: "God feedeth them"—"How much more are ye better than fowls." And I write this memorial in thankfulness that God gives me simplicity of spirit to see his mighty power in great things, his guiding hand in little things, and his loving kindness in all things. H.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article, we were investigating the word destruction and the word punishment, which plainly show nothing more nor less than eternal death to the wicked. But we are required to believe, when we read the words "destruction," "punishment," "perish," and "death," that they mean eternal life in misery. But Mr. Webster says the word destruction means ruin, or eternal death, and we certainly know better than to understand the word "eternal death" to mean eternal life in misery.

We will now turn to another passage found in 2 Thess. 1: 7–10, where we have St. Paul's words, which tells us what kind of punishment the sinner must receive, when Christ comes "with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance" on the ungodly, and declares that they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be . . . admired by all them that believe, in that day." Shall we alter the word destruction, and the word punished, and call it punishing "with everlasting" preservation of life in misery, "from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power"? Would this be honest, to change the word of God to suit our creeds?

Some of our most popular theologians tell us, that after the wicked have been groaning and writhing in dreadful agony for millions of years, their sufferings are but just begun. This is the fruit of a belief in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, which originated from Satan in the garden of Eden, when he said, thou "shalt not surely die"; and the same doctrine was adopted by the heathen philosophers, and heathen priests, and was received by the Roman Catholic church, and then by the Protestant churches. It became a popular doctrine in the Catholic church, and a mighty lever to compel the people to pay over their money to keep out of purgatory.

What conclusion must we draw from the foregoing description of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and endless misery? We answer, that God has made millions of immortal souls, and put them into polluted bodies, where they will become wicked, and grow up in a world of sin and wickedness, where they cannot repent, unless compelled by divine grace, as the orthodox tell us; and then only about one out of ten or twenty is ever brought in and converted so as to be saved, and the rest consigned to endless suffering in the lake of fire and brimstone. O horrible! horrible!! What kind of a character does the doctrine reflect on God, whose name is love? B. PERHAM.

WORTHY OF ATTENTION.

Dear brethren and sisters, greeting:—To how many will the following charge apply?—"Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." Dear friends, "take heed!" The glorious day, aye, the trying day, is hastening, "and who shall be able to stand?" Are we "watching unto prayer"? praying always"? overcomers? Let us carefully heed the admonition contained in the following tract, published at the office of "The Earnest Christian," No. 62 Buffalo St., Rochester, N. Y. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." S. L. MANLY.

LOSS OF FIRST LOVE.

Here is a man who has been truly converted to God. The work was thorough. Years rolled away. He was properly instructed in all the doctrines of christianity. He has pursued a straightforward course, devoting himself to the service of God. His faith was evidenced by his works. He used his personal influence to bring all within his reach to the cross of Christ. His exertions to do good were unceasing and performed in a good spirit. He was one of the few who did not grow weary in well-doing. In the providence of God, he lived in a land where persecution raged unto death against the followers of Christ. But he endured all without faltering. Others yielded to the suggestions of fear, and turned back to the world; but he stood like a rock in the midst of the ocean, and defied the fury of the waves. The trial of his faith worked patience.

He loved righteousness and hated iniquity. Like the Psalmist, he resolved "not to know a wicked person,"—not to have one among his associates. Popular and wealthy sinners found no apologist in him; he was bold to unmask and expose hypocrites wherever found, and whatever their pretensions. He did not receive as ministers of Jesus Christ all who laid claim to that character, but tried them by their fruit, and rejected mere pretenders. What do you think of such a man? What would you think of a church composed of such members? Would it not be regarded as a model church? Would not he be deemed uncharitable who should question their claims to piety? To such a church our glorified Savior told John to write,—"I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil; and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hath labored, and hast not fainted." What a catalogue of christian virtues! What a record of devotion to the cause of Christ! Orthodox in creed, active in labors, patient in suffering for Jesus' sake, were not these christians in a state of salvation? If this church was not in the way to heaven, what church is at this day? Yet of these our Savior said, "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." Somewhat! then there was not much that was wrong; nothing of immoral tendency is alleged; no heretical notions had been entertained; the correctness of their faith was unquestioned; no wrong spirit toward their opposers had been indulged; no sinful temper had gained the ascendancy; they were not lacking in kindness to the poor, or in their contributions for the cause of Christ; they were not destitute of love; all that could be brought against them was, that they had lost their "first love." Their fervor was gone; their emotions had cooled down; their hearts no longer glowed and burned with love for Christ; they served him more from principle than from the holy impulse of gushing affection. Was this loss a serious one? Yes, a fatal one. In their own estimation, and in the eyes of the world, they were good christians; but He who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire pronounced them FALLEN. No increase of activity could avail them. A greater punctuality in attending upon the ordinances of the church could not answer the purpose. The command of Christ was,—"Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

If a church planted by Paul, and in the course of three years' faithful labor carefully instructed by him in all the christian doctrines and duties, could, during the lives of some of the apostles, thus fatally lose the grace that saves, while to outward appearance all was right; is there not reason for us to examine carefully our hearts? We may be deceived. We may think we are better off than when we were first converted; we may congratulate ourselves upon our freedom from those powerful temptations that assailed us then, and because we are settled, and "living from principle," and have no "ups and downs," conclude that all is going on smoothly, when Jesus writes against us,—"THOU HAST LEFT THY FIRST LOVE." That we may know whether we are liable to this charge, let us consider,

I. THE ELEMENTS OF A CHRISTIAN'S FIRST LOVE.

1. It is universal. God is the supreme object of affection. There is a charm in the very name of Jesus. We love his cross, his will, his word. But in subordination to God we love everybody. How often do we hear the young convert say, "Why, I have not an enemy in the world." He loves all mankind, without regard to their rank, their wealth, or the figure they make in the world. He pities the wicked and feels tender compassion for all, but loves as his brothers, those who love Jesus. Denominational lines do not limit his affection. His love is without partiality. He loves those most ardently whose love for Christ is greatest.

2. It is self-denying. A christian in his first love is ever ready to make sacrifices for the good of others. He can forego his own ease and comfort that his fellow-men may be made better and happier. When he goes to church he takes the largest conveyance at hand, that he may carry some who would not else enjoy the means of grace. He is ready when circumstances demand it to lay down his life for the salvation of souls. A pious miner was sinking a shaft with an unconverted man. They were preparing to blast, when by accident the fuse took fire. In a few minutes the explosion would take place. They both sprang into the bucket and gave the signal to be drawn up. The man above was unable to elevate them both at once. The pious man jumped out saying, "I am ready to die but you are not." The bucket reached the top just as the explosion took place. The christian man was miraculously preserved. The other never rested till he became a christian.

3. A christian's first love is ardent and bold. Its warmth is seen in the expression of the countenance, it is felt in the grasp of the hand, it is manifested in the cordial, accommodating manner, that no studied politeness can successfully imitate. His words are like breezes from the tropics in the winter season, carrying a genial warmth into the most frigid atmosphere. Visit a friend just converted to God. You may be ignorant of his conversion, you hardly need to wait for him to tell you. A glance at his very appearance reveals the glad intelligence. The boldness of the young convert, warm in his first love, is a matter of common observation. How ready are even those who are the most retiring, to testify to crowded audiences, when their hearts are warm with new-born love, their knowledge of the power of Christ to save! How willing they are to labor for the salvation of souls. One person, acting under the warm impulse of a loving heart, will do more to bring souls to Christ than a score can possibly do who are actuated by sectarian bigotry, or the cold calculations of worldly policy. His love does not expend itself in mere wishes for the revival of God's work, but he wrestles in prayer and prevails; he labors from house to house to persuade men to be saved.

4. It is spontaneous. It does not result from reasoning, nor arise from mere convictions of duty. Amiable traits in others do not originate it. Whoever is born again by the Spirit of God feels this love springing up at once in his soul. It is like the fires of the volcano, obtaining the fuel it feeds upon within, and not from without. Hence it burns with an inextinguishable blaze. It is not chilled by coldness nor silenced by neglect.

II. THE GUILT INCURRED IN LOSING OUR FIRST LOVE.

1. We insult Christ. Make the matter a personal one. There is a man whose life you have saved at the risk of your own. At a great sacrifice you have supplied him with every means of happiness. His warmest gratitude is excited. He loves you, and manifests his love in every proper way. But, by and by, he declines in his attachment. You love him ardently and continue to lavish upon him your benefactions. But he shuns your society, and when a meeting is unavoidable, greets you coldly. When others praise you he yields a cold assent. You feel injured more by his neglect than you would by open acts of hostility from an avowed enemy. Thus, by every one who loses his first love is Christ wounded in the house of his friends. His spouse—his chosen one, whom he tenderly loves, proves unfaithful to him. The most solemn vows are violated, and that too in the face of every obligation to fidelity.

2. We injure his cause. The world understands us as saying that we are disappointed, that Christ does not afford that delight in his service which we anticipated. He whose servants are always leaving him, is reputed to be a bad master. Nothing so discourages sinners from embarking in the cause of Christ, as the coldness generally manifested by those who have for a few months been in his service. The loss of his "first love" by christians hinders the conversion of the world more than all other causes combined. Ponder this statement, and the more you reflect upon it, the more you will be convinced that it is true. The guilt, then, of those who lose their first love can only be measured by the worth of souls.

3. The guilt of those who lose their first love is greater than that of those who never made a profession of piety. They sin against greater light. They have known, as no unconverted person ever has, the joys of salvation. Their path should have shone more and more unto the perfect day. The motives pressing upon them to live a life of godliness have been more clearly seen and more fully appreciated. But instead of going on they have gone back. As the obligations for them to love Christ increase, the affection they really feel for him diminishes. Was it an act of mercy on the part of God to stoop down to us in our wretchedness and guilt and adopt us in his own royal family? Each day he gives us a fresh token of his loving kindness. He unveils new beauties in his character. Our love should then continually increase.

We urge you, dear reader, to examine yourself on this point. It is so easy to be deceived. The loss of first love does not imply our falling into any open sin. Christian morality may be as strictly observed as ever. There may be punctual attention to all the forms of religion. No startling external symptoms reveal the hidden disease that is preying within. The dropsy kills not less certainly than consumption: the victims of the one waste away, while those of the other assume the appearance of an improved condition of health. The danger of those who have lost their first love is all the greater from their unconsciousness of their loss. How is it then with thee, my brother, my sister? Have you ever had this impartial, self-denying, ardent, bold, spontaneous love? Do you possess it now? Do not say, "I have not that degree of it which I should have." You either have it, or you have it not. If you have not that degree that you had when you were first converted, the case is clear. You have lost your first love. You stand in peril. Your case is one that needs prompt attention. Let us consider then,—

III. THE DIRECTIONS WHICH CHRIST GIVES TO THOSE WHO HAVE LOST THEIR FIRST LOVE.

1. "Remember from whence thou art fallen." Then thou art fallen! If thou hast lost thy first love thou art in a backslidden condition. How hard it is to admit this! but you must make the admission or you can never be restored. Thou art fallen from thy justified state—from the favor of God. Thou hast lost the privileges of an adopted member of the heavenly family. Remember this. Ponder it; dwell upon it; let thy mind become thoroughly imbued with a sense of thy loss; let the continued recollection of it press heavily by night and by day until thy spirits are weighed down with a lively appreciation of thy miserable condition. Let your heart utter the melancholy wail:

"What peaceful hours I once enjoyed,
How sweet their memory still,
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill."

When you have become thoroughly conscious of your loss you will then be ready to obey the second direction.

2. Repent. Do not stop with the remembrance and acknowledgment of thy wretched state. Welcome the tears of penitence. Therefore also now, saith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning: and rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God. Grieve over your fall; fast and weep, and mourn, and break your heart before the Lord. Humble yourself in the dust in his presence; let your fixed purpose be henceforth to please him in all your ways.

3. Do the first works. However honorable may be thy condition among men, before God thou art a sinner. Thou must come to him as such,—as thou didst at the first, when thou wast seeking pardon. Prove your repentance genuine by its fruits. Confess your sins; do not attempt to cover them up. God will bring every secret thing to light. Do not lay the blame on others; every one must give an account of himself to God. Do not palliate your fall as though it was a slight thing to lose your first love. He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all. Go deep. Be thorough. Heartily, honestly, and fully confess all. From your closet go to your family. Tell them how cold and formal you have been; how you have lost the ardor of your affection for Christ and his cause. Begin to labor earnestly for their salvation. Acknowledge how you have let a vain ambition that they might make a figure in the world creep in, and begin in good earnest to teach them to live for a glorious immortality. They have caught from you a worldly spirit, let them now learn from you the worthlessness of all earthly things compared with the salvation of the soul.

4. How hard it is for poor human nature to follow these simple, necessary directions of Christ! Men will do almost anything else first. They will bustle about, increase their zeal, their prayers, their liberality, but how unwilling to humble themselves for a loss of their first love, and repent! Many who have been led up to this point by the Spirit of God, have stoutly refused to yield, and have brought upon them the woe that our Savior pronounced: I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. THEIR LIGHT HAS GONE OUT. They no longer see their condition, or the requirements of God, but really think they enjoy religion, and are in the way to heaven, when their feet are fast taking hold of hell. In this dreadful condition are, we fear, many professed christians, and even ministers of the gospel. From these ranks come the army of persecutors of Holy Ghost religion.

Sincere, but deluded man! If you settle down in your present state your damnation is certain! It will soon be easy for you to believe a lie. Your hold upon evangelical truth is growing weaker. You are now in doubt in reference to things that you once knew with the greatest certainty. Your strict observance of the rules of morality and of the forms of religion, serves as an opiate to your conscience, and God can scarcely awaken you! Every month you continue as you are makes your condition worse, and lessens the probability of your recovery. Insensibility is fast stealing upon you. Go on as you are and you will fall into that most dangerous of all conditions—a religious lethargy. And, when death comes and seizes you with his bony hand, and shakes you over the grave, you will, even then, only partially awake, like one disturbed from an opium sleep, and thus be hurried away to the retributions of eternity to be awakened by the crackling of the fires of hell and the agonizing cries of the damned! O bestir thyself betimes. Hasten to Jesus. Bathe his feet with your tears, and consecrate your life anew to his service. Rest not till fully restored to the favor of God.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

In the year 1861, I enlisted in the army. Prior to this time I contracted the habit of using tobacco, but rather moderately. Changing my mode of living, and being among entire strangers, I sought my only favorite—tobacco, and ere I was aware of the evil, I had become such a slave to the use of the obnoxious weed that I could not be satisfied a moment (unless while eating or sleeping) without either a chew in my mouth, or smoking a pipe or cigar. I knew it was not only a filthy habit, but that, at this rate, it would soon end my days. In the year 1863, I was converted to God. I felt that God had pardoned my sins, and I tried to consecrate my all to him, to be used in any way he should direct. I was made to feel that the sacrifice was accepted. I continued the use of tobacco, intending at some future time to break off from using it. Conscience began to sting, and I knew that I was using that which did not belong to me, (for all was God's) and I was setting a bad example before my comrades. I resolved to quit the use of it. I tried, but it seemed as though the habit was so fastened that I could not break away. Oh, what a dear idol, and how loth was I to give it up! I tried only in my own strength; and concluded I could not give it up; and after a few days used it with greater appetite, if possible, than before. In this way I tried several times, but with the same result. Amidst the smitings of conscience, I continued to use the miserable stuff, pressing the dear idol, as it were, nearer my heart, instead of continuing to strive by the grace of God to rid myself of it; but still professing to be wholly the Lord's, and in all other things, trying to do his will.

About a month after my conversion, I visited a sick brother in his tent; we talked about Jesus, what he had done for us, and what he was still doing. Soon the conversation changed, (it must have been the Lord's doing,) and "tobacco" became the topic. I (although not addressed as one who used it,) could not but admit the habit to be wrong, and spoke of having tried to quit it, but without success. I could not."

"Oh," said my brother, "will you not quit it for Jesus' sake?"

Never, never! can I erase from memory's page the occurrence. The mind wandered back in a moment to the place from which I had been taken. I saw what he had done for me, and then, and there resolved, that by His grace I would use it no more. I took from my mouth a chew and threw it away; took out of my pocket all I had with me and threw it away, went to my tent and likewise disposed of what I had in my valise, and asked God to destroy the appetite for it. It was done, and for more than two years I have not desired it in any way. Praise God! He has power to cleanse us from not only one sin but all. Hallelujah! . . .—Earnest Christian.

PLEDGE OF THE TEE COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

Will you come and join our Sunday School? I really wish you would,
O come and join our Bible class, and learn how to be good;
We learn to sing, we learn to pray, in our sweet Sunday School,
And there we learn of Jesus too, who gave the Golden Rule.

CHORUS.

Will you, will you, will you, will you, join our Sunday School?
Will you, will you, will you, will you, learn this Golden Rule?

To do to others as I would that they should do to me,
Will make me gentle, kind and good, as every child should be.
I know I should not take nor use the smallest thing I see,
Which I should never like to lose if it belonged to me.

And this plain rule forbids me quite to strike an angry blow,
Because I should not think it right if others served me so;
But whate'er kindness I can do, I'll do so e'er it be,
For I am very glad indeed when they are kind to me.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN

AS FATHER, PHYSICIAN, AND PREACHER.

His contract with his children—As bends the twig, so inclines the tree—The child his own doctor—Temperance inculcated—Diet recommended—Cleanliness enforced—The true laws of health—The new religion—A remarkable sermon.

Sow a Sapling in its Youth, and the Gnarled Oak will tell you of it for generations to come.

Having seen Mr. Train's remarkable contract with his children, we asked permission to publish it in the Herald of Health. Mr. Train is an ardent advocate of Hydropathy and Hygiene. While there are two or three points in the article slightly at variance with our practice and preaching, it is both interesting and valuable, and will provoke healthy thought.—Pubs. of Herald of Health.

LAWS OF HEALTH.

The Chinese only pay their Doctors when they are well.

George Francis Train covenants and agrees with his beloved children to pay the following amounts to each, for each and every month the said children refrain from breaking any of the following laws of health:

[It is not to make you love money, except for the good you can do with it, that I make this agreement, but simply as a reward of merit.]

1. Every morning take a bath, first wetting your head and chest with water at from seventy to seventy-five degrees, not over five minutes; running round the room with a linen sheet over you, instead of rubbing with rough towels. Never wash in warm water, - - - - - Five Cents.
2. Every morning brush your teeth, using cold water, instead of powder, sozodont, or other compounds, which ruin the teeth, Five Cents.
3. Play in the open air, exercise by walking, riding, driving, swimming, skating, rowing, running, etc. Dancing is also capital exercise. When older, you will be taught base ball, cricket, ten pins, billiards, single stick, boxing, fencing, use of the pistol, shot gun, and rifle. Remember that earth, water, air, and sunshine are God's physicians, Five Cents.
4. Wear no silk, cotton, woollen, or flannel underclothes next to the skin; being non-conductors, they close the pores; linen, being a conductor, should always be used, - - - - Five Cents.
5. Wear no corsets, tight dresses, tight waistbands, suspenders, or tight shoes, and never use powder, or rouge, or eat slate pencils. Remember that clean finger-nails indicate good breeding, - - - - - Five Cents.
6. Drink no water at meals; too much fluid injures digestion, by diluting the gastric juice, - Five Cents.
7. No meat for breakfast; but one glass of new milk, with bread (one day old), boiled rice, or farina, and ripe domestic fruits. (Remember that fruit is gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night.) For dinner, eat any kind of meat (except hog meat) and vegetables. For supper, milk and bread (one day old) will answer. Drink two glasses of water (not ice water) two hours before every meal (six to eight glasses a day). After supper, eat nothing, drink nothing, - - - - - Five Cents.
8. Eat nothing between the several meals (which should be every six hours), - - - Five Cents.
9. Always eat slowly and be regular at meals, and sit up straight at the table, - - - Five Cents.
10. Drink no kind of wine, spirits, beer, cider, bitters, or other fermented liquors, - - Five Cents.
11. Use no cigars, tobacco, or snuff, - - - - Five Cents.
12. Drink no coffee, tea, chocolate, cocoa, or any other warm slops, - - - - Five Cents.
13. Take no sugar, - - Five Cents.
14. Take no pepper, - - Five Cents.
14. Take no mustard, catsup, or oils, - - - - - Five Cents.
16. No candy of any kind, - Five Cents.
17. No nuts of any kind, - Five Cents.
18. No cheese, - - - Five Cents.
19. Very little butter and very little salt, - - - - Five Cents.
20. No ice-cream or other confectionery, - - - - Five Cents.
21. No cakes, pies, or pastry, Five Cents.
22. No pickles, olives, or peppers, Five Cents.
23. No lobster, oysters, crabs, salmon, or any kind of fish, - Five Cents.
24. Drink no soda, congress, or mineral waters of any kind; they are poisonous, - - Five Cents.
25. Take no salt water baths (the salt closes the pores, irritates the nerves, and is injurious to health), but play in the sand on the beach, - - - Five Cents.
26. Sleep always with your windows open, and do not be afraid of catching cold. Rise early. Retire early. Nine hours is ample. Use linen sheets, - Five Cents.
27. Never sleep during the day time, or read while lying down; especially, never read at night, while in bed. - - - Five Cents.
28. Don't stand over the register, or too near the fire, and always ventilate the room, - - Five Cents.
29. Take no medicines, nor drink Bourbon, even if the doctor advises it. Medicine and intoxicating liquors are poisons, - Five Cents.

When twelve years old one more most important law will be added.

Obey these important rules, my darling, and you will set an important example to your elders.

Perhaps you can get your teacher to introduce these simple rules into her excellent school.

For each and every rule broken, said children are to pay said G. F. T. five (5) cents.

Sealed, signed and delivered, } in presence of } [SEAL.]

THE NEW RELIGION.

Also, my child, commit this short sermon to memory, and teach it to your little friends at school, and you shall receive ten dollars every Christmas:

Don't drink. Don't smoke. Don't chew. Don't swear. Don't gamble. Don't lie. Don't steal. Don't deceive. Don't tattle. Be polite. Be generous. Be kind. Be neat. Study hard. Play hard. Be in earnest. Be self-reliant. Read good books. Love your fellow-men as well as God. Love your country and obey the laws. Love truth. Love virtue and be happy.

IN SEASON.

"I am very sorry I kept you waiting, Uncle," said George with a blush, as he took his seat in the carriage for a drive; I hope you have not been here long."

"Just thirty minutes," said the old gentleman. Then carefully folding his newspaper, he gathered up the reins and gave them a little admonitory shake.

"I am very sorry, indeed; but you see I was detained and could not get off before." He would have colored still deeper if obliged to explain the frivolous cause of his delay.

"If it could not be helped," said the other, "of course it is all right; but if it might have been avoided, why then it is another matter. Half hours are precious things, my boy, and you will find them so if you live long. Punctuality must be a young man's watchword if he ever hopes to make anything of himself or opportunities. I had a young friend once in New Haven, who went into business for himself, just as you hope to next fall, but he had this standing failing, he was always a little behind time. I remember once he had need of a thousand dollars to make a payment on a certain day. He could have gathered it up easy enough if he had commenced in time. But the day had arrived and he was in a great perplexity. Still there was an easy way out of the difficulty. He ran round to an obliging neighbor, and borrowed the sum for three days. Well, he felt quite at his ease, after the bill was paid, and the three days slipped by thoughtlessly, and he was no more ready to pay the borrowed money than he was the other. It could make no difference with the merchant, he was sure, and he hastened to him with abundant apologies. "It will make no difference at all with me," said the gentleman, blandly, "but it will make much difference with you."

"How so?" asked the other.

"I shall never lend to you again," he said politely, as if it were a pleasant fact he was communicating.

I was young then, and I always remember the little circumstance, and have often been influenced by it. Poor E. did not succeed well. Business men will soon lose confidence in you, George, if you are not always as good as your word, and every one needs the good-will of his fellows. Perfect punctuality should be your lowest aim in this respect. You will lose untold amounts of time for want of it, and cause others to do the same. This is the worst kind of pilfering. Stolen gold can be got back, or replaced, but no power can bring a lost half hour."

MOTHER'S SERMON.

"Mother," said Johnny, "our minister preached about seeking God, but he did not preach little enough for me."

"Did you not get one idea, Johnny?" asked his mother.

"No," answered Johnny, looking down, "I did not get one, not one I could tell to myself."

"I am sorry," said his mother.

"So am I," said Johnny; "but, mother, if you will only preach me a little sermon on serving God, I shall understand it," and he sat down on a cricket before her, putting his hands on her lap.

"I will try, then, Johnny," said his mother, and looking with her eyes full of love on her dear boy, she said: "Some people think serving God means to be honest and industrious, and mind your own business; some think it means to be poor. A long, long while ago men thought they were serving God when they put his people in prisons, when they beat them, and burnt them, and tortured them in many cruel ways. And some people now think if they only go to church every Sunday, they are certainly serving God. But people may do all this, and never serve God at all. In order to serve God aright, two things are necessary; first, we must know what it is he wants us to do; and the second is, we must have help to do it. And the Lord Jesus Christ gives us both of these, Johnny, to help us to serve God. In the gospel he shows us what to do—that we must repent of our sins and believe on him as our Savior, that is, we must become true christians. We never begin to serve God aright until our hearts are changed. Whatever we may do until our hearts are changed, we cannot please God."

"But can we change our own hearts?" asked Johnny.

"Not without Christ," she answered. "He can change our evil hearts by his Holy Spirit, and make us christians. Without him we can do nothing; but with his help we can do all things. So you see, Johnny, that the help we need to serve God must come from Jesus. If we want to be servants of God, we must learn of Jesus. Your father and mother, and your ministers and teachers, Johnny, can show you what to do, but they cannot make you do it. The blessed Lord Jesus can show you what to do, and work in you to do it. He can give you all the knowledge and all the aid you need."

How anxious we should all be to learn of Jesus; and what a blessed teacher is he!—Child's Paper.

GUIDE MY STEPS.

As I ascend the rugged steep,
Daylight changing into night,
With weary limbs and bleeding feet,
Guide my steps, O God, aright.
A yawning gulf is seen below,
Dark and wide and deep,
And gurgling waters heard to flow
Just below my aching feet.

Show me, O God, where I can place
My feet on solid ground,
Then I shall know that I am safe
From dangers all around.
Show me where I can be secure
From perils on each hand,
And that one day I shall be sure
Of gaining higher land.

Then I with courage will ascend
High up the mountain side;
And have the Savior for my friend,
Who will forever guide.
Then I shall gain the rugged height,
And dwell among the blest,
And bathe my weary soul in light,
And rest, forever rest.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER FOUR.

The abomination of desolation is something inaugurated in the place of the daily sacrifice, which will lead us to inquire what the daily sacrifice means.

This form of speech, no doubt, was taken from the old dispensational arrangement, or tabernacle worship. We learn that there were two kinds of service under the first Testament, viz: the daily and the annual, both of which were significant of the ministry of the new.

1. The annual sacrifice made by the High Priest at the end of every year, typifies the one sacrifice for sin made by the Son of God in the end of the Jewish dispensation, in the offering up of himself. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9: 25, 26.

The daily sacrifice, which was a lamb offered morning and evening, represented the daily mediation of Christ. There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. Again it is said, "He ever liveth to make intercession." The intercession of Christ is a holy office, or place. None has the right to stand there but Christ himself; hence, when we see men standing, or pretending to stand there, and in their arrogant claims sustained by the civil and military authority, may not that constitute the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place? or, as recorded by another evangelist, standing where it ought not?

The pope of Rome has arrogated to himself a work and titles which alone belong to Christ. He claims to be the head of the church. He claims supremacy and infallibility. He claims the right of purging the church of heresy and heretics; hence, in the maintenance of his blasphemous pretensions, he has waged a religious war upon the saints, and inaugurated a tribulation such as never was from the beginning of the world, no, nor never shall be. How striking the prediction, "Then shall be great tribulation," i. e., when ye see the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place.

This tribulation is to be greater than the church has ever experienced before, in two respects:

1. As to its duration.
2. As to its severity.

This power was to wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws, and they were to be given into his hands until a time, times, and the dividing of time, which covers a period of 1260 years. This is a marked, specific tribulation. The church has passed through periods of severe trial before, but none so long and cruel as the one we denominate the Papal Tribulation. The church in Egypt was subjected to persecution likewise. During the reign of the Judges there were seasons of bondage and trial. Also, the Babylonian captivity was a period of seventy years' tribulation. So the ten persecutions under Pagan Rome, the last of which was the most severe of any, and covered a period of but ten years. But the persecution under Papal Rome covers a period of more than twelve centuries, during which time more than 50,000,000 were martyred.

There are two good reasons why we can never experience another tribulation like the foregoing, and

1. There will not be time enough; for, unless we have erred in our interpretation of the prophetic periods, we have some time since passed the 1260 years, which brings us within seventy-five years of the end of this age.

2. Although the Man of Sin may have the disposition to persecute the church, he has not the power; for judgment has sat upon that horn, and they have taken away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end.

Having endeavored to make this matter plain, we now pass to consider the next event in order in the twenty-fourth of Matthew.

Verse 22d,—"And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

"Those days," in this verse, I understand to refer to the most severe portion of the 1260 years' tribulation. We have before shown that this period of tribulation is divided into two parts, as seen by the opening of the fourth and fifth seals, the last of which comes under the Inquisition of the Romish church, which court was established in the reign of Pope Innocent III. Says Jones in his Church History, "Every mode of torture practised by the church in the punishment of heretics, up to the time of Pope Innocent III., when compared with those practised by the Inquisition, was a mere bungling affair."

The object of this infernal institution was to exterminate all who would not bow to the pope and acknowledge his supremacy, whether Jews, heathen, or christian. It was thro' its instrumentality that the Moors were driven from Spain in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, at the same time 40,000 Jews perished; while the disciples of our Lord, in every land where the triple tyrant held sway, were scourged to prison and to death.

Unless God had interposed and thwarted the designs of the Inquisition, no flesh outside of the apostate church would have been saved from death at its hand; "but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." God has a special work for his church to do in the time of the end, in publishing the gospel of the kingdom among all nations for a witness; and while the Inquisition was in full vogue, a work could not be done without interruption. Hence, to give his church an opportunity to finish the last work of mercy for the world, that tribulation was not suffered to continue to the end, but its days were shortened.

Verse 23d,—"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." The time for the cry of Lo here, and Lo there, to be made, is after the ending of the great tribulation, and as may appear from the following verses, the cry itself is in respect to the manner of Christ's second coming.

Verse 24th,—"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and great wonders, insomuch that if it were possible they would deceive the very elect."

Verses 25, 26,—"Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, "Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not."

In another section of our exposition of this chapter, we have shown that within the last thirteen hundred years, many false mediators have appeared in the professed Christian church, answering to the prediction,—"Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ," etc. But the false Christs of the 24th, 25th, and 26th verses, are a different class and profession; for these last mentioned claim to fulfil the long looked for promise, "If I go away I will come again." By them the personal coming of Christ is ignored, and while they admit that the Scriptures teach such an event as the second coming of Christ, they argue it is to be fulfilled by proxy. The Shakers of latter day claim that the second advent of Christ was realized in the person of Ann Lee. The Swedenborgians, in the person of Emanuel Swedenborg. While the Spiritualists apply it to the spirit manifestations.

These false pretenders have indeed shown great signs and wonders, like Simon Magus of old, if possible to deceive the very elect of God, and lead them to relinquish their hope in the personal return of the Nobleman. But the teachings of our Savior are too plain upon this point. They can be misinterpreted only by the enemies of the Lord. Says the Master, "Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say, Behold he is in the desert, go not forth. Behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not. For as the lightning that cometh out of the east and shineth unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." And not as the Shakers say, in the person of Ann Lee, in the desert, nor in secret circles of Spiritualists; but as the lightning, lighting the very heavens with glory, coming in all the glory of the Father, with the holy angels. And it is because his coming is thus described as visible, personal, and glorious, that it is not possible to deceive the very elect. Jesus said to his flock,—"If I go away I will come again, and receive you unto myself;" and upon this promise the church for eighteen hundred years has been resting all her hopes of future blessedness and glory.

Verse 29th. Here we have introduced signs which are to mark the last generation of the world's history, as follows:—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light; and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken."

"Those days" must refer to the days of papal reign, and the tribulation of those days has more special reference to the period of Inquisitorial tribulation, which commenced in the thirteenth century. Though the whole twelve hundred and sixty years are characterized by suffering to the church, yet there is a part of those days more specially marked as a period of unparalleled affliction. And it is that part of those days during which the Inquisition was in operation. This division of the twelve hundred and sixty years into two parts, and one more severe than the other, is recognized in Rev. 6th, under the opening of the fourth and fifth seals. When the fourth seal was opened, the prophet beheld "a pale horse, and his name that sat thereon was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given him over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth."

The opening of the fourth seal, I think brings us to the Justinian age, when, more than at any period before, the Roman Empire was disgraced by a religious war against all whom the Bishop of Rome and the Council of Chalcedon might pronounce heretics. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them which were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." In my humble opinion, the fifth seal brings us to the point in the reign of Anti-Christ when the Inquisition was established; a time of greater trial than ever was realized before, when from those gory rocks arose the cry,—"How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" It is said that when the Inquisition at Madrid was destroyed, this very language was found graven upon the walls of its cells.

When the sixth seal was opened, the same events are enumerated which are spoken of in the 24th of Matthew, as immediately to follow the great tribulation. Matthew says when the abomination of desolation stands in the holy place, there shall be great tribulation.

John says when the fourth and fifth seals were opened there went forth a rider on a pale horse, who had power to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth; and from under the altar the blood of martyred ones cried for vengeance. Matthew says, immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven. John says,—"When he had opened the sixth seal, there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, and the stars of heaven fell to the earth," etc.

All must see a perfect coincidence between the two portions of Scripture cited above. The Inquisition continued its rage, more or less, till about 1779, at which time the order of the Jesuits, who had done more, perhaps, to perpetuate its life and existence than any other class, was suppressed.

* In 1790, the year following, the sun was supernaturally darkened, the moon did not give her light. The darkness extended over New England, as far south as Virginia, and north through the Canadas. Some are now living who recollect it. Mr. Gage says:—"The sun rose clear and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by 10 A. M. the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the field and retire to their dwellings; fowls went to their roosts, and before noon lights became necessary to the transaction of business within doors; the darkness continued throughout the day, and the night, till nearly day, was as unusually dark as the day had been."

Rev. Mr. Tenney, of Exeter, N. H., says, "The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. I could not help observing at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible with the blackest velvet."

Dr. Webster says,—"That was a remarkable day. Candles were lighted in many houses; the birds were silent and disappeared, and the fowls went to roost."

"The legislature of Connecticut was then in session at Hartford. A very general opinion prevailed that the day of judgment was at hand. The house of representatives, being unable to transact their business, adjourned."

To the view that this was the fulfillment of our Lord's prophecy, it may be objected that there have been other dark days of a similar nature realized at different times, and why should the dark day of 1780 be selected from the others and presented as a sign? I answer, because the events of May 19th, 1780, filled the picture of the prophecy, and no other dark day ever did. Although there may have been many dark days of an extraordinary character before the one referred to in 1780, they did not fill the picture, because the prophecy takes into account night as well as day. The SUN shall be darkened, and the MOON shall not give her light. In 1780, the 19th day of May, the moon was within twenty-four hours of a full; and, according to the above cited testimony, the darkness of the night following the dark day was as extraordinary as the darkness of the day had been.

Hence I repeat, the events of the 19th day of May fill the prophetic picture, and no other darkening of the sun ever did before; for to have the picture full you must have the sun and the moon darkened together. A. ROSS.

Selected for the Crisis.

AN INFALLIBLE CURE FOR LOWNESS OF SPIRITS.

Take one ounce of spirits of resolution, an equal proportion of the oil of good conscience; infuse into these a table-spoonful of the salts of patience, and add thereto a few sprigs of other's woes, which grow extensively in the garden of life. Gather, also, a handful of the blossoms of hope; sweeten these with the balm of providence, and if possible procure a few drops of genuine friendship, but be careful of counterfeits in the ingredients of self-interest, which grow spontaneously; the least admixture of it with the above would spoil the composition. Reduce the whole to an electuary by a proper proportion of content, flavor with the essence of good judgment, and regulate the quantity taken according to the virulence of the disease. Having tried the above receipt, we know it to be an infallible cure.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

B. C. 494. With B. C. 494 begins the reign of Belshazzar, who, according to the Alexandrian Chronicle, reigned four years. Supposing that he was the same with Nabonadius of the Canon, we in the Book of Daniel Opened gave him seventeen years.

B. C. 492. "In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar," Daniel was "at Shusan." "Pliny says that Susa was built by Darius Hystaspes."—Times of Daniel, p. 82. If so, the time Daniel was there could not have been before the beginning of his reign, which proves that Darius Hystaspes was the Darius of Daniel.

B. C. 491. According to Eusebius, "The conquest of Babylon was in the twentieth of Cyrus" which, according to our chronology, was B. C. 491. With the conquest of Babylon, Daniel begins "the first year of Darius, the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes" (Dan. 9: 1), which we have proved to be Darius the son of Astyages. That Daniel did not mean that this was the beginning of his reign, but only his "first year" over Babylon, would appear from his age at that time, being "about threescore and two years old." Dan. 5: 31. And that the thirty-first year of his reign did begin some new epoch, would appear from this. Some historians give Darius only thirty years (Times of Daniel p. 242); which may be accounted for upon the supposition that the thirty years mark the end of his reign in Persia, and his thirty-first year the beginning of his reign over Babylon; for with his thirty-first year, his first over Babylon began. This is the first Darius found, either in sacred or profane history; and, according to Ptolemy, "In the thirty-first year of Darius THE FIRST... at the middle of the sixth hour,... the moon was eclipsed on the south, two digits"; and my tables eclipse more than two and a half digits at forty minutes after eleven o'clock, at Babylon, on the evening of the 25th of April, B. C. 491; hence this is proved to be the thirty-first year of the reign of Darius the first. It is remarkable, that while this, the last eclipse claimed to have been recorded at Babylon, marks the time of the fall of Babylon; the one claimed to have been observed in the seventh of Cambyses, the father of Cyrus, marks the time of the death of Nebuchadnezzar the great, from which it would appear that this was the object in preserving these eclipses, while the others are lost.

According to Clemens Alexandrinus, "Babylon was destroyed one hundred and eighty-six years before the death of Alexander." (Clemens Alex. Stromi Orosius L. ii. c. 2.) Alexander died B. C. 305, to which add 186, and we have B. C. 491, thus proving that we are correct in placing the fall of Babylon in that year.

B. C. 490. According to Megasthenes, "Baltassar being killed, Cyrus and Darius reigned together two years." Times of Daniel, p. 83.

B. C. 489. With B. C. 489 the thirty-third year of Darius ends, and some authors give the Darius "who threw Daniel into the lion's den," only thirty-three years (Times of Daniel p. 246); for, according to some, as we have already noticed, "two years after," Babylon was taken, "Darius rebelled and provoked a war, in which he was overthrown and killed by Cyrus, who became universal monarch"; and it is true that with the following year begins the acquisition of that universal empire which Cyrus called "all the kingdoms of the earth." (Ezra 1: 2.)

But the time at which Darius having "provoked a war" was "killed by Cyrus," was three years after this. The Alexandrian Chronicle gives Darius the Mede only three years (Times of Dan. p. 243); which, as I suppose, is the time of his reign under Cyrus, that is, from the time at which Cyrus became universal monarch unto the time at which Darius having rebelled was slain by Cyrus. Nicephorus also "speaks of Darius the son of Astyages after taking Babylon, being himself overthrown by Cyrus." Times of Dan. p. 276. It is said that "Baltassar being killed, Cyrus and Darius reigned together two years afterwards, Cyrus alone twenty-two years." Times of Daniel, p. 83. As this conflicts with all of the information we have on the subject, there must be some error here. I suppose the original idea was this; that when Cyrus had reigned twenty-two years as a subordinate king, he, overthrowing Darius, reigned "alone"; or, as the superior king and universal monarch; for the twenty-two years of his reign with Darius ends with the beginning of his acquisition of the empire, from which, according to Xenophon, he reigned seven years, and this being added to the twenty-two, will make the twenty-nine as given by Herodotus; hence reconciles all on this point.

B. C. 488. We have observed that the conquest of Babylon was in the year B. C. 491; from which, if we take the two years during which Darius reigned over Babylon, we have B. C. 488 for the time at which Cyrus obtained the full acquisition of the empire. Says Xenophon, after the overthrow of Babylon, Cyrus "proceeded on that expedition in which he is reported to have subdued all those nations which extend from the entrance into Syria to the Red Sea. After this, his expedition to Egypt is said to have taken place, and to have brought Egypt into subjection"; hence, from this time he claimed to have come in possession of "all the kingdoms of the earth." Ezra 1: 2.

According to Xenophon, Cyrus went to Persia just once in each year; and when he "made a journey into Persia for the seventh time during his reign," he died; hence, just seven years from the acquisition of his empire. b. 8, c. 7, § 1.

B. C. 488. Says Josephus, "In the first year of Cyrus, which was the seventieth from the day that our people were removed out of their own land into Babylon, God commiserated the captivity and calamity of these poor people, according as he had foretold to them by Jeremiah." The Lord, through Jeremiah, had said, I "will build them as at the first" (Jer. 33: 7); when they were builded as at the first, Jerusalem was restored, hence the 69 weeks of Dan. 9: 25 cannot date from a later period than this. Cyrus, at this time, "called for the most eminent Jews that were in Babylon, and said to them that he gave them leave to go back to their own country, and to rebuild the city Jerusalem, and the temple."—Jos. Ant., b. 11, c. 1, s. 2.

B. C. 487. The foundation of that temple was laid (Ezra 3: 10) in the second year of Cyrus.

B. C. 486. According to the almost unanimous consent of all writers on chronology, the death of Darius Hystaspes occurred B. C. 486. But those who prefer a reason for their belief must feel indebted to Prof. Hudson for the light by which we are enabled to establish almost to absolute certainty the correctness of this universal belief. And that which makes the time of the death of Darius Hystaspes such an important point in chronology, is the "document of Philo," which says that "the building" of the temple "was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes." We have before mentioned that this is said to be "the most ancient record in existence, except the sacred books relating to this part of Jewish history; and as such, is entitled to greater weight than any other human authority we may have upon the subject."—Times of Daniel, p. 4. As this is the best authority found in ancient history, we will here give the whole of it, which is as follows:

"From the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation, eleven years; from the desolation to the imprisonment of Joiakim, twenty years; and from the day of his captivity, thirty-one years. In the space of the six following years was published the 87th Psalm. At the end of the seventh year, Evil-Merodach brought Joiakim out of prison and honored him, and the people called him Neri, because Ner, or the lamp of David, the extinction of which they used to fear, shone forth in him; and then the 88th Psalm came out for rendering thanks to God, and to beg for the preservation of the people, and the speedy mission of the Messiah. A son was soon given from God to the delivered Neri. His name was Masybiel with the surname Salathiel (or Shealtiel), who in the seventeenth year before the end of the captivity [begat] Berachias. But this Berachias in his seventeenth year, in which was finished the Babylonish captivity, was a leader of the people; and, on account of this dignity, he was called Zerubbabel, in the eighty-first year from the Babylonish captivity, and the seventieth from the desolation.

"So there were two kinds of principality over the people, the leaders of the house of David, and the priests of the tribe of Levi, which principalities were separate until the days of the Chasmonæi.

"According, however, to the chronicle of our seventy seniors, they have left us a certain writing after this manner: Joshua, the son of Jehotzedec the high-priest, together with Berachias Zerubbabel, the son of Miszeleel, the son of Neri, who is Joiachin, in the first year of Cyrus, went up to Jerusalem. In the second year he laid the foundations of the temple, by the word of Haggai and Zachariah the prophets. But the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes. Nor could he go up to Cyrus, who was occupied in war with Tomyris. And when Cyrus (Darius) was slain, after him reigned Assuerus Artaxerxes the First. He went to war with Arphaxad, who had brought supplies to Thomyris, and because he had seduced the Assyrians, Medes and Persians, into rebellion. This Ahasuerus dwelt in Babylonia [being in Babylon.] But, in consequence of the princes of the land of Syria having written an accusation against the Jews, this Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus, left his son Joiakin, who is also called Eli, in the dignity of high-priest, and went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that [in the next year], when he had become victorious, having heard that the Jews had cut off the head of Holophernes, the general of his army, he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple. When he died he left two sons, who contended for the empire. In the seventh month, however, when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building [of the temple], he was set free by God and appointed king. In the first year of his reign Joshua, the high-priest, returned to Jerusalem, and by the command of Haggai and Zechariah put forth his hand to build the temple. Joshua, therefore, filled the office of high priest, in the first instance, for thirty-six years, [until the twelfth year of Assuerus the elder, and Joiakim, his son, in his absence, eight years.] He also wrote the account of the exploits of Judith, and appointed the early celebration of the memorial of that deliverance.

"The same Joshua, when he returned, occupied the Pontificate twenty years, until the twentieth year of Longimanus, being then 130 years old. Joiakim succeeded him. He was high-priest the second time for forty-eight years, until the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, Assuerus the Great. He wrote the history of Esther, and instituted the Purim in commemoration," etc.

As the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes, the time of his death, that is, B. C. 486, must be the time at which it was impeded. "In the first year of Cyrus (B. C. 488) the commandment" went "forth." "In the second year of their coming" to Jerusalem, that is, B. C. 487, they laid "the foundation of the temple of the Lord."—Ezra 3: 8, 10. "When the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel, then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you." "Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building."—Ezra 4: 1, 4. And "on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes," in B. C. 486, "the building was impeded."

This was "the twelfth year of Assuerus," whom Xenophon calls Cyaxares. Xenophon informs us that the residence of this king was in Media, at the time Cyrus took Babylon; and Daniel informs us that Darius "took the kingdom" of Babylon. But after the death of Darius, it appears that Ahasuerus made his residence at Babylon; for it is said, "This Ahasuerus dwelt in Babylon," and from this his removal to Babylon Ezra dates "the beginning of his reign."—Ezra 4: 6. In the document quoted by Philo, he is called "Assuerus Artaxerxes," and so in Ezra he is called by both of these names; that is, both "Ahasuerus" and "Artaxerxes" (Ezra 4: 6, 7), and this removes the difficulty in which we have been so much involved, in supposing that Ezra called the impostor Magus, Artaxerxes, and Cambyses, Ahasuerus; neither of whom were ever called by those names. It also removes the following difficulty: "According to Herodotus, Strabo, and Polyænus Darius Hystaspes was the first who levied taxes"; and yet we find that during the reign of this Artaxerxes they did "pay toll, tribute, and custom" (Ezra 4: 13); but since we find this Artaxerxes on the throne after the death of Darius Hystaspes, the difficulty is removed.

From the document of Philo, we learn that Cyrus was yet alive after the death of Darius Hystaspes; for it is said, "the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes. Nor could he (Joshua) go up to Cyrus, who was occupied in war." And that Cyrus lived several years after they ceased to build the temple, would appear from Ezra 4: 5; for it is there said that they "hired counsellors against them to frustrate their purpose all the days of Cyrus."

B. C. 485. According to the document of Philo, Joshua, "in the first year of Cyrus (B. C. 488), went up to Jerusalem. In the second year (B. C. 487), he laid the foundation of the temple," at which time their adversaries commenced (Ezra 4: 4) hindering "the work of God for two years, even to the Jubilee."—Sacred and Profane Chronology, p. 89. Two from 487 leave 485; therefore, B. C. 485 was the year of jubilee.

B. C. 485. It would appear that, after the death of Darius, Cyrus associated his son Cambyses with him in the kingdom; for some allow but three years for the reign of Cyrus (Times of Daniel, p. 243), and this was the third year from what Xenophon calls "the acquisition of his empire." According to Herodotus, Cambyses reigned "seven years and five months"; four years of which seem to have been with his father.

RESURRECTION.

Those who think it a thing incredible that God should raise the dead, after diligently searching for a reason for their unbelief in the matter, have at last filed in this objection: That there can be no resurrection of those who are utterly and wholly dead, because the bringing of such persons back into life again would constitute a new creation, in which the identity of the persons raised would be lost.

But how they come to the conclusion that the original identity cannot be restored by Him who is styled Almighty God, they have not as yet informed us. They virtually assign as a reason for their conclusion the conclusion itself, hiding their fallacy in a little cloud of words, so transparent that few need be deceived by it. It is the loss of identity that constitutes deadness, and its restoration is a part of the resurrection. Then, to say that the wholly dead cannot be raised because this identity cannot be restored again, is equivalent to saying that their resurrection is incredible, because it is incredible; and so proves nothing except the unbelief of the persons who reason in so small a circle.

They might with equal propriety argue that a man could never wake up, if he became unconscious in sleep, because he would be another being by waking up from a sound sleep, as to say that those who wake from the more absolute sleep of death would not regain their identity of being, which they lost in the sleep of death. For it is the restoration of the conscious identity, in both cases, that causes them to awake. And since God has promised that those who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, their consciousness must have been lost before they could have slept, and so cannot awake without regaining that consciousness which composes their identity of being. And since He who has promised is Almighty, it is, therefore, not a thing incredible that God should raise the dead.

But, although this is not incredible, the idea that he can raise those from the dead that have not really died is incredible, because it involves a contradiction in terms, implying a revival of a life that never was suspended. Hence, if the soul does not lose its consciousness with the death of the body, the real person does not die, and hence such can never have a resurrection, because they never were dead. The resurrection of material bodies, for such deathless souls to enter, would be a creation of lifeless organisms, which could have no consciousness of their own, but must wait until the soul could re-enter them, before they could be animate. But if the soul dies with the body, and both soul and body are revived together, then that would be a resurrection of the dead, because it is a complete restoration of the whole being that was dead.

To say the resurrection of their bodies is a resurrection of the dead, might do as a play upon words, but will not answer the Scripture requirement, which represents something besides the body as dead. "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do THEY come?" 1 Cor. 15. But it may be claimed that "the dead" here does not mean really dead, but living abstractions from the body, that are dead only in the popular sense; that is, more alive while they are dead than they were before they died.

Is there any thing in nature that is analogous to such a death? Does a kernel of wheat die like that? If it does, then will some one find a spiritual kernel after the old one is dead, possessing attributes of a like kind. The fact is, the kernel dies, and its identity is wholly and utterly lost in giving a new vitality to something totally unlike itself; namely, the plant. Oh, its life is more alive than it was before! So is the blood of a bullock after it is abstracted by the blood-thirsty tiger, and is converted into the tiger's own blood! But the bullock is dead, notwithstanding his blood-life is coursing with greater activity through the heart of his destroyer. The life-blood is intensified, but changed from the slow-moving blood of the bullock to the swift and restless blood of the tiger. So the life of the seed is changed, and converted into a plant, dissimilar in its qualities to the seed itself. But the seed itself is dead, in that it cannot reproduce itself; for that which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body that shall be.

If man dies then, as the seed, his personal identity is lost, and he is not. And not having any life of his own, he is wholly dependent on some power outside of himself to bring him into life again. If he had life in himself, after his body was dead, he might resurrect or re-animate his body by his own immortal life. But dying as the seed does totally, he can have no future life thereafter, except by a resurrection of his being.

WM. HOBBS.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article, we referred to the horrid idea, that if the soul is immortal, then, of course, God makes millions of immortal souls, and puts them into mortal bodies to be polluted; and not one in ten that lives will ever be saved; and, of course, the rest are to be consigned to endless woe. We spoke in our last article of the dreadful character that this great error gives to our heavenly Father, whose name is love.

We will now bring forward a few more passages on the subject of the destruction of the wicked. We will refer to Job 21: 30,—"That the wicked are reserved to the day of destruction." Why not say preservation in misery? We also read in Psalm 104: 35,—"Let the sinner be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Can you believe that the sinner is alive in torment, after he is consumed? If the wicked are no more, do they exist anywhere? Psalm 92: 7, 9,—"It is that they shall be destroyed forever." Webster says destroy, or destruction, means "ruin, eternal death." This cannot mean eternal life in misery, nor eternal life anywhere else. The psalmist says, in the ninth verse of the above Psalm,—"For lo, thine enemies shall perish." Webster says perish is to die, or to decay. I would ask the candid question, if both of those words (destruction and perish) are not intended to convey one and the same idea; that is, final and eternal death? Certainly those words cannot mean eternal life in misery.

Again, in Psalm 145: 20,—"The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy." If the wicked are kept alive in torment, are they not preserved as well as those that love him? Certainly they are. In Psalm 37: 10,—"Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." "But," says the objector, "they shall be in torment to all eternity."

In 2 Pet. 2: 12,—"But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." The words destruction, perish, perdition, and consume, are words often found in the Bible, in contrast with eternal life, which is to be the reward of the righteous. These words, which relate to the punishment of the wicked, are synonymous terms with eternal, or second death; and they positively convey the idea of an eternal cessation of life, or existence. Why does Peter say that as brute beasts they are made to be taken and destroyed? Surely, Peter does not mean that the destruction of brute beasts means endless misery in fire and brimstone, does he?

We will now look to the words of our dear Savior's teaching, by the beloved John. 1 John 3: 8, where the apostle speaks of the Son of God being manifested to destroy the works of the devil, did the apostle intend that we should take his word "destroy" to mean preserve the works of the devil, and torment them? Surely, the only meaning we can possibly attach to the word "destruction," in the above Scripture, is to put an end to them. In Rev. 11: 15–18, the revelator seems to have a view of that period of time, near the end of this wicked world, when "the nations should be angry," and when the wrath of Almighty God should come upon this wicked world; and when the great resurrection scene should take place, and the prophets and saints should be rewarded, and all that fear the name of the Lord, both small and great, then he will "destroy them that destroy the earth." Would it be right for us to say, preserve them that preserve the earth? Certainly not.

We will now look at 1 Cor. 15: 26, where we are informed that the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. Does this mean to preserve death alive, and torment it? Also Heb. 2: 14, where we are told "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Does this mean to preserve the devil alive? B. [illegible]

VALUABLE PREMIUMS

For New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

Grover & Baker's ($55) SEWING MACHINE,

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

Webster's ($12) UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

Grover & Baker's Sewing Machine.

The following are some of the extra qualities of Grover and Baker's machine:—

They are more simple, durable, and less liable to derangement than others.

They sew from ordinary spools, and no rewinding of thread is necessary.

They sew with equal facility all fabrics, the most delicate and the heaviest, and with all kinds of thread, silk, cotton, or linen.

The seam is so strong and elastic that, when properly sewed, it will not break, even on the bias.

They fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.

The seam, though cut at every sixth stitch, remains firm, and neither runs or ravels in wear.

The face stitch is more plump and beautiful, and retains its plumpness and beauty after washing better than any other.

CASTLETON.

Our visit to Castleton, Vt., was one of interest and profit. We enjoyed it much. We found the church in a prosperous condition under the faithful labors of our dear Bro. Matthewson. The truth has been making new conquests there of late, and a new interest was awakened during our late meetings. Several requested prayers, and some were blessed with peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. We found Bro. Mathewson strong in the faith that Jesus is coming soon, and ready to proclaim it far and wide, whether men will hear or forbear. He intends to continue the meetings, and do all in his power to persuade the people to get ready for the coming of the Son of man.

On our way to Castleton, we met Bro. M. Batchelor, at Rutland, who is also a faithful watchman, sounding the alarm, and entreating the people to be reconciled to the Lord, that they may be ready to meet him.

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 3.

In answer to the inquiry, "what are they doing?" the Bible informs us they are "seducing" people, causing them to "depart from the faith" once delivered to the saints;" "speaking lies in hypocrisy," and opposed to the marriage laws of the country.—1 Tim. 4: 1–3. They are "deceiving" men and women "by the means . . . of miracles; and leading a multitude to adopt "doctrines of devils" instead of the truth of the Bible.

We now come to the inquiry, How do they perform their wonderful works? We shall let the spirits themselves, and their followers, answer this question. It is well known that the best physical manifestations are obtained in darkened rooms. Some opposers of Spiritualism have claimed that the reason why they wished the rooms darkened was in order that the medium and those forming the circle, might practise their trickery successfully. It may have that appearance, but facts, we think, will not sustain such a theory. We shall find there is a philosophical reason why the best exhibitions are given in a darkened room. When Mrs. Cora Hatch was lecturing in Boston, in a trance state, she was asked "to explain why it is necessary that the room should be darkened when wonderful phenomena are performed in the presence of certain mediums?" The answer returned by the spirit was as follows:—"The action of light agitates, dissipates, or in some way so disturbs the fluid, gas, magnetism, or whatever the instrumentality be called, which is employed by spirits in acting upon grosser matter, that they are unable to control and employ it."—The Spiritualist of Aug. 15th, 1857, edited and published by A. E. Newton.

From the foregoing we may come to the conclusion that the demons employ the same agent that a mesmerizer does when he controls his subjects. In answer to the question, "What, then, is a distinction between mesmerism and Spiritualism?" we find the following in the Spiritual Age of April 3d, 1858:—

"Mesmerism is something which a man does while he has his clothes on; Spiritualism is a similar act of his after his clothes have been put off. [By clothes, they mean body.—Ed.] Suppose I magnetize you to-day; and that I, the mesmerizer, speak, write, act, through you, you being unconscious;—this is mesmerism. Suppose, further, that I die to-night; and that, to-morrow, I, a spirit, come and magnetize you, and then speak, write, act, through you; this is Spiritualism."

This explanation is very plain, showing that the spirits use the same agency to move their mediums that is used by mesmerizers. We think this position is fully sustained by an abundance of facts. The mistake of the Spiritualists consists in supposing that the "familiar spirits" are human, instead of being demons, as the Bible shows.

In the Banner of Light, July 30th, 1857, we find the following:—

"The correctness of communications from spirits, through trance mediums, depends upon the more or less perfect mesmeric control the spirit has of the medium or subject. We have been able to discover little difference in the control a spirit takes of a trance medium, and that taken of a subject by a good mesmerizer, though undoubtedly the power of the spirit to control the medium's mind is stronger, and the will more effective in using the organs."

No doubt the mind of a demon is stronger than that of a human being.

In the Banner of Light for Aug. 22d, 1863, we find the following account of questions put to a spirit, and the answers returned:—

Q. How do we understand that spirits control an organism?

A. We have just informed you that they do so by means of the magnetic aura, or animal magnetism.

Q. Do spirits concentrate their power upon the brain and nerves?

A. Sometimes on the nervous system. In cases of mechanical writing, power is concentrated upon the ganglion of the arm, and is not at all connected with the brain. In cases of entire physical control, then it pervades the entire physical body."

At a Spiritualist circle held at the office of the Banner of Light, in Boston, May 2nd, 1864, the communicating spirit was asked, "What is the modus operandi of controlling a medium?"

The spirit answered:—"As a free intelligence, or spirit, who by nature has no right to the medium's body, my first step is to come and hold communion with the spirit who owns the body. The result of that communion is not transmitted to the external senses of the medium, but to the internal; therefore it is quite as tangible, as real, to the spirit, as it could be to the external. I ask that spirit, 'Will you yield me up the control of your mortal form for a short time?' The answer is generally, 'I will.' . . . The spirit is subjected to the entire control of the predominating spirit. It is, in a word, magnetized by the spirit; held in perfect subjection. And it seems to sleep; and it does sleep, so far as external life is concerned."

The following questions and answers will develop some of the philosophy of Spiritualism. So far as we know, the spirits admit that they operate in the same way as a mesmerizer, when he would obtain control over his subject. In the Banner of Light, Feb. 4th, 1865, we find the following record of a conversation with a spirit:—

"Q. What is the process of induction of a subject by a developing medium?

A. Well, the process is a changing of the magnetic and electric condition of the subject under a course of treatment. For instance, there may be a superabundance of magnetism. The developing spirit endeavors to equalize the forces, or to bring about an electrical and magnetic condition that shall be adapted to the return of the disembodied spirits, and the making of various manifestations.

Q. Are these changes effected by the brain?

A. No; the nervous system is generally first affected, then the system entire; not simply the centre, but the system entire.

Q. Has the spirit any other way of manifesting itself except through the brain or nervous instruments?

A. Yes.

Q. Where a spirit controls the hand of a medium to write, is the impression always made through the brain?

A. Sometimes the control is what is termed mechanical control, then the connection between arm and brain is entirely severed, and yet the manifestation is made through what is called the nervous fluids, a certain portion of which is retained in the arm for the purpose of action. But when the manifestation is what is called an impressional manifestation, then the brain and entire nervous system is used."

We think we now understand how the spirits operate; that is, by a mesmeric influence. We understand that this is the means by which Satan influences the minds of people, when he makes an effort to lead them away from the road to life eternal. It is a spiritual power proceeding from him and his demons, by means of which he influences their minds more or less. When they yield themselves up wholly to his control, then they may become mediums through whom he may write and speak, and perform other strange things. This has been practiced among the heathen nations for centuries. In opposition to this, the Lord operates upon the minds of men by means of the Holy Spirit; and when we yield fully to him, then he fills us with his Spirit, which has moved holy men to write and speak what the Lord would have said to the people. When we are filled with his Spirit, we are led to act in harmony with the requirements of the Bible,—to love our enemies, and be kind to all. When we are under the spiritual influence of Satan, or become filled with his spirit, then we are ready to deny the Bible, and act in opposition to the Lord's requirements. Hence, those who become followers of the spirits, or demons, are led at once into infidelity, and to reject Christ as our Savior. They may admit that Jesus was a good man—a great medium, but deny he was the Son of God any more than George Washington, Socrates, or Plato. In short, they are the enemies of the cross of Christ.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC.

The scientific music, now so popular in fashionable churches, is almost disgusting to a humble follower of Jesus. The wild songs of the native Indians would be just about as intelligible, and quite as full of devotion as much of the singing at the present day. It affords no comfort to the meek disciples of our Savior. The reasons are, first, there is no heart in it; that is, the singers seem to have no thought of praising the Lord; but sing to be heard of men. A second reason is, those who listen cannot say amen to what they hear, because they cannot understand what is sung. It is an unknown tongue to those who hear.

The following will illustrate the point:—

Alex. attended church last Sabbath, where they have scientific (quartette) singing, and was surprised at the difference between scientific and that he has been accustomed to in the backwoods. He brought me a specimen of the style, which he copied from the original:

Waw-kaw, swaw daw aw raw,
Thaw saw thaw law aw waw;
Waw-kaw taw thaw raw vaw yaw braw
Aw thaw raw-jaw saw aws.

which rendered into English, reads as follows:

"Welcome, sweet day of rest,
That saw the Lord arise;
Welcome to this reviving breast,
And these rejoicing eyes."

Alex. says that in the country they are green enough to think it necessary for good singing that the words of the hymn should be sung. How very verdant!

THE COLD WEATHER.

The cold weather of Jan. 6th, 7th, and 8th, was terrific, and surpassed any thing we have had for years. The following are some of the reports received relative to these extremely cold days. Says the New York Herald:—

"The extremely cold weather of Sunday continued to prevail yesterday, not only in this city and vicinity, but in all parts of the country, from which we have reports. In fact during the forenoon there was an intensifying of the severity of the temperature, and the zero point, which ordinarily in this region is regarded as about the limit of endurance, would have been considered a comparatively comfortable altitude for the mercury. The thermometer early in the morning indicated ten degrees below zero in this city, while from country towns in this State and in Connecticut we have the announcements of ranges all the way down to twenty-eight degrees below. Even as far south as Washington, D. C., it stood one degree below at eight o'clock in the morning. At Ottawa, Canada, it marked thirty-one degrees. It was certainly the coldest day we have had in years."

The following are reports from other cities:

Boston, Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—Wind northwest. Weather clear. Thermometer ten degrees below zero. The harbor is being rapidly covered with ice.

Springfield, Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—Thermometer eleven degrees below zero.

Hartford, Ct., Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—Weather clear. Thermometer sixteen degrees below zero.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 8th, 1866.—Prof. Caswell, whose meteorological observations on College Hill in this city cover a period of thirty-four years, reports the thermometer at seventeen degrees below zero on Sunday night, two degrees lower than ever before recorded.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 8th.—Last night was the coldest ever known here. The Delaware is closed up below and above the city, and all the ferry boats but one are frozen fast in their docks. The mercury in West Philadelphia fell to eighteen degrees below zero, and at Chestnut Hill to fourteen degrees below. The thermometer has marked ten degrees below zero only five times since 1856.

Portland, Me., Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—Thermometer eight degrees below zero. Sunset—wind north. Thermometer twenty-five degrees below zero.

Bangor, Me., Jan. 8th.—The thermometer stood at thirty degrees below zero.

Lowville, N. Y., Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—The weather here is colder than ever known before. The thermometer is down to twenty-eight degrees below zero.

Utica, N. Y., Jan. 8th, 8 A. M.—The mercury is almost freezing here. The thermometer marks thirty-one degrees below zero.

MOVEMENTS IN ITALY.

The news from Italy becomes more and more ominous of the end of the power at Rome; and when the end of the Papal dominion comes, we may expect to see the Savior soon. The Scriptures seem to teach that when mystic Babylon falls, then the saints will rise from their graves to rejoice over her destruction.

It appears from the following, that Garibaldi is preparing the Italians for the great work before them—the complete overthrow of the church at Rome. Her days are numbered; her end is at hand. Soon the saints will shout, "Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."—Rev. 19: 6–7. A foreign correspondent says:—

"Letters just received from Naples speak of daily Garibaldian enrolments for Rome (under the pretext of Mexico and Ireland,) which takes place in the Garibaldian cafes of the Toledo. The men are despatched in convoys of twenty-five, eighteen or fifteen, to the towns of the Terra di Lavoro, Abruzzo and Avelino, there to wait for orders."

"NAPOLEON'S THREAT."

While Napoleon has been promising to evacuate Mexico, he is actually sending more troops. It is very evident he has no intention of letting go his hold on this continent. His purpose is to get control, not only of Mexico, but of the United States. This is one item in his great programme, as he made it out some twenty-seven years ago.

The New York Post says:—

"Our mercantile community begins to feel injuriously the effects of the Mexican complication—or rather of the delay of our government to settle it. Men whose ventures extend over periods of a year or two are waiting with nervous anxiety to know whether we shall have war with France, or whether the Emperor will "get out of Mexico" without being kicked out.

Our foreign commerce, materially injured by the war, is slowly reviving; it is of the greatest importance to us that it shall quickly regain the prominence it enjoyed before the war. The more extended our foreign trade, the greater will be our prosperity, the quicker our growth in wealth. We wish to see our flag once more penetrating to all the ends of the earth, and our products, as formerly, sold in all the markets of the world. But here is this Mexican question dragging slowly along, coming apparently to no conclusion, yet threatening us constantly with war, and thus forcing the prudent merchant to keep his ships near home, and to limit his ventures.

It has been remarked by Englishmen that Napoleon during the last half dozen years of profound peace, by his peculiar attitude and conduct has put England to almost as much trouble and expense as though she had been at war. He so alarmed Englishmen as to cause a vast expenditure upon iron clad ships, enormous forts and volunteer organizations of troops; and all this he has done, and with it made the taxes of the English people heavier and more or less disturbed their industries, without the trouble and risk of making war, simply by taking a threatening attitude.

It seems that our turn has now come to be bullied by Napoleon. He has established himself in Mexico, and stays there; his mere presence is a threat, and already our commerce and industries begin to feel the baleful influences of this shadow.

England submits to this kind of treatment; so do half the nations of Europe; but we need not. It is one thing to drive Napoleon out of France, and another to drive him out of Mexico. The latter we can do."

THE FENIANS.

The Fenians have become a powerful body in a short time; and it appears that their hour for action is at hand. The latest intelligence from Europe is, that fighting has actually begun, and that the Irish "have won their first battle." This statement may prove untrue. We must wait for further intelligence. The Fenians are now holding (Jan. 10th) a Congress in New York. They have been in session since Jan. 1st, 1866. The reception of the delegates is thus described:—

"They were rapturously received by the house standing. The gentlemen replied, and stated that the organization in Ireland surpassed the brightest expectation of its warmest friends. So powerful was it to-day and so extensive its ramifications that failure was impossible, if the movement were properly supported from this country.

We learn that so flattering was their report that they were again and again cheered. The delegates were pointed out to your reporter when leaving the building. In one he recognized an old friend, whom he knew as a colonel in the American army and an officer whose reputation for bravery and intelligence stood second to none. The other was a fine looking military man with "soldier" indelibly printed on his handsome features. He has the look and bearing of a soldier, with the keen, commanding eye of one who knows how to command and act. He looks the true type of a fearless, active officer. He has been several years in the army, and has won a high reputation by his gallant services in Mexico. We think England will find no mean antagonist in him, whether as a strategist or soldier, should they ever measure swords."

At a meeting of the Congress on Monday, Jan. 8th, they had an exciting scene. The reporter says:—

"President O'Mahoney said:—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a report has appeared in the evening papers, which if true should unite us all as one man and make throb our hearts and souls now with the cause of Ireland. That report is that that our brothers in Ireland are fighting and have won their first battle.

The excitement in the House that followed has never perhaps been surpassed. All rose and cheered, some wildly flung their hats against the ceiling, others bent their heads and wept, while others, with blanched cheeks and compressed lips, looked defiantly, as if the foe were before them, and bitter curses were muttered against those who had sown disunion in the Brotherhood. It was an exciting scene, and so thrilling was the news that the House adjourned soon after."

We shall wait with interest for further developments. These are stirring times. Let every christian see that he has on "the whole armor of God," that he "may be able to stand."

The Boston Almanac and Guide for 1866 has been laid on our table. It contains the usual quantity of valuable matter for the information of citizens and strangers visiting the city.

OUR FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

Elder Miles Grant:—Dear Brother,—Agreeable to the instruction of the A. A. M. S., we have visited St. Louis, and vicinity, with a view to learn the condition of the Freedmen, and seek out such fields of labor among the destitute portion as we might be able to supply with competent teachers.

We have spent ten days in this work in this city and vicinity. Our first step was to see the pastors of African churches and make our mission known to them, and to secure their co-operation. We were favorably introduced to them by Sister Mary R. Prescott, a resident of this city, and an earnest laborer for many years among the colored people. They have such confidence in her that any one whom she recommends as a friend to the colored people, is received without suspicion. This down-trodden race has been so often deceived and imposed upon, that they are suspicious of everybody. And they take good care to give their confidence to none, except they know them to be friends.

An instance in illustration of this fact occurred here last week. A Methodist minister, who had been a chaplain also in the army, came into the congregation, and at the close of my discourse, requested the privilege to speak. He wanted to invite twenty Freedmen to his house, several evenings in the week, to teach them to read. They told him plainly that they did not know him, and could not entertain his proposition, however kind or good it might be. For it might often all be a snare to entrap them into some evil.

On being introduced, we were most cordially received by both pastors and people. And more; for beyond a reception we were honored as true friends of the colored race, whose love for them was not of sudden growth, but of long continuance, and when in bonds were in sympathy bound with them (Heb. 13: 3), as their advocates and friends.

We were introduced immediately to two congregations, to whom we preached with great freedom and success. In this way the door was opened for us to visit among the Freedmen, both in the public meetings and in their families. We thus became familiar with them, and studied their habits and manners, and also learned their wants.

It should be understood that the colored people, in time past, both free and bond, have always had their places of worship, and their organized churches; but under special restrictions by the white people. Now all restrictions are removed, and they meet and worship as they please.

We find the Freedmen and free people of color now in one body. And those who have been free, and had the advantages of education, are now helping those who have been in bondage, and hitherto kept in ignorance. This class, who were formerly free, are our fellow-helpers in the education of the Freedmen. They do not do this by separate churches, or schools, but receive the Freedmen into their families, and schools, as equals.

Several doors have been opened to us to help in this good work, in this city; but only one that we could enter with the hope of success. This is in a destitute neighborhood in the north part of the city, in the vicinity of Benton Barracks. There are many Freedmen there, and others are moving in. But there is no school for them.

Some members of Dr. Revel's church live in this neighborhood, and have opened a Sabbath school for the Freedmen and their children, which is all that they can do. They offer us the school house free of rent, all fitted for school, if we will furnish a teacher, for a regular day school. They will give us their sympathy, and wish us to help them also in the Sabbath school. And as we have some competent brethren here, who will volunteer to hold religious services on the Sabbath, this is especially desired, and will be done.

We have made an arrangement to furnish them with a teacher, if the Board approve our doings, and have the school go into operation as soon as practicable.

We have appointed the following committee to take an oversight of the school:—John Richard Boynton, Mary R. Prescott, and Abram S. Dutton. These persons are interested, and known to be faithful.

We also recommend to the Board, as teacher of this school, Miss Francella F. Curtis, of this city. She is a member of the Advent church, and a devoted friend of the colored race, having proved her interest for them by laboring among them in time past. And besides, being on the ground, it will be a matter of economy to employ her. She will for the present teach for six dollars per week; and the friends of the school will meet other expenses of the enterprise.

There are one hundred Freedmen and women who have made a request for an evening school, to teach them to read and write. Miss Curtis will take charge of this also, and some of the pupils of this school will pay one dollar a month to help meet expenses. We hope these plans may be carried out successfully; but it will require much labor and care, as well as perseverance. No one can know the amount of labor and care connected with the enterprise without experience.

We commend these new interests to the care of the Board, with many prayers for success.

Truly yours in the cause of the Freedmen,
Joshua V. Himes.

St. Louis, Dec. 26th, 1865.

OUR MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

LETTER FROM BRO. FLAGG.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 1st, 1866.

Bro. Grant, Brethren and Sisters:—We have now been here three weeks. Bro. Himes left this morning for Memphis, Tenn. I expect to go Wednesday next. The first week I preached in the African M. E. church on 11th St. twice. Also on the following Sabbath twice. And in the evening I preached in quite a large African church on 7th St. to a crowded house. I had an excellent time. After the sermon I invited sinners forward to the altar. Seven started forward immediately, a number of whom were blest. After the mourners, as they call them, have all come forward, then as many of the church as can pack around them come forward also. After singing a hymn, the whole church kneel down and plead with God for mercy in behalf of the mourners; after which they all rise and sing some of the most soul-stirring and thrilling melodies you ever heard; then again all kneel in prayer, and again rise and sing, and so on, alternately, until the close of the meeting, which can only be broken up either in the midst of their praying or singing, for there is never so much as a second of lost time during meeting. When the mourners come forward they drop upon their knees, one by one, the moment they reach the altar; and during the whole of the varied exercises of the meeting they remain thus till its close, unless they receive evidence of forgiveness, in which case they rise, either during prayer or singing, and walk around the house, shouting and praising God, shaking hands with all they meet. Most of the mourners cry aloud for mercy without cessation, both during the singing and praying; and oh, such fervent and humble prayers! I wish you could hear them.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 20th. Subject this evening, Matt. 24th chap. The congregation appeared to be delighted; they broke forth once in a while with such shouting as to almost drown the preaching. Some dozen or fifteen came forward for prayers. Thursday eve., 21st. Preached on the resurrection. Text, John 5: 28, 29. The interest increased, also the number of bearers. Some twenty forward for prayers. Friday eve., 22nd. My subject this evening was Repentance. Text, Acts 3: 19. Twenty-five or thirty forward for prayers. Sunday, Dec. 24th. I preached morning and evening, and Bro. Himes in the afternoon. My subject, A. M., 2 Pet. 3d ch. Bro. H., P. M., Dan. 2nd ch. My subject in the evening, 1 Thess. 5: 1–4. Between forty and fifty forward for prayers Glory to God! I am having just such times as I expected to have. I am not disappointed. Here I am in the midst of such a reformation as I have not witnessed for nearly twenty years,—old and young both melting down under the pressure of those truths which they have never heard. There are so many happy and pleasing incidents connected with the meetings, that I shall not be able to give you but one now.

About 11 o'clock, near midnight, a little Creole, white, thirteen years of age, was seen to be holding her mouth with both hands, for fear that she might give vent to her feelings. At last, exhausted under the weight of conviction, she sank back on her seat and began to cry as hard as she could scream, "O Jesus! Jesus! Jesus! Jesus! have mercy! mercy! mercy on my soul." Her eyes were closed, and her hands raised as if convulsed. If she had been burning at the stake, her cries could not have been more heart-rending. I went back to talk with her, but she paid no regard whatever to any one, not even asking any one to pray for her; no one could converse with her; but unceasingly she continued her cries, repeating no other words but the ones named above. I took her in my arms, and partly carried and partly led her to the front, and seated her down, where she continued her cries for about ten minutes, when the cloud broke, and she began to praise God as vehemently as she cried for mercy.

The next morning Sr. Prescott was in the market, and being Christmas she heard a little girl say to other little girls around her,

"O, I had the sweetest Christmas present last night of you all."

Sr. P., thinking she might be the little girl just spoken of, said to her, "Were you at the meeting last night?"

"Yes!" was her reply; "and I found Jesus, too."

It would do you good to be in our prayer meetings after the mourners come forward, and see her walking on her knees from one to another, trying in her child-like meekness to comfort and encourage them.

Just past midnight, two o'clock A. M., 1866. I wish you all a happy New Year! and hope that it may usher in the commencement of Christ's reign. I have just returned home from one of the best meetings I ever attended in my life. Somewhere over fifty, I think perhaps near sixty, were forward for prayers; all round the pulpit, in the front aisle, and also in a number of the front pews. The meeting continued till half-past one. I have preached the past week Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and Bro. Himes on Wednesday evening. Ministers and people of the two African churches I named received us kindly. Bro. Himes has labored mostly in the African church on 11th St. He leaves this morning for Memphis, Tenn. I expect to leave to-morrow or Wednesday.

Wed., Jan. 3. Never since I have been a preacher did I feel more unwilling to leave any place than this. Here I am in the midst of one of the most powerful reformations I ever witnessed in my life. Never have seen so many forward for prayers, at any one time, for twenty years. The church numbers about a hundred and fifty members. And for the last ten days I have visited just as many of the members and converts, mourners and congregation as I could. I would start in the morning and go from house to house; and I have not seen any one of the congregation who has not been a slave, and most of them till since the war. The Dred Scott family, of whom we heard so much years ago, attend meetings at this church. I wanted to call on them, but have not been able. I must wait till I come East before telling you of the wrongs, sufferings, wickedness of all kinds, and the horrible cruelties, of which the half has never been told. It is the sheerest nonsense for people North to talk of the African race being happy or contented in slavery.

I have preached the second advent of Christ and the signs of it, the inheritance of the saints, the resurrection of the dead,—in a word, everything we believe, as far as I could. And the whole church, from the officers down, receive the glorious news of Christ's soon coming just as eagerly and with as much joy as they ever did out East in '42, '43, and '44. And I am having just such a time here as I used to have there twenty-three years ago. In all the families I have visited it is one universal cry, that I am doing very wrong to leave them. How they wept as I went around yesterday to take my leave of them. I am willing to live, preach, and spend my time till Jesus comes, if it is the Lord's will, among my poor African brethren and sisters.

At the breaking up of our meeting New Year's (Monday) morning, I introduced for the first time the "World's Crisis" among them. Seventeen came forward to the desk and gave me their names for the paper. If I were going to stay another week, I could obtain fifty subscribers among the freedmen. They did not have the money with them, but wished me to call next day and see them, which I did. I asked them if they could read. Some said, "Yes, I can read"; others said, "No; I cannot read." Then I said to them, "You do not want the paper, then." They replied, "O yes, I do; oh, certainly I do. For," said they, "I have a son, or a daughter, a brother, or sister, who can read." And this is their plan. When they get the paper every week, the one who can read is going to read it to the others. I have not urged a single one to take it. I have simply told them it was a Second Advent paper, advocating the truths I had preached to them. All who take it do so of their own free will. They say they want to learn to read, but they want the gospel first. The whole church, so far as I can learn, without exception, say they believe all I preach about the Lord's coming. They have no confidence in any of the preachers who do now, or ever did, uphold slavery, ro have sympathy with it.

Dear brethren and sisters, what shall I do? If I leave them, to go somewhere else, I simply leave them to be devoured by wolves. If I stay, and the reformation goes on, then in a short time we may have a church of hundreds. A young African preacher of the church has just called to see me, and begs of me in behalf of the church not to leave them. He says some freedmen over twenty miles from the country have come into the city this morning to hear me preach. What shall I do? I have consented to preach one more night. God has given me their confidence through the Holy Ghost. They want the gospel. And they say themselves, if the Lord is coming as soon as we say, they want that above all things first. They believe it, and are being saved by it. O! my soul is full; and my eyes are so full of tears I can hardly write.

Jan. 4th. I leave for Memphis, Tenn., this afternoon. God will provide and bless me. Pray for my success in the gospel, also for my family.

From your unworthy brother in the blessed hope,
H. K. Flagg.

P. S.—Address me at Memphis, Tenn. I have received $10 through Bro. Herron since I left home, from Bro. J. M. Stetler, Phila., Pa. The Lord bless him. H. K. F.

For the World's Crisis.

TO MY SISTERS IN CHRIST.

I feel impressed to ask the question, if any of the dear sisters scattered abroad have husbands who feel it duty to go out and proclaim to the world the coming of Jesus and warn sinners of their approaching doom, are holding them back through fear of the world and its persecutions? I will here relate a little of my experience in this matter.

About two years ago my husband felt that the Lord called him to go out among backsliders and arouse them and invite sinners to Christ. To me it was a great trial, and I brought up every objection possible, and the subject was dropped for awhile, but soon came up again, and I came to the conclusion that if it was the Lord's doings it would stand; if not, it would surely come to naught; and I would therefore watch the way.

Although a heavy cross to him, yet he promised the Lord if the way opened he would obey. Soon after this, some friends were visiting at our house. The subject of meetings was brought up, and the sister said,

"Come down to Wallingford and have a meeting. There is a chapel near our house where there have formerly been meetings; but for the past year it has been used for a store-house, and the church is all run down." She felt it was time they were revived.

The appointment was given out. The Sabbath came, and I went with my husband to the meeting. Perhaps no one else has ever felt as I did; I sat fearful all day, thinking he would break down, but at the same time asking the Lord to help him. There were but few present, but the Spirit of the Lord was there, and it rested on the people. At the close of the meeting several voices were heard—"Will you come again?" Another appointment was given out, and I went home feeling that the Lord had indeed helped him. What poor feeble creatures we are without the help of our blessed Master.

That was the commencement of a revival in the place. There had been but few meetings, when the brethren came forward to be prayed for, and confessed they were living in a backslidden state; and when the church began to move, sinners began to tremble, and from fifteen to twenty would rise for prayers. The Lord did work powerfully, and to him belongs all the glory.

In the month of August following, Bro. H. baptized thirteen, after which the Lord's Supper, and the meeting continued until six o'clock; and I think it the best meeting I ever attended on account of the presence of the Lord and the testimonies of his dear children. A few weeks after several more were baptized. Thus the work of the Lord continued. All this time I was watching the way, resolving that if the Lord blessed his labors I would oppose no more.

On our way to Wallingford we passed through the small village of Yalesville. We often spoke of its being a good place for a meeting, as there were no churches in the place. The school-house was engaged, an appointment given out there. Soon the work of the Lord broke out, and many, I trust, were truly converted and added to the church of such as shall be saved when Jesus comes.

My husband has been laboring for the past three months in Guilford, nearly every Sabbath, where there has not been an Advent meeting for many years. Several sinners have been converted, many backsliders reclaimed, and some from other churches. Thus the Lord has blessed his labors in several places, and I am resolved to give up all for Christ, and to run with patience the race set before me, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of my faith.

Now, my sisters, if any are in like circumstances, just give all into the hands of the Lord, for Jesus is soon coming, and if we can be the instruments in the hands of the Lord of saving one poor soul, how thankful might we be; for what would be our feelings when we come to the judgment to know that many more might have been saved had we done our duty faithfully? I do believe what is done for a lost and ruined world must be done quickly. Soon Jesus will leave the mediatorial throne, and mercy gone forever. Where, then, poor sinner, wilt thou appear? Come to Jesus while yet mercy lingers. Give up the vain and transitory things of earth. Ask God to have mercy upon you, forgive your sins, and help you to live to his honor and glory, and eternal life will be yours.

Brothers and sisters, what a blessed hope is ours. It cheers us on amid the perils of these last days, and is truly like an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. Let us keep watching, with lamps trimmed and burning, that when the Master calls, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," "children, come home,"—we may be among those who shall inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. THE END.

"But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."—DAN. 7 : 26.

The judgment did sit in France in the year 1792. The French Assembly passed decrees abolishing all ecclesiastic marks of distinction and suppression of all monastic orders; also the banishment of priests from the country. They had been a heavy burden to the common people for a long time; they had received large revenues for their support. The time had arrived for the words of God to be fulfilled,—"They shall consume." The French Assembly did confiscate all the church property to the state, and drove out of the country the refractory clergy, or put them to death "with the utmost rigor."

The following extract from the Journal seems as though the "end" was near. If this work is done, how long before the saints "shall possess the kingdom under the whole heavens"? W. C. STONE.

"RELIGIOUS ESTABLISHMENTS of ITALY.—The progressive or liberal Italians propose to improve the financial condition of the nation by suppressing the religious orders, and assuming the salaries of the regular clergy. There are 84 of these establishments, of which 80 possess property to the amount of $8,000,000. The monasteries contain 15,494 clerical, and 4466 lay members, who are men, and nearly 26,000 women. The annual incomes of the property holding orders are estimated at $3,000,000, and the capital from which this income arises is valued at $75,000,000. The regular clergy in 229 dioceses, with their bishops and archbishops, have a revenue of $13,000,000, which, so far as salaries are concerned, is very unequally distributed. The proposed measure, therefore, if it does not find active friends, has some passive supporters, even among the church party."

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. R. Preston.

BRO. GRANT:—Many of your readers have requested me to write, that they may know my whereabouts and how I prosper in the work of saving men. I left home (at Boylan's Grove, Iowa) Nov. 27th, and came to New Hartford. Had a pleasant meeting in the evening and felt cheered truly to see the waiting ones trying to be ready for the advent of our great Deliverer. Next to Manchester. The brethren were waiting my arrival to enjoy with them a season of refreshing. Truly it was good to be there. Preached twice, and came on my way rejoicing to Greeley, my next point. Bro. Gildersleve had made arrangement for several meetings, which were well attended by candid listeners. The Lord helped us here, and the brethren were edified. There are but few who are looking for the heavenly Bridegroom's return; but those few seem to be firmly grounded in the truth. May the Lord sustain them.

Left Greeley Dec. 4th for Baraboo, Wis., where I arrived on the 7th. Found Bro. Ryder and family, and, after greeting, passed on to Bro. Sheldon's, where I found a hearty welcome, and put up to await the arrival of the time for the commencement of our meetings. Preached in the evening, Dec. 8th, in Bro. Ryder's shop. Saturday evening and Sunday morning in the Lyon's school house. Sunday P. M. and evening in the Court House in Baraboo. Monday evening in Bro. R.'s shop. These meetings were thinly attended, as due notice had not been given, Bro. Sheldon having been absent from home. There are many good and substantial brethren in this vicinity, with whom we formed a very pleasant acquaintance. We think the cause here is in a prosperous condition. May the Lord increase them more and more.

Next went to Merrimack and preached one evening; congregation large and attentive. Next to Baraboo Bluff. Spoke one evening to a good audience. We felt the cheering influence of the Spirit, and trust good was done. I have been at Dane and Cassel's Prairie since, but as nothing of special moment transpired, I will not weary you with the details.

Dec. 28th found us cosily situated at Bro. O. S. Knapp's, awaiting the commencement of the quarterly meeting. Here we were joined by Brn. Sheldon, Hitchcock, Molt, Godfrey, and others. The meeting commenced on Thursday evening in a good spirit, and we had a cheering time. I anticipate a pleasant acquaintance and profitable time in the future, laboring with those who are here met to worship.

I would say in conclusion that the brethren all around seem impressed with the truth—the judgment is near! Yes, brethren, it is true. Are we ready? Let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, ready to meet the Bridegroom. We may conquer if we will, and Jesus says, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Yours in hope,

J. R. PRESTON.

From Bro. J. Morrison.

BRO. GRANT:—I received the bundle of tracts you sent me, on arriving at Montreal in July last. I have been at Scotland, and spread those little messengers over a distance of about two hundred miles, from Glasgow city to the river Spay, in towns and country, and lectured in different places on the signs and tokens of the coming kingdom. One Presbyterian minister gave me an invitation to come to his church and lecture on the personal reign of Christ. I did so, to a large congregation, for two Sundays, and likewise in the Town Hall. The tracts were received with pleasure, for they said they had never before seen tracts like them. Some said they were good, others said nay, so that they were likely to make strife and division among them.

I found religion, at most places in Scotland, cold and lukewarm, all sects believing in general the doctrine of the soul's going to heaven at death, and the eternal torment of the wicked, sprinkling of babes, and conversion of the world; so the tracts were quite new to them, and the getting them for nothing, and likewise there being sent from America, where they thought they had little or no religion. I hope they, at least some of them, will receive the truth into good and honest hearts, and bring forth fruit to the glory of God and their own salvation, Amen.

New Glasgow, C. E. JOHN MORRISON.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

BRO. GRANT:—Many of your readers are aware that I was put on the mission work for Iowa. I have been out prospecting, and find that there are good signs for the cause of truth, as there was a revival of interest in all the places I visited. I have pressing calls on every side, and the people are glad to hear; but my labors will be necessarily limited for want of means to travel. I have rode on the top of the stage coach, facing the north-west wind, the thermometer thirty degrees below zero, it was said. But none of these things move me. I have had to involve myself, to travel any way comfortably, and to start this week for a long tour north-west to Minn. I hope to have the prayers of my friends for myself and family, who help bear the burden for the sake of the cause. Many thanks to those who sympathize with us in regard to temporal things. May the Lord bless and prosper them in the divine life. I subscribe myself a pilgrim, looking for the Lord when all things are fulfilled according to his word.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

Strawberry Pt., Iowa.

From Bro. A. M. Higgins.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is good; therefore we still live. Yes, and feel that we have great reason for rendering thanks and praise to him.

A good work has been going on in Stafford, under the labors of Bro. P. S. Butler; some forty had professed faith in Christ, the last time I saw him, and good interest was still manifest.

The cause of truth in this place is in a very fair state. Our "Watch meeting" was a good one, and much enjoyed by the children of the Lord.

Every thing seems to bespeak this as an eventful year. Let the Lord reign. Yes, let his kingdom come.

May the Lord bless and prosper thee in all thy ways, which may also be ordered by him. From thy Bro. in strong bonds of christian love, A. M. HIGGINS.

Palmer, Mass.

From Bro. H. G. McCullock.

BRO. GRANT:—Truth is spreading, and the work of God reviving in this section. Jesus is coming. Glory to God, we shall soon be at rest. God bless you all in Boston, and do remember us away out in this western world, and pray for us.

Yours in hope of life at the coming of Jesus Christ, H. O. MCCULLOCK.

DeKalb, Ill.

BRO. L. ROUNDSWORTH writes from Winona, Bay Co., Mich.:—"I often wish some of the western Advent preachers would make a tour through this region, from Detroit to Flint, East Saginaw, and Bay City, though I fear they would meet with a poor reception. Should any come this way, he would be a welcome visitor at my house."

Obituaries.

COTTLE. On the 25th of November, 1865, Martha Norton Cottle, daughter of Charles and Mary H. Cottle, fell sweetly asleep in Jesus, at her father's house in Scituate, Mass., aged fourteen years and nine months.

A child of many prayers, intelligent, affectionate, and beloved, it seems but yesterday that she stood at my side full of life, enthusiasm and study. I saw her again last summer at Wilbraham, but in the pale, emaciated, weary, distorted, and feeble sufferer, who sat in her little camp-chair, fast failing with spinal and dropsical disease, I saw nothing to remind me of the merry, happy child of other days. She longed for health of body, but more for healing of soul. Some will remember her, as a seeker after God, and as one who confessed his name, in the Bethel Tent, and elsewhere; and who, pale invalid as she was, went joyfully down into the waters of the Chickopee, on Saturday, and was there buried with Christ, in the likeness of his death, and in the faith and hope of the resurrection to immortal life.

She returned home to struggle a little while with disease, to suffer, to languish, and at last to calmly and deliberately give over the strife and resign herself to die. Christ was her all. No illusive rallying of her sinking powers could make her feel that her home or rest was here. As if going forth upon a pleasant journey, she with loving composure made all her arrangements for the closing hour; talking of her death as but a short, quiet slumber, and her grave beneath the drifting snows as a soft and peaceful bed. And while panting in agony for each breath of blessed air, and suffering all that disease and distortion could inflict upon her, she was yet "as one who comforteth the mourners," saying "it is only a little while."

So sublime and triumphant was her trust, so joyful and glorious her hope, that strangers to the God she loved and served said, "O if I could have such a hope as Martha had, it would be enough." So at last, He who "giveth his beloved sleep," and who says that "whether life or death," "all things are yours," gave her, as we trust, that rest which is granted to those blessed dead who "die in the Lord."

It was my privilege to speak words of hope and comfort to the sorrowing friends, and to say to them, "It is well with the child;" and then we bore her to her grave, where she awaits the voice of the archangel, and the glories of the gathering day. In that day I pray she may not seek in vain the friends who loved her here, and whom she bade to meet her there.

> There my little ones, I know,
> Round me shall be clinging.
> There the loved of long ago,
> With me shall be singing.
> O, that land I long to see,
> Where the weary-hearted
> Shall with Christ in glory be,
> Never to be parted. H. L. H.

LEAVITT. Died in Meredith, N. H., Nov. 27th, 1865, of typhoid fever, Sister Sarah Leavitt, daughter of Thomas and Jane Leavitt, aged thirty years.

Sister Sarah was converted twelve years ago, while her only brother was dying, and although she regretted that she had not read the blessed Bible more, and lived more devoted, still she felt that the Savior was precious to her in her sickness, and although she believed that she should sleep till Jesus comes, she believed it would be short. In this death parents and an only sister sustain a great loss. May it be sanctified to their good, and they meet where death and the tomb will divide no more.

Eld. H. Bundy preached a discourse from the words, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

KIDDER. Died in South Albion, Me., Nov. 18th, 1865, of diphtheria. Emily J. Kidder, aged nine years and eight months.

Emily was a beautiful child, amiable and affectionate, always truthful and dearly beloved by all who knew her. She was bereft of her parents in early childhood, but has been tenderly cared for by loving friends, who mourn deeply her death, but they believe that Jesus will soon raise the sleeping saints to enjoy an immortal life in God's everlasting kingdom, where the inhabitants will not say they are sick. God bless the lonely brother and sister. May they be prepared to meet again, in a little while from this, on the evergreen shore.

> "Peace! weeping ones, Christ liveth; thou and thine
> With him shall live, and in his glory shine;
> This withered bud, unfolding, then shall bloom,
> Bright with heaven's radiance, ransom'd from the tomb."

JEREMIAH CARR.

JOHNSON. Died in Brookfield, N. H., Dec. 16th, 1865, from the effects of a blow received while in the woods at work, by the falling of a portion of a tree, Bro. Joshua B. Johnson, aged forty years.

He lived unconscious about thirty hours. Thus by a sad and fatal accident, in an unlooked for moment, has a good and faithful brother been removed from among us to the region of death, the land of forgetfulness. We trust he sleeps in Jesus. Bro. Johnson was a firm believer in the speedy coming of Christ, and a faithful witness for his cause.

> We miss him sadly in his home,
> We miss him from our praying band;
> But yet we hope to meet him soon,
> When death is banished from the land.
> He sleeps within the silent grave,
> Without a thought, a hope, or fear;
> But in the bright and glorious morn
> Of Resurrection he'll appear. C. C.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Queenstown Dec. 24th.

It is confirmed that the French government has resolved to withdraw from the extradition treaty with England. The treaty expires in June next.

A great revolt of the Circassian emigrants had taken place at Moush and many lives were lost.

Queenstown 30th.

Three more Spanish frigates were about to sail for the Pacific.

Two regiments had been hastily sent from England to Dublin. One of them, in garrison at Manchester, was aroused at three A. M., and conveyed to Liverpool, twelve hundred strong, early the same morning, and forthwith embarked for Dublin. Such energetic movements of course gave rise to rumors of serious danger.

La France denies the report from America that the French Minister has sent his first Secretary of Legation to France for instructions on the Mexican question. Neither has he given notice that he will withdraw if America sends a representative to Juarez.

DOMESTIC.

The Mobile Advertiser of the 7th says Gen. Thomas has officially informed Gen. Patton that all the U. S. troops will be removed from Alabama, and that arms and ammunition will be furnished to the State militia; also that provisions for destitute families will be promptly furnished to the State. The same report comes from Georgia respecting the withdrawal of the U. S. troops from that State also.

New York, Jan. 10. Professor Mapes died today at his residence in Newark.

THE COST OF ROYALTY.—John Bull is a patient and long-suffering old fellow, who goes on the principle of enduring ills rather than running the risk of incurring worse by attempting to better his condition. This is shown in the resignation with which he submits to every fresh demand for further allowances for Queen Victoria and her numerous family. These have been increased from time to time till they now amount to the enormous sum of £625,000, or about $3,125,000 annually. Besides this sum drawn directly from the public treasury for their personal expenditures, some half a dozen palaces are provided and kept in the best order for their use at the public expense. Furthermore, the Queen and the Prince of Wales each have a large private fortune. When the young Princes become of age fresh demands will be made upon the British treasury, and doubtless as promptly acceded to as in the past. It should be remembered that the only person in the whole lot of these royal paupers who performs any useful function is the Queen, who gives the finishing touch to public acts, treaties, etc., by her signature. The actual government of the country is carried on and paid for independently of this great outlay.

FENIANISM IN CANADA.—A letter from Toronto says the number of Fenians enrolled and now drilling in Canada is nearly eighty-two thousand, of whom about one-half are said to be already armed. It is also announced that clubs designed to agitate in favor of the annexation of the provinces to the United States are being organized all over Lower Canada.

☞ An exchange truly says that "you may insert a thousand excellent things in a newspaper, and never hear a word of approbation from its readers; but just let a line or two not suited to their taste slip in, (though by accident,) and you will be sure to hear of it." There is more trouble in keeping a newspaper free from an objectionable thing than filling it twice over.

☞ The Haverhill Gazette announces that George Peabody, the London banker, is to erect a new church edifice in Georgetown, to accommodate the church and society lately formed in that place, to sustain the faith of their fathers, in opposition to the new divinity introduced there by Rev. Charles Beecher.

☞ Brigham Young is reported to have 185 wives, Silas Roeder 129, Jeremiah Stern 111, Job Billisen 93, Julius Hoffman 92, Habacus Croatzy 81, and Gideon Ruffian 84. Brigham's oldest wife is not over 40, and his youngest not above fourteen, while he is the survivor of no fewer than twenty-eight spouses.

☞ It is rumored that the Empress Eugenie of France intends to pay a visit to Rome during the Easter holidays, and that during her stay she will occupy the Farnese Palace, which Louis Napoleon has recently purchased from the ex-King of Naples, Francis II., and presented to the Empress.

☞ The city of Mexico is better supplied with water than any city in the world. It has two immense aqueducts—one seven miles long, and the other three—which bring the water from the mountains to the very heart of the city; thence by arteries it is distributed in every direction.

☞ Libby prison is now a grocery store.

Progress of Crime.

There is a constant accumulation of facts to show that wickedness is rapidly spreading in all directions; and that, too, with less and less opposition. Magistrates tolerate almost every thing that good laws forbid, because they dare not put them into execution. Many unconverted and worldly men appear to be more awake to the awful state of morals at the present time, than are many professors of religion. Sin goes unrebuked, while the great truth of the Lord's speedy coming is ridiculed and turned out of popular churches, and those who would gladly aid them to see the blessed hope, are obliged to go to private houses, or public halls, to preach the gospel of the coming kingdom. If it were not so, one evidence would be wanting to show that we are in the last end of the present dispensation.

Says the editor of one of the leading Dailies, when speaking of the South:—ED.

"The war has left that section of the country in perfect chaos, and of course demoralization prevails. On the other hand, the North is in no better condition, morally speaking. There was never before so much crime in this community, and almost all the offences are of an aggravated character. . . . It is clear that something must be done to purify the nation, and this great problem must shortly enlist the undivided attention of the government and of all intelligent, reflecting men."

☞ One hundred and thirty barrels of Western apples were sold at Hartford yesterday, for from $2.50 to $3.75 per barrel, a reduction of sixty per cent from the high prices of November.

☞ The pews in Plymouth Church (H. W. Beecher's) sold this year for $41,594, an increase of $2736 over last year.

A New Enterprize.

I propose, if the Lord will, to issue a sheet about the size of the Crisis, filled with new tracts, during this present month of January, 1866, and afterwards as often as once a month, if practicable. It will be a newspaper in form, but not in fact, as it will be printed with wide columns, and after it is printed and scattered, each tract will be also printed separately, in the usual form.

REASONS FOR IT.

1. I have on hand large quantities of matter, thousands of pages of reported sermons by H. L. Hastings, Edwin Burnham and others; multitudes of choice tracts and extracts, hymns, tunes, etc., etc., enough to fill a weekly paper, I presume, for a year, and too numerous, by far, to intrude on any existing periodical.

2. When these tracts are printed, I want to save them for future publication, and hence I wish them in broad columns, so I can preserve them stereotyped, in book form, for future use.

3. In ordinary papers, choice articles cannot be obtained and circulated separately, and sometimes matters of little general interest occupy large portions of a paper. In this, all such matters are intended to be omitted, and only articles of permanent value are to be issued.

4. Many persons will read a newspaper when they would not read a tract, even if it contained the same matter; and I wish to reach them with the gospel message.

5. Many persons want to see all the new tracts that are issued, but it is too troublesome and expensive for them to write separately for each one, and this arrangement will give them a steady supply of samples, so they can see what is issued, and know what to order.

6. In tracts, about one-fourth of the paper is used for the white margins, and more than half the labor is expended in folding, stitching, and trimming them. This I save by the newspaper form, and can publish cheaper than in any other way, considering the amount of matter published.

7. I want to put this sheet outside of all sectarian boundaries and limits, among missions, Freedmen, Sunday schools and churches, thus spreading the glad tidings of the grace of God; and I propose to fill up this sheet with sermons, exhortations, hymns, music, expositions of Scripture, records of God's good providence over his people, notes of discourses, and reading matter for young and old, great and small.

8. Moving in this matter without the knowledge, counsel, or help of any one but the Lord, having only sought his guidance, remembering that if God be pleased the work will not be in vain, I shall strive to conduct this publication with a single eye to his glory; and though the responsibility is great, and the eye of reason does not see the way through future difficulties, yet faith declares "the Lord will provide."

The title of the periodical will be

THE CHRISTIAN.

I know of no other name than this, and pray that its character may correspond with the title chosen.

TERMS.

1. It will be sent for 60 cents per volume, of 12 numbers, to any address in the United States or British Provinces.

2. Ten copies will be sent for $5. To the Provinces, the price will be $6 for ten copies.

3. Persons ordering ten or more copies for free distribution in Missions, Hospitals, Sunday schools, among Freedmen, and in similar localities, can have ten copies for $4.

The Lord's poor shall have The Christian free, so long as we can send it.

WHEN ORDERED IN ADVANCE,

Copies of any single number will be sent out at cost of paper and printing, no charge being made for the type-setting, editing, and similar expenses. They will be sent by mail, 100 copies for $3, postpaid, and by express, 100 copies for $2.50.

Who will order 1000 copies of the first number for $25? Who will order 400 copies for $10? Who will order 33 copies for $1? Who will order 10 copies for 30 cents? Who will order 5 copies, or more, for nothing? All shall be supplied who send. Those who choose to may send stamps to prepay postage. But do not delay sending, as when once the printing is done, and the edition scattered, no more can be had at any price. This rate affords about FORTY PAGES OF TRACT MATTER FOR ONE CENT.

WHO WILL HELP?

I invite the friends of Christ, wherever they are, to co-operate in the circulation of this periodical. 1. Pray for it. 2. Work for it. 3. Subscribe for it. It will be issued as regularly as practicable, though from the nature of its contents, it will be in season at any time, and hence we shall not be forced to print without due preparation, as would be the case with a more frequent issue.

Any preacher, or any one else, can have packages of ten or twenty copies sent freely and gladly to use as specimens in securing subscribers.

WRITE IMMEDIATELY if you wish them, as otherwise you will be too late. Those who wish to receive it regularly can send their subscriptions at once, as by so doing I shall avoid prepaying the postage on it. And they can pay it at the office where the paper is received, quarterly, in advance.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST NUMBER.

For the first number, among others, the following original articles are prepared, and will be published, so far as space will permit:

1. Fishers of Men; a sermon by H. L. Hastings, phonographically reported.
2. De Quechy and De Carterette, a Story of Grace. A deeply interesting account of the conversation of two hardened infidels.
3. Sold Cheap. A plain talk to young men, by H. L. H.
4. Wild Oats. A plain talk to young men.
5. The Good Master. A large print tract for Freedmen and mission circulation, by H. L. H.
6. Marks, Good and Bad. Another large print tract for Freedmen, by H. L. H.
7. Various other original or carefully selected articles.
8. Original poetry, by H. L. H.
9. Original music, by H. L. H.
10. Book notices, Prospectus, and sundry other matters which cannot now be specified.

This is the programme of the new enterprise. I submit it to the brethren and friends, praying for the blessing of God, and hoping for the prayers of people.

Please to direct all letters, orders, and remittances to

NEW YEAR'S THOUGHTS.

As I enter upon the year eighteen hundred sixty-six,
I'll pause a moment, [illegible] resolved to be,
For I am well aware I can ne'er obtain the prize,
But to walk by the rule which closely applies.
In sadness I think of the year past and gone,
How little of good in its time I have done.
Awake, oh my soul, be careless no more,
But on in thy strength for the heavenly shore,
Where the "angels of God" in rejoicing will greet
The righteous of earth on that shore, when they meet.

For the Father of love hath prepared a way,
And bids his lost children, who have long gone astray,
Saying, Come unto me, and walk in the light,
And wander no more in the darkness of night.
Oh, cease not, my soul, to respond to that love
Which opened its way from the heavens above,
Descending, with all of its glory and worth,
Bringing light, life and hope, to us mortals of earth.

Say, friends of my youth, and relatives dear,
Will you come to this light, which dispels every fear,
Allow its bright rays to strike deep in the heart,
That sin with its coils may relax and depart?
Jesus, my Lord, is the life of the world;
He came to this earth and his banner unfurled;
'Twas the sign of the Cross which he dyed with his blood,
To cancel our sins and redeem us to God.

He's gone to his Father, a kingdom to receive;
He is coming to share it with those that believe;
The time hasteth greatly, let us watch, then, and pray,
And look for the dawn of that blessed day;
For he's coming, he's coming, this world to inspect,
To cast down the wicked, avenge his elect;
Oh, then, may we shout—our Savior has come,
To redeem us from death and gather us home;
Then all will rejoice in the kingdom of God,
Who have walked, in this life, by the light of his Word.

Hammonton, N. J. ISAAC M. MOULTON.

For the World's Crisis.

DANGERS.

As the church of God approaches her final deliverance, trials increase and dangers multiply on every hand; and unless there is special watchfulness and prayer on the part of the body of Christ, they will sooner or later be caught in some of the snares that Satan and the demons have laid to mislead them. Satan is in no way disconcerted in these days by the popular church and ministry; and why? because the ministry clothe themselves in a popular garb and do not preach the faith, nor the hope, nor the godliness specified in the Bible, but preach a false faith, a false hope, a false godliness, popular things, smooth sayings, or fair speeches, that give contentment to those that are proud and already at ease in Zion.

Their preaching is of that nature that crucifixion to the world, on the part of the church, is not at all necessary. There are no piercing truths uttered by them, which search the heart through and through, penetrating every avenue of the soul to the exposure of sin and a thorough reformation. No. While God expressly commands the church to be not conformed to this world, they utterly disregard this precept, and rush cheerfully into all the pride, fashions, counsels, and customs of the world. Instead of leaving off unnecessary superfluities, they put them on, and dance for joy to think they have them on. Thus you perceive that the professed church of God override the precepts of heaven, and clothe their bodies with jewelry, costly array, and many useless adornings, which lead the heart away from God, and to say, Now don't I appear beautifully outwardly, and shall I not make a graceful figure, and shine in the church or among the fashionables? This they do, and at the same time know that there are men, women and children near by in their rags, destitute of the comforts of life, and necessarily so, because they cannot secure them.

Oh! if the means so freely squandered for useless trimmings, ribbons, artificials, gold rings, chains, bracelets, breast pins, and a thousand other gew-gaws that foster the pride of the human heart, and are a curse to the bearer, could be spent in feeding and clothing the destitute, and in spreading abroad the cheering news of a glorious redemption, by the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, how much better, how much more to the glory of God and the salvation of men. We have not asked you to go hungry, or naked, or destitute of the real necessaries of life; but in Heaven's name do take the means you spend so injudiciously, and cast it as a free-will offering into the treasury of the Lord, so that it may do your fellow men good. Here are a greater part of our ministers obliged to turn their attention to worldly pursuits, much of the time, in order to get an honest living. By so doing they render themselves inefficient in their calling, and the cause of God drags heavily and bleeds at every pore.

The religious fashionables of these last days do not often visit the clothing works of Paul and Peter, and learn how to adorn themselves. There we have the original style and best material with which to clothe the soldiers of Christ. Where, oh, where, shall I find a company thus clothed, thus subdued by the power of God, living in all meekness and sobriety, clothed in their right minds? My spirit yearns to find such a class. I am so tired, so grieved, and so sick of this cold, fashionable, worldly-minded, selfish, sectarian, man-made religion, which joins hands with the world, that I cry and sigh for my heavenly home, which is so bright and fair.

The dangers which surround the church of Christ in these times most powerful and calculated to mislead, are those described above; and would the church escape these dangers, they must abide in Christ, obey his voice, and come out from the world, from its spirit, its practice, its honors, its sinful pleasures and lusts, and put on the whole armor of God, and go to work for him by exhorting, counseling, and praying the sinner to become reconciled to God; for while you are wholly consecrated to God, his word, and his cause, and enjoy its fruits, you will find no time or place for worldly aspirations, or indulgence in sinful propensities. A. N. SEYMOUR.

P. S. The church of Christ in Jonesville, Mich., according to appointment, have enjoyed the faithful labors of Bro. Hiram Munger, of Massachusetts, for a few days. A good congregation was out to hear from the commencement, and I trust much good will be the result of his faithful effort. The church enjoyed the preaching much, notwithstanding the sharp shots delivered on the occasion. Every one seemed to hear for himself, and not so much for others; no one, I think, had a disposition to hold his hands over his mouth for fear that some ears would be cut off, or some sensitives disturbed, or sectarians offended, but felt willing to receive the word as the Lord directed.

Bro. Munger is not one of your polished, careful, smooth, fearful ministers, but is a good, honest, devoted soldier of the cross of Christ, dealing death blows to sin and error that cannot be misunderstood, and is one of the right kind of men for these times; and although he is much more personal and pointed in his preaching than I ever dared to be, yet I felt in my soul to bid him God speed in battering away at the formalities and dogmas of these last days.

Some of the church in Jonesville, I think, will be willing to listen to another discourse from Bro. Greeleaf by this time surely. Well, praise, the Lord, we had a good waking up time. Christians rejoiced, backsliders quivered, sinners trembled, error quaked, God was glorified, and the devil and demons were mad.

I wish to say, if there are churches or brethren scattered through Michigan, Northern Indiana, or Western Ohio, which desire a visit from me this winter, I will endeavor to comply with their wishes, if they will write me in reference to the matter. A. N. S.

HOLINESS.

Sanctification, perfection, perfect love, are terms used synonymously by writers and preachers on this subject. But some things which are said and written do really puzzle me. Will some one through the Crisis solve those puzzles for me, if he can?

First, it is claimed that that state is attainable suddenly and subsequently to what is termed a justified state. Now as we are to be sanctified through the truth, which is God's word, how much truth, or what truth, is requisite to thus suddenly sanctify us?

Second, it is claimed that one may be in a justified state, and yet not be cleansed from all unrighteousness,—that some have lived for months, and even years, in this state, enjoying sweet and uninterrupted communion with God. What puzzles me is, how God can commune with them while sin remains in them, for "all unrighteousness is sin." It, to me, involves this difficulty, that of making God look upon sin with some degree of allowance, notwithstanding the scriptural assertion to the contrary.

Again, if at conversion one is not cleansed from all unrighteousness, does it not follow that Christ does the work in him partially? Will he forgive us of one sin, before we repent of all? If we repent of all, will he not forgive all? It seems to me so. Then will some one tell me how we may live in a justified state, so that we may hold communion with God, and yet not be cleansed from all unrighteousness?

Once more. Those persons claim that they lived in that sweet communion with God up to the time they were convicted for holiness, and when they attempted to seek it, they were in distress, as when first convicted for sin. But why this distress? They say, because they discovered sin still remaining in them. And here comes the puzzle again. How could God commune with them while sin remained? Was there not really another cause for their distress? Were they not tempted to disbelieve that Christ's work in the heart was thorough, to doubt that he had cleansed them from all sin, and thus virtually deny the efficacy of one application of the blood of Christ? It seems, so to speak, to dilute the blood of Christ, so that two applications are necessary to cleanse from all sin, at least in most cases. It is allowed, I believe, in rare cases, that the work is all done at once.

If I were to doubt that, when Christ first spoke peace to my soul, he cleansed me from all unrighteousness, I should feel condemnation at once. Doubt, did I say? The matter is beyond doubt. I could not, if I would, and certainly would not, if I could. When Christ undertook my case, he did the work thoroughly, and then it remained for me to grow in grace, to go on unto perfection, to attain unto the stature of a man in Christ, to be sanctified through the truth. And oh, what a power there is in truth, especially present truth, to sanctify, set apart. The second coming of Christ sets us apart from the world and a lukewarm and pleasure-loving church.

Now, if I am mistaken in anything I have written, or have misrepresented any position, will some one kindly set me right?

ANCIENT SPIRITUALISM.

"Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these, also, resist the truth."—2 Tim. 3: 8.

Jannes and Jambres were Moses' instructors while going to college in Egypt. They, being pagans in principle, used enchantments to deceive Pharaoh, and thus withstood Moses. (See Clark on Jewish History, and Dowling on Paganism.)

We find this same class in the heathen nations through which God's people had to pass, and God continually warns his people against them. "Thou shalt not do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any . . . that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. . . . For those nations which thou shalt possess hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners; but as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not suffered thee so to do."—Deut. 18: 9–14. And there are many similar admonitions against this class of sins.

In Isa. 41: 21–24, we see what God says to his people for their believing in the old-fashioned Spiritualism that pretended to foretell future events.

In 1 Samuel 28, we find the old witch of Endor telling Saul two or three lies about Samuel. Saul saw nothing himself; he only asked her what she could see. She was a regular old-fashioned Spiritualist, pretending to talk with the dead. And God kept his word; for he had said if any of his people consulted one of these enchanters, or charmers, or a witch, he should die for that sin. Turn to 1 Chron. 10: 13, 14, and you will see why Saul died. Many similar passages you can find in your Bibles, by tracing this class of characters down through the road the church has traveled.

See Bishop Newton's comments on Joshua 24: 14, 15, and you will see this same class the other side of the Flood and of the sojourn in Egypt. See also Ezek. 20: 7, 8. Kitto (b. 1, p. 547) says, "Demons were worshiped for bringing news from the dead, or pretending to." Plutarch says, "Demons envy God's people and imitate them in various ways, producing various phenomena, to deceive men." Now as this class of consulters with demons have always followed God's people, whom God is continually warning against them, it is surely the safe way to keep "to the law and testimony." See Isa. 8: 19–21.

Paul had to contend with the same class, and he warned us who should live in the perils of the last days to be prepared for them. The Spiritualists are the only ones that fill this picture, or ever could; for there is no other people that ever did publicly claim they had performed all the miracles that Moses did in Egypt. And these are incontinent, or unchaste, creeping into houses and captivating silly, lusting women, all reprobates concerning the faith, just as Paul said they would be down in the last days. And here we are. But this is the antitype of the work performed in Egypt to hinder the people of God from going out into the promised land under Moses. So this class comes to hinder by their anti-christian miracles the people of God from going forth into their promised land. And they do deceive many. But the prophet like unto Moses, that God raised up, will, like him, lead them out safe, and these last-day sorcerers will fare just as Jannes and Jambres did—be destroyed. See 2 Tim. 3: 9.

This is the class the Revelator saw (ch. 16: 12–14). He saw the sixth vial poured out on the great river Euphrates, or the fall of the Ottoman Empire, which occurred Aug. 11th, 1840. And then he saw the three unclean spirits, like frogs come out of false religions, as deceivers, to bring about the great battle of God Almighty. See what Hume, the Spiritualist, has done in France and other places among crowned heads. Frog-like, in water or mud, on dry land or wet, so Spiritualists are amphibious; they are found in good society, the halls of legislation and politics, or in groggeries and brothels. No other characters are so plainly set forth by Paul as signs of Christ's soon coming.—Voice of the West.

ON JUDGING.

"Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—LUKE 9: 54–56.

It would be well for us all to ponder the above interrogation of the disciples and reply of Jesus, and search our hearts with the light of the Word.

In the same chapter we read of a reasoning among them as to which should be the greatest; and Jesus taught them a lesson of humility by introducing a little child as an example. And when John reported how he had forbade one whom he saw casting out demons in Jesus' name, because he followed not with them, Jesus told him not to forbid them, for he that was not against him was for him, etc. Then again they were exceedingly tried because a village of Samaritans did not receive Him who was worthy of such homage,—who had proved his Messiahship by so many infallible evidences; and gladly would they have commanded fire to come down from heaven and consumed them all. But He who knew all hearts knew how to pity the infirmities of poor fallen natures; He was "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and he could see many weak spots even in his highly favored disciples; and it is well for them and for the church that it is so. "Therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

How slow are many of the followers of the meek and lowly One to learn the lessons inculcated in the text and chapter. How often do we witness exhibitions of this same spirit which influenced those disciples of Jesus. And poor weak erring mortals, because they are members of christian churches, and especially as elders and teachers in the church, seem to claim it not only as a right but as a duty to sit in judgment on all who presume to think, speak, or act, contrary to their views of doctrines, ordinances, or practice; entirely ignoring the spirit of Matt. 18th, and many of the plain teachings of our blessed Lord and his apostles, they with tongue and pen, from the desk and in social meetings, in whisperings and backbitings, assail the christian reputation and private character of any and of all who may oppose them, or who may in any way incur their displeasure; impugning motives, darkly hinting at crimes committed, or intended, and in such bitter words, hard names and slanderous imputations, as will not be tolerated for a moment even in the refined and moral society of the world; language which, if noticed by the injured ones, would subject the accusers to the penalties of the civil law. And such persons say they have the spirit of Christ! Surely if such are not hypocrites, they know not what manner of spirit they are of.

"Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged, and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." "Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart; and then shall every man have praise of God." "Let us be patient, then, unto the coming of the Lord." And to all who witness and experience such manifestations among professed followers of Jesus, as described in the sixty-fourth Psalm, rest in the assurance that if faithful unto the end they will see and realize the fulfillment of the end of the same Psalm. J. T. DIXON.

"TO-DAY."

Jesus the Messiah had long been waited for. Some of you, brethren and sisters, think you know what it is to wait for Jesus; but more than three thousand years had now elapsed since Eve in hope clasped a child in her arms, exclaiming, "I have gotten a man, the Lord." And now God's people had supposed that he hanging upon the cross had been he that should have redeemed Israel. They had followed him day by day, and his Godlike works and character had inspired them with joyful confidence; and well might they feel that if he failed, what could be given them in which they might trust. But their faith was to be tested, and "not knowing the Scriptures," that he must be taken and by wicked hands "crucified and slain," when they saw this fearful part of the programme enacted, either denied or forsook him, and fled. Ah! dark hour for that little band! The darkest, save one, earth had ever seen. There hangs her only hope upon the fatal tree, writhing under all the accumulated agonies that exhorted the cry of "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

But we pause, and here find an instance in the scene that shines the more brightly for having so dark a background. Crucified with this "very Prince," and on either hand of him, hang two malefactors, sinners. Jesus had come to save just such, and one of them, by a faith unexcelled, shall we not say, by anything in sacred records, lays hold by a mighty grasp of the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, and the second manifestation of the Son of God, without a sin-offering, unto salvation, and utters this sublime petition: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Then the answer: "Truly, I say unto thee to-day," AT THIS TIME, notwithstanding all these circumstances so forbidding to the eye of man, but through the darkness of which thine eye of faith penetrating hath discerned light and hope, "Verily I say unto thee TO-DAY, thou shalt be with me in Paradise;" asserting even in death his claim to be the Messiah, his right to forgive sin, and while suffering the agonies of the death on the cross, the Savior and the saved look forward, anticipating the glories of Paradise, when that promise shall be fulfilled. All praise to Him whose thoughts are not as our thoughts, and whose ways are not as our ways.

TRUTH AND JUSTICE.

"Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."

This is part of a prayer our Savior taught us to pray. As I read it, a train of thought comes crowding upon my mind. It is uttered by almost every one who prays, but if at the very time they prayed it God was to answer, how many would attain to "Salem, the saint's happy home"?

"As we forgive our debtors." Reader, if Christ were to take you at your word, where would your portion be? with saint or sinner? Would you feel that, although you had sinned and neglected offered mercy, and spoken unjustly of the people of God, and thus gone on doing for many a day, that now in answer to your prayers all would be freely, fully pardoned, because you had forgiven those that had done evil to you? Perhaps your feelings may have been deeply wounded, or you have been wronged by those you thought your friends; and in the bitterness of your spirit you have felt, Oh, if it had been an enemy, I could have borne it. Is all the bitterness passed away? Do you strive to forget the evil done, and pray that you may love them as you would be loved of Jesus? have you forgiven as you would be forgiven?

Dear reader, it is a solemn thing to trifle with God. He is not mocked, for although he is long-suffering, and of tender mercy, he is also just, and may answer your prayers. Think you it would be well if to-night thy soul were required of thee, or the opening heavens were to reveal the Son of God coming to execute judgment? What would be your part? to stand with that pure, spotless throng, or sink down into darkness? Could you lift your head and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us"? or would there burst from your lips a wail of anguish, and a cry for rocks and mountains to fall upon you? This is a solemn question that each one should strive to answer now. Will it be well for us if we are forgiven as we forgive?

There is great joy depending upon this one thing, even the joys of Eden. And when I think of that happy land (not "far, far away," as we used to sing, for I feel it is very near), what is earth compared to it? I think of its clear river, its pleasant groves, sweet songsters, its delicious fruits, salubrious atmosphere, freighted with the odors of never-fading flowers; and the re-union with the loved ones who are now sleeping in the dust,—and to hear those rich strains of music, from the loftiest to that which is more mellow than the cooing of the gentle dove,—and in the midst of all this happiness, and making it perfect, sits our Jesus, Redeemer and King,—and all this sea of bliss revolving around him as the planets around the sun, and warmed and kept by him. No wonder that good patient Job should have said to God, "When thou shalt call I will answer thee"; for he knew he would be happy in such an hour. No wonder that the angels shouted at the birth of such a Savior, or that his disciples desired him to set up his kingdom then,—that Peter was bold,—that Paul counted his suffering light in comparison to the reward,—or that John should have cried, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!"

Dear reader, my desire is that it may be the prayer of every heart, Lord Jesus, come, and take unto thyself thy great power and reign. Heaven grant that you and I may reign with him.

'Tis sweet to con the sacred page,
It breathes so much of Eden,
It fills the soul with peace and joy,
And savors much of heaven.

"IN HEBREW, GREEK AND LATIN."

Some time ago, a thought occurred to me in reference to the counting of Napoleon's name in the same languages in which the superscription on the cross of Christ was written. I should perhaps have waited until able to state on what Scripture ground my view was based. I thought at the time that, if really true, God would certainly reveal it to some one else, and had no intention of ever alluding to it again. I believe now, however, as the Lord has given me strength, it is my duty to do so. Permit me then to say, that in the light which beams from the cross of Jesus, I think I can see clearly the meaning of Rev. 13: 18,—"Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man, and his number is six hundred threescore and six."

I know not what the general belief is in regard to the wisdom spoken of in this verse. Whether it is considered to be a special display of God's wisdom in so guarding this part of the testimony respecting the great Antichrist, that there should be no doubt of his identity; or whether it means that a greater degree of wisdom is necessary on the part of the student to enable him to understand this, than other parts of the Apocalypse? It is evident no other portion is so circumscribed. It is well to notice, too, that the expression, "here is the mind which hath wisdom," is used while speaking of "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." What mind hath wisdom—not imparted, but wisdom in itself—but His in "whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Wisdom and spiritual understanding I believe to be necessary to the right appreciation of any part of God's Word, especially the Apocalypse, but the manner and connection in which the word is used in these passages, lead me to the conclusion that a new display of God's wisdom is here manifested in restricting the counting of the "number of the beast" to those who understand certain languages in which "his name" is numerically contained. And surely, when we consider "him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power, and signs, and lying wonders," and how terrible the consequence will be to those who worship him, the wisdom of such guarded testimony is apparent. The name Louis Napoleon Bonaparte has been counted in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, and found to contain the required number. That fact, considered in connection with other well-known characteristics, seems to point him out as indeed the "Beast," the "Man of Sin," the "Antichrist."

The fact that his name and title can be counted in English, and perhaps other languages, does not militate against this view, but rather shows the love of our heavenly Father in allowing any of his children—after the prescribed testimony has gone forth—to test for themselves, and thereby furnish additional weight to the evidence. By substituting The Antichrist for "French Emperor," we have the same result, and a more Scriptural title.

Two Evangelists—one of them the beloved John himself—have recorded that the superscription on the cross was written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. Had the Holy Spirit no design in this? Of what practical use has such information been to the church? To me it has served as a guide to the above interpretation, and to identify the great opponent of Him who hung there.

WELCOME, GALLILEAN.

All hail! thou blessed Gallilean!
We'd hail the morn of resurrection!
Blessed morn,
Soon to dawn,
And bring God's fair creation.

We welcome thee again to earth,
To bring a nation at a birth,
Blessed birth,
The new earth
Shall be thy habitation.

O, sound the trumpet from the sky,
Bid sin and misery to fly;
We hail the day
That sweeps away
Sin, and all pollution.

O come, and take thy people home,
Who wait, and trust thy living word;
Blessed home!
No more to roam,
But ever with our Savior.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

There is no subject that is so dear to the child of God as the one that treats of the love of the Savior to fallen man. Would that it could always be impressed on the mind when hours of sadness come, as well as when the heart is bouyant with hope. Jesus loves you even when you have wandered far away from him; and he very often sends affliction because he sees we need it—not that he delights to afflict us.

How consoling the thought that when friends leave us we can have a Friend above all others! Think how much he has done for you and is constantly doing. Can you think without emotion of the agony he endured in the garden of Gethsemane, when his soul was bowed down by the dreadful weight of the sins of a world lying in wickedness, and afflicted and despised by those whom he wished to save? when upon the cross he exclaimed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"? Was ever greater love than this? Do not say that because you are so sinful you fear he does not love you. Instead of looking at your own sinful heart, look away to the "Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world." In him you may find peace and pardon.

Sinner, why will you stay in the bondage of sin? Come to Christ and be free—no longer a slave. Suppose you don't have any feeling, and your heart is as hard as adamant; seek the Lord, and he will give you a tender heart. You surely will never regret that you have done so, and his love will be more precious than that of an earthly friend

T. L. WAUGH.

POPERY.

The progress of Popery in this country is truly alarming. We can remember when a Roman Catholic—a man who did not eat meat on Friday—was a curiosity. Now Romanism bids fair to be the dominant religion of the country. The titles assumed by their ecclesiastics is significant. Their bishops are styled bishops of the country, and not of the Roman Catholics in it. New York contains some Protestants, but the representative of the Pope calls himself the bishop of New York, as though his jurisdiction extended over all its inhabitants. They are not only rapidly increasing in numbers, but their church property is accumulating faster than that of any other denomination. The largest and finest churches in Buffalo belong to them, and notwithstanding the heavy expense of building at the present time, another large edifice is in process of construction. In Philadelphia a cathedral was consecrated last month, which was eighteen years in building, and cost about half a million of dollars. It is the largest church edifice in the United States. More than seven hundred priests participated in the ceremonies and eight thousand people were in attendance.

But the power to which Romanism has already attained is strikingly seen by the special favors shown to its ministers by the government. When Archbishop Hughes—the man who drove the Bible from the public schools—died, the Legislature of New York conferred honors upon his memory which they have never shown to any Protestant divine, however great his talents or exalted his services. Since our civil war began many Protestant ministers have been drafted into the army. Some of them were in poor circumstances, with dependent families; whom it was difficult to leave; and congregations to serve that could illy spare them. Those drafted were compelled to go or procure a substitute. In one case that we know of a substitute was refused. The Rev. Thomas S. La Due, of the Illinois Conference of the Free Methodist Church, was drafted under the recent call. As he had a family that needed his care, his brother, a single man, offered to go in his place. The offer was refused, and Rev. Mr. La Due had to take his place in the ranks.

How has it been in regard to Roman Catholic priests? In September last two Catholic priests were drafted in Bardstown, Kentucky. The Secretary of War ordered that they be not called on to report for service. A number of priests at St. Louis were drafted, all single men, as Catholic priests always are. Application was made to the War Department, and they, too, were promptly exempted. What right has the government to manifest such partiality? Is it to be understood that Romanism is to be thus specially favored by our authorities? The political dominion of the priesthood in the Old World was gained by slow degrees. Is it to be so in this country? Are our religious and civil liberties to be at the mercy of the Romish hierarchy? It is time for the people to wake up to this subject.

As a specimen of the claims already put forth by Romanists in this country, we give an extract from "The Universe," of Philadelphia, "the oldest Catholic paper in the United States:"

"The Pope is the prince of Christendom. He is the Vicar of Christ. All, therefore, that have the true faith, are under his jurisdiction. He is the universal shepherd. To deny this would be heresy. It would be the contradiction of existing visible fact. Where there is the right of jurisdiction or authority, there is the duty of obedience and loyalty; and where this duty is found, the right to protection is found along with it. The Holy Father, therefore, owes the protection of his sublime office to every member of his flock. This spirit has always animated the Sovereign Pontiffs. They have never lost sight of it. It will distinguish them forever. The allocution against the religious and political tyranny of Russia on Poland, was inspired by it. Rome has always preserved the deposit of faith, and always protected it and its children to the best of its ability.

"What can be objected against this? All infidelity, all atheism, all Protestantism, and all Judaism, cry out against it with one common voice. But because they are false they have no justice in their protests, and it would be a waste of time to consider what they demur."

The Pope the prince of Christendom! Is not that a bold claim to be put forth in the nineteenth century? Infidelity, Atheism, and Protestantism are ranked together! and "because they are false" their protests must not even be considered!—Earnest Christian.

WHAT OUR MINISTERS NEED.—It is growing plain to many, that what we need now is not more literature and science in our pulpits, but more earnest piety; higher spirituality; more reliance on the truth as it is in Jesus; more prevailing prayer for the Holy Spirit's effectual working. We need a race of ministers trained to the great idea of the apostles and reformers, that God has furnished in the Scriptures the armory with which alone victories can be won. Away with the idea that our ministers are to prevail by human might or worldly wisdom. The seminary which shall bring our young men nearest to God as their teacher and source of power, will send forth the truly successful ministers for whom this new era calls.—Boston Recorder.

SPIRITUALISM.—Spiritualism is rampant, and hurls defiance at the Bible and the God of the Bible. Their great conventions, following each other thickly, are developing their strength and purposes. The bitterness with which they regard the christianity of the Bible is becoming more apparent every month. There can be no room for doubting that this system will form one of the great engines of evil in the conflicts of the last days.—Ex.

SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF DYSENTERY.

During the months of September and October this terrible disease prevailed extensively in the village of Dansville and the region round about, as it did over a large portion of our country. Many of those who were sick with it died. Some of these were men holding prominent positions in social life; others were women of large social influence; while many were young persons and children. It was sorrowful to witness the funeral army that marched day after day to our cemetery bearing honored and regretted dead. I had hoped that the disease might not find a foothold in Our Home, and for some time after its appearance in the neighborhood, it seemed as if my hopes were to be gratified; but my expectations were disappointed. Some of our patients were taken sick with it, and once in the house it ran its course until we had sixty-five suffering with it, not all at once, but in succession. A good many of them were very, very sick, to all appearance dangerously so; yet under the methods employed not a single person died. This, I think on the whole, is one of the most remarkable instances of the efficacy of hygienic treatment which ever came to my knowledge. It is equal to our success in treating diphtheria when that epidemic went through this region three years ago slaughtering its hundreds. During the course of its prevalence we had over a hundred cases to treat, and did not lose one.

There is no use in denying the trustworthiness of means and measures which prove so reliable as our treatment of Diphtheria and Dysentery has done. It is considered by all who know the facts of the case to be most remarkable that we should have saved every one of sixty-five persons who were taken down with it. Our treatment was as follows:

Upon the appearance of the diarrhea we put the patient to bed, treating him to fluid food in small quantity, giving him one thorough skin bath in the morning, a sitz bath at 85 to 90 degrees in the evening, accompanied with a foot bath at 100 to 103 deg. with hot fomentations over the bowels twice or three times a day of from 20 to 30 minutes duration each time, followed by cold compresses. Enemas of water at a temperature of 90 deg. followed by water as cold as 50 or 45 deg. after every movement, no matter how frequent, until the acute inflammation of the bowels had decidedly lessened. And though we took most of our cases at the outset, such was the severity of the attacks that the majority of them in spite of all we could do, passed into the state of bloody flux accompanied with high fever, thus showing that the conditions at the outset were severely morbid, and such as under drug-medication would in all probability have proved fatal. We rejoice with joy unspeakable over our success, and feel if possible more than ever before an abiding confidence in the soundness of the philosophy which underlies it.—Laws of Life.

FRESH AIR.

The New York Lancet, a new weekly journal, just started, offers the following excellent suggestions:

"Every house should be thoroughly ventilated the first thing every morning, so as to allow the atmosphere of the previous night to escape. This can be done by first airing one part and then another. By doing this a house also can be the more easily warmed. When there are many persons collected in a room, care should be observed to keep a few inches of the window open from the top, every one avoiding sitting close to or under it, as, after a time, when there are many collected together the atmosphere of the room becomes impregnated with their exhalations, and the air is thus rendered impure. By perfect ventilation there is a uniform amount of oxygen, which is the vital part of the atmosphere, and which is necessary to our very existence, maintained. Who has not noticed the disagreeable feeling produced on going from the fresh air into a room with many persons, in which the ventilation is imperfect? At night, also, fresh air should be admitted into the room, for it is, if anything, more necessary that there should be a plentiful supply of oxygen. We have often been asked the ridiculous question, if enough air did not come in through the key-hole. Certainly not. That is not fresh air. Make it a rule always to sleep with part of your window open from the top, avoiding its blowing on you. Fresh air never hurt any one, for by it we live. It is the want of it that injures. Persons seem to forget that they spend one-third of their lives in their bed-rooms. We frequently see a man building a house, bestowing all his attention on the plan of the parlors, while the bedroom are, to a great extent, and in some instances, entirely neglected. It had better be vice versa.

CONVERSATION AT THE TABLE.

A recent writer in the Atlantic Monthly insists on the absolute importance of pleasant talk at meal times. He says:—

"General usage has determined that three times a day we shall assemble with our families for the common purpose of appeasing the demands of hunger and satisfying the fancies or whims of the palate. Moreover, to many men these are the only times of the day when they can have the opportunity to meet all the members of their families in free and unrestrained intercourse.

Now to make this occasion something more than mere feeling, and to elevate it to the dignity of rational intercourse, conversation is indispensable. We must open our mouths for something more than the reception of food. As a mere hygienic rule, I wish that excellent proverb could be circulated among our countrymen, 'Chatted food is half digested.' I would almost pledge myself by this simple rule to cure or prevent nearly half the cases of dyspepsia.

But for higher reasons, chiefly, I speak of it now. We ought to insist that everything shall be favorable at meal-times to the truest sociality. No clouded brows, no absent or preoccupied minds should be permitted at our tables. Whoever is not ready to do his part in making it a cheerful hour, should be made to feel that he does not belong there. Better the merest nonsense, better anything that is not scandal or detraction, than absolute and freezing silence there. I am sure that the usages of all the most civilized and refined people will bear me out in this,—that the only way to dignify our meals, and make them something better than the indulgence of mere animal appetite, is to intersperse them largely with social talk. There, if not elsewhere, we look for the soluta lingua. There all reserve and embarassment of speech, we trust, will have vanished, and each will feel free to impart to the rest his brightest and most joyous moods. Shall we ever realize this ideal, as long as 'bolting' usurps the place of eating?"

PRINCIPLES OF HYGIENIC MEDICATION.

All healing power is inherent in the living system.

There is no curative virtue in medicines, nor in anything outside the vital organism.

Nature has not provided remedies for diseases.

There is no "law of cure" in the universe; and the only condition of cure is, obedience to physiological law.

Remedial agents do not act on the living system, as taught in medical books and schools, but are acted on by the vital powers.

Disease is not, as is commonly supposed, an enemy at war with the vital powers, but a remedial effort—a process of purification and reparation. It is not a thing to be destroyed, subdued, or suppressed, but an action to be regulated and directed.

Truly remedial agents are materials and influences which have normal relations to the vital organs, and not drugs, or poisons, whose relations are abnormal and anti-vital.

Nature's materia medica consists of air, light, temperature, electricity, magnetism, exercise, rest, food, drink, bathing, sleep, clothing, passional influences, and mechanical or surgical appliances.

The true healing art consists in supplying the living system with whatever of the above it can use under the circumstances, and not in the adminstration of poisons which it must resist and expel.

Drug remedies are themselves causes of disease. If they cure one disease, it is only by producing a drug disease. Every dose diminishes the vitality of the patient.

Drugopathy endeavors to restore health by administering the poisons which produce disease.

Hygeio-Therapy (erroneously called "Hydropathy," or "Water-Cure,") on the contrary, restores the sick to health by the means which preserve health in well persons.

Diseases are caused by obstructions, the obstructing materials being poisons or impurities of some kind.

The hygienic system removes these obstructions, and leaves the body sound.

Drug medicines add to the causes of obstructions, and change acute into chronic diseases.

To attempt to cure diseases by adding to the causes of disease, is irrational and absurd.

Hygienic medication (Hygeio-Therapy) is not a one-ideaism which professes to cure all diseases with "water alone." Nor is it a "Cold Water-Cure," as is erroneously believed by many. It adopts all the remedial appliances in existence, with the single exception of poisons.—Dr. Trall.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

We're going home, where sorrows cease,
Where all is joy and love and peace.
At God's right hand forevermore,
We hope to dwell when storms are o'er.
This world is full of trouble now,
Before the tempter's shrine we bow;
And thus we live from day to day,
And from our Savior turn away.
O, when will come that blessed day,
Of which we've heard our Savior say,
When pain and death will all be o'er,
And we be saved forevermore?
O come, dear Savior, quickly come,
And bring thy ransomed children home,
Where all the faithful then will live
The life that thou didst die to give.
But while we think of joys to come,
And try the christian race to run,
We long to have our dearest friends
Receive the light that Jesus sends.
O come, dear friends, come, come away,
This world will lead you far astray,
And when the Savior calls for you,
In that last hour what can you do?
The day of grace will then be o'er,
The sinner lost forevermore;
O hasten, then, with all your might,
Before the Spirit takes its flight;
How dreadful then to hear the cries,
When Jesus comes through parted skies
To slay the wicked with his rod,
And thus fulfill the word of God.
O how you'll wish you'd given heed
To all the words our Savior said,
And turned from all your wicked ways
When you were in your youthful days.
The judgment day will soon be here,
Before the Judge you must appear;
A strict account you'll have to give
Of all the ways in which you live.
Now, sinner, come, and don't delay,
Don't put it off another day;
For if you should, and be too late,
Eternal death would be your state.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER FIVE.

"And the stars shall fall from heaven," is the next event in this series of signs spoken of by the Savior.

The following is the record of a scene that occurred on the night of Nov. 13th, 1833, copied from the Connecticut Observer of Nov. 25th, 1833.

"The Falling Stars.—The editor of the Old Countryman makes a very serious matter of the Falling Stars. He says,—'We pronounce the raining fire which we saw last Wednesday morning, an awful type—a sure forerunner—a merciful sign of that great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened.

The time is just at hand, described not only in the New Testament, but in the Old. A more correct picture of a fig-tree casting its leaves when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold. Many things now occurring on the earth tend to convince us that we are in the latter days. This exhibition we deem to be a type of an awful day fast hurrying upon us. This is our sincere opinion, and what we think we are not ashamed to tell. Men may and have called us enthusiastic. We care not if they call us mad, so that we feel they are mistaken. . . . We will go on our way rejoicing. Nor would we go alone.—Hence we warn all to turn to the Lord while yet they may.'"

The following extract from Observations on Meteors, by Prof. Olmstead, taken from a work of S. Bliss, will show the nature and extent of this phenomenon:—

"The nature and extent of the showers of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America to the undefined regions among the British possessions on the north. The exhibition of shooting stars was not only visible, but everywhere presented nearly one and the same appearance. The duration and maximum, or period of greatest display, were characterized by a similar uniformity. In nearly all places the meteors began to attract attention by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the cycle."

"A similar phenomenon was witnessed on the 12th of Nov., 1799, and at the same season of the year in 1830, 1831 and 1832. The meteoric showers were repeated on the morning of Nov. 13th or 14th several years, but on a scale constantly diminishing until 1838, since which period the exhibitions have been too little remarkable to be worthy of particular notice.

"I feel assured that this is no atmospheric or terrestrial phenomenon, but these fiery meteors came to us from the regions of space, and reveal to us the existence of worlds of a nebulous or commentary nature existing in the solar system, and forming part of the solar system. Nor are these conclusions built upon mere hypotheses, but are necessary inferences from certain facts.

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the page of history. This is no longer to be looked upon as a terrestrial, but as a celestial phenomenon; and shooting stars are now to be viewed no more as casual productions of the upper regions of the atmosphere, but as visitants from other worlds, or from the planetary void.

"Subsequent inquiries have led me to the belief that the body was so distant as hardly to exhibit a parallax, but was projected on very nearly the same part of the sky by all observers. This fact at once shows that the source of the meteors was far beyond the atmosphere, and confirms the preceding conclusion that it was wholly independent of the earth."

This is the testimony of Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a man well versed in the history of science, and who has probably devoted more attention to investigations of this character than any other man in this country. If these meteors were not the predicted "falling stars," which were to be distinguished signs of the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, it would be difficult to conceive of any celestial phenomenon which would fill the prophecy.

The objection that these were not real stars is of no weight; for the falling of one such to the earth would be, not a sign of the end, but the end itself. It could not have been a planetary star which guided the wise men by going before them and standing where the child lay. All luminous bodies having the appearance of stars have been thus denominated; hence these meteorical showers have been called stars, and they are the only stars that could fall to form a sign to men of the coming of Christ.

Luke describes our Savior as saying,—"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear," etc. See chap. 21 : 26, 27. All of which has come to pass within the remembrance of the present generation.

But it is again argued that the darkening of the sun and moon of 1780, and the falling of the stars of 1833, could not be the fulfillment of the Lord's prophecy, because they were not universal in their manifestation. But when we consider that all the signs which clustered around the first advent of Christ (an event involving the interests of the whole family of mankind, as well as the second), were local, yet of such a nature as to challenge the infidelity of the whole world, the argument disappears. We have no more right to say the sun and moon must be darkened all over the world to make such a sign of the second advent, than we have to say that the star which guided the wise men to the babe of Bethlehem as a sign, must appear all over the world. All must admit there were signs peculiar to that generation. Said the Master to the Scribes and Pharisees of his day, "Can ye not discern the signs of these times?" and yet those signs were local, and seen but by a few comparatively; yet the truth concerning those things was published broadcast through all the land of Judea and round about Jordan. So there are signs of the second advent near, peculiar to the last generation of the world's history, which, to be sure, have been local in their manifestation; but a proclamation of the near coming of Christ, based on those evidences, has gone abroad into all lands.

The shaking of the powers of the heavens is the last sign mentioned in the twenty-ninth verse. This is understood variously by those looking for the Lord. Some look upon it as significant of a convulsed state of the political world, and others as a deranged state of our atmosphere; and still others the literal departure of the heavens. But if it refers to the political heavens, it has had a marked fulfillment; and if it has reference to the atmospheric heavens, that has been known to be in a state of strange fluctuation for years; and it is said that Prof. Silliman once made the remark, that such was the deranged state of the elements in our atmosphere, a few years ago, had it continued but a short time longer it must have resulted in a general conflagration.

Verse 30th,—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." The sign of the Son of man I understand to refer to his visible Majesty, to distinguish him from the false Christs who had come in the desert and in the secret chambers, showing great signs and wonders.

Verse 31st,—"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Here we have illustrated one grand object of Messiah's advent to earth a second time. It is the consummation of the great work of redemption; the gathering together in one body or community all things in heaven and on earth, even in Him. See Eph. 1 : 10.

Verses 32, 33,—"Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." "Now learn," i. e., when ye see the before-named precursors, know my day is near, as you may know summer is near when ye see the tender buds appearing upon the fig-tree, and the other trees.

Verse 34th,—"Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all these things shall be fulfilled." This has reference to the generation living on the earth when the sun and moon are darkened and the stars fall from heaven. "They shall not all pass away till they see accomplished" the last event predicted, viz., the coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven.

Verse 35,—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Here our Lord asserts the immutability of his counsel. Earth in its present form must pass away. Its physical condition, like an old garment, must undergo a change, but the word of God remains the same. His counsel shall stand though man may devise against it.

The assurance,—"my word shall not pass away"—refers in this connection to all our blessed Redeemer had spoken in reference to the signs and certainty of his coming. Every jot and tittle shall be fulfilled, and at the end of this grand drama Christ will come. Though the human dreams of national glory and flattering prospects of human enterprize, combined with the unbelief of an infidel age, may remonstrate against such an event, yet in its time and order it will come. When the day and hour arrive, no remonstrance of man can stay the chariot wheels of his terrible Majesty.

"When sin hath moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy, shall descend
Triumphant in his chariot paved with love,
Then what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

THE OFFENCE OF THE CROSS;

OR,

PERSECUTION, WHAT IS IT?

"Are there no foes for me to face?
Must I not stem the flood?"

What is persecution? To be scourged in synagogues, brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake?

Is it to be stoned, sawn asunder, slain with the sword, to wander about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented? Is it to be cast into the lion's den, or the fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than is wont? This, doubtless, is persecution for righteousness' sake; but is this all? Is not opposition to God's truth in every form persecution? to vex, afflict, harass with injustice and false accusation? to inflict pain from hatred or malignity? What persecution more to be dreaded than a slanderous tongue, malice prepense, a tongue set on fire of hell—misrepresentation, silent, satanic innuendoes to destroy reputation and usefulness, hinder the cause of truth and salvation? Doubtless the vexatious hindrances of Paul among false prophets and false brethren, the time-servers and popular seekers of his age, their virulent opposition to his reformatory steps, were more aggravating and soul-trying than to suffer shipwreck, be stoned, beaten with rods, or to "receive forty stripes save one."

We may not, at this age of refinement, under our modified laws of civilization, be burned at the stake, led to the scaffold, cast into a lion's den, for preaching the gospel in all its freeness and fullness, but think you persecution has ceased, or the offence of the cross? Is not human nature still human nature? Is not Satan the very same Satan, going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, or transforming himself into an angel of light? Is not the same hatred for truth and holiness now, as when Christ was put to death, John the Baptist beheaded, James slain with the sword, and Peter crucified with his head downwards? And who were the most virulent persecutors in time of the holy prophets and apostles, who? The Gentiles, the heathen, men of the world? Nay, but a corrupt, ungodly church, a wicked Sanhedrim—those having a name to live and were dead, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof,—whom Christ denounced as false prophets, scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outward, but within were full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanliness. "Fill ye up, then," says Christ, "the measure of your fathers; ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (See Matthew, chapter 23, the whole of it, a true and graphic picture of the present degeneracy.)

Has the offence of the cross ceased? Let any man of God stand boldly against the perpetual backslidings, the fashions, and follies, the extravagant wickedness in costume, the idolatry in dress, in church building, and etiquette, the popery of the age, as Paul did, "What now? mountains in labor? fire and sword?" "Great is Diana of the Ephesians?" something perhaps more piercing than steel, the drawn sword or bayonet. "The tongue that deviseth mischiefs like a sharp razor, working deceitfully." "My soul," says the Psalmist, "is among lions, and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword." This little unruly member, whom no man can tame, more terrible to endure than a drawn dagger, is the chief instrument of persecution of a corrupt, idolatrous church of the present day.

Let any man in the sacred desk or editorial chair come out boldly, unflinchingly against the manufacture, traffic and use of strong drink and tobacco, two great engines of hell, that spread everywhere desolation and damnation, making our world an Aceldama, a field of blood; lay the ax at the root of these Upas trees, cry aloud against the distiller, the buyer, seller and consumer of this distilled damnation, and the corrupting, filthy, poisonous, body and soul destroying Indian weed, any rising up of old Adam, any bubblings of the pit?

So, also, in regard to a corrupt press, issuing its daily millions, spreading firebrands, arrows and death!

How is it that some ministers can preach year out and year in, and experience no persecution? Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? or is it because they keep back part of the price; shun to declare the whole counsel of God? The world's definition of a good man is,—"He has no enemies." But what saith the Savior?—"Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did our fathers to the false prophets;" not the true prophets. Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? Would to God it were so; but let a man step forward into the front ranks of reform, attack all the popular sins of the present day, wage an uncompromising warfare against all the powers of darkness, slavery, novel reading, rum selling, rum drinking, tobacco smoking, chewing, making and selling, all sinful indulgence in apparel, in dress, jewelry, and in all God-forbidden things, of whatever kind and name, and he will find a host to rise up against him, and persecution will rage. We may not be called to suffer martyrdom as did many of the apostles and prophets, but our names will be cast out as evil. We shall find the words of our Savior true, that a man's foes shall be they of his own household. The prophets and apostles, and our Savior, opposed all sin, and they all suffered persecution—many of them unto death. The same cause will produce the same effect; if any one doubts this, let him try it.

We perceive that those who tell us persecution has ceased, that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to stand at the cannon's mouth, place themselves in the battle's front, beard the lion in his den, wage open warfare with the combined powers of earth and hell. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, are at ease in Zion, oppose agitation, cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, bow the knee to a pro-slavery, time-serving age, loving the praise of men more than the praise of God.

"Where is thy cross? the daily care,
The daily toil, the daily strife—
The warfare they are called to bear
With foes who aim at more than life."

What says Christ? "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may) suffer persecution." "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword." "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

D. F. Newton, Author of Home Thrusts.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

B. C. 482. With B. C. 482 ends both the twenty-nine years Herodotus gives Cyrus, and the seven which Xenophon allows from "the acquisition of his empire."

B. C. 479. With B. C. 479 ends the seventh year of Cambyses, who was followed by Darius the son of Hystaspes, according to Herodotus. This is involved in some difficulty. In the reply to Bro. Stevenson, we observed that the Parian Chronicle, with Dr. Hales' revision, gave B. C. 495 for the slaughter of Smerdis Magus, and the accession of Darius, son of Hystaspes, which appears to be correct; for the following reasons:

1. According to Xenophon, the "expedition to Egypt is said to have taken place" in the days of Cyrus, who "brought Egypt into subjection." Xen., b. 8, c. 7, s. 20.

2. Cyrus could not properly have said that "the Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth," until after he had subdued Egypt.

3. Megasthenes makes no allowance for the reign of Cambyses, as an independent king of Persia, but says that "Cyrus and Darius reigned thirty-six years; because, before the monarchy was reunited, they reigned six years in Persia, afterwards other six years, when the Persian kingdom being resigned to Cambyses' [bis] son, they made war for six years against Tongris, queen of the Scythians. In the sixth year, when they were provoked by the Babylonians, and when Belshazzar was killed, they transferred the united monarchy to the Persians." Times of Daniel, p. 237.

4. The Parian Chronicle gives B. C. 495 for the beginning, and B. C. 460 for the end of the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes; which gives him just thirty-five years; and according to Ctesias, "Darius reigned thirty-five years,"—that is, the one that reigned after Egypt was subdued."—Times of Daniel, p. 253.

5. Rosellini mentions an inscription among those found on the Egyptian monuments, "recording the victory of the Persians . . . in the 27th year of a king, who, Rosellini does not doubt, was a Persian monarch, whose identity he cannot determine, but whose name he deciphers to be Tnebusc" (Times of Daniel, p. 228), which may be an Egyptian perversion of Hystaspes, for the date given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have mentioned, was B. C. 495, which answers to the twenty-seventh year of Darius Hystaspes.

I suppose the truth of the matter may have been about as follows: In B. C. 495, the Magus was slain, and from that time Darius the son of Hystaspes may have received the government over some province in Persia; but did not ascend the throne, as king, until the death of his uncle Artaxerxes, in B. C. 478; for the king found on the throne, between the reign of Cyrus and the second Darius, was not Cambyses, but "Artaxerxes, king of Persia."—Ezra 4: 7.

I suppose that Darius the son of Hystaspes was one of those "three presidents" (Dan. 6: 2), which were appointed "over the whole kingdom." His father being an old man, sixty-two years of age (Dan. 5: 31), he may have given the business affairs of the kingdom into the hands of his son; for when Cyrus issued his decree for the Jews to return home, this "Darius sent with them a thousand horsemen." "He sent away also all the vessels from Babylon, that Cyrus had set apart, and all that Cyrus had given in commandment; the same charged he also to be done and sent unto Jerusalem" (Esdras 4 : 57 and 5 : 2); and from the words of Esdras to Darius, saying, "Remember thy vow which thou hast vowed to build Jerusalem, in the day when thou comest to thy kingdom" (4 : 43), two points are made clear. 1. That he was not at that time king. 2. That he was aware that he would soon come in possession of the kingdom, and this was before the death of Cyrus, for he builded Jerusalem. Isa. 45 : 13.

B. C. 478. With B. C. 478 began the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes. To distinguish him from his father, Darius Hystaspes, he is called Darius Longimanus, "which the Persian historians explain, not of the length of his arm, but of the extent of his sway" (Times of Daniel, p. 259), for his dominion was "from India unto Ethiopia, of an hundred twenty and seven provinces." 1 Esdras 3 : 2. On the monument erected by himself he tells us who he was, which is not Darius Hystaspes, but says, "I am Darius, the son of Hystaspes." He calls himself "the great king, the king of kings"; hence not one of the subordinate kings. The time of his reign we have, in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," fixed by the seventy years fasting and mourning, and we will have fixed it again by the document from Philo. He says there were "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation eleven years"; and he makes "the eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity the seventieth from the desolation"; hence commences the captivity with the same epoch that we have.

These "eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity and the seventy from the desolation," just reach the second year of Darius, at which time they commenced the second time to build the temple. According to the chronicle of the Seventy, "Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus (B. C. 486), went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that in the next year, when he had become victorious, . . . he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple," in B. C. 485, the year of Jubilee.

"In the first year of his (Darius') reign, Joshua, the high priest, returned to Jerusalem, and by the commandment of Haggai and Zechariah put forth his hand to build the temple. Joshua, therefore, filled the office of high priest in the first instance for thirty-six years (that is, during the reign of Darius), until the twelfth year of Assuerus the elder, and Joiakim his son in his absence eight years." So, from the death of Assuerus, or the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, to the first of Darius the son of Hystaspes, is eight years. But the work "ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius" (Ezra 4 : 24); therefore, the eight years must reach near the end of the first year of Darius; so in our table of chronology, the eighth year synchronizes with the first of Darius. That the Darius, in whose sixth year the temple was completed, was called Longimanus, it is said, "when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God"; and by reference to 1 Esdras 4 : 43, we find that the king in whose sixth year the temple was completed was the one that "vowed to build Jerusalem." From the monument erected by Darius, it is clear that he, "Darius the son of Hystaspes," was the king that slew "Gometus the Magian," "dispossessed him of the empire," and thus followed him as the next king; and by reference to the "Oriental Chronicle," we find that the king that followed the "Mage" reigned twenty years, though he is there called Assuerus. Times of Daniel, p. 242. The mistake as to his name may have occurred thus: In an old "fragment, said to be of Megasthenes," it stands thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus, son of Darius, twenty years." As "the elder Artaxerxes" was not son of Darius, there is evidently something wrong; but the difficulty will vanish if we add the word and, and read it thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus," and "son of Darius, twenty years."—Times of Daniel, p. 83. This removes the difficulty, for both "the elder Artaxerxes" and "Darius the son of Hystaspes" did reign about twenty years. But Herodotus not distinguishing between the father and son, gives him the thirty-six years during which his father "Darius Hystaspes reigned."

Herodotus admits that the Darius that reigned thirty-six years "was the first person who" "refined gold to the utmost perfection," and "coined money" (Herod. 4 : 166), which "Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us . . . were coined not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius, by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians who coined gold money." Times of Daniel, p. 180. From this, we also learn that the father of Xerxes was not the first Darius. According to Herodotus, the Magus reigned seven months; and in allusion, as I suppose, to the same circumstance, in the document of Philo, it is said, "In the seventh month, when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God, and appointed king. In the first year of his reign, Joshua the high priest returned to Jerusalem."

B. C. 477. "In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king," "they came and did work in the house of the Lord."—Hagai 1 : 14, 15. This was the ninth year from the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, "on account of" whose death "the building was impeded," which is in exact harmony with Josephus, who says "these works were hindered from going on till the second year of the reign of Darius, for nine years." Ant. b. 11, c. 2, s. 2. Also in harmony with the document of Philo, which gives the twelfth year of Assuerus, that is, the time of the death of "Darius Hystaspes," for the time at which Joshua left, who being about eight years, returned in the first of Darius; hence the second year in which they commenced to build the temple was the ninth from the time at which "the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes."

THE FIFTH KINGDOM.

Very much has been said, in some quarters, as to a fifth, earthly, universal monarchy,—a new form of "the kingdom of men." Russia has been assigned to this pre-eminent position. "The forms of the kingdom are five (the five is italicised, and they are named in the same compound sentence), Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, and Russia." See Anatolio, p. 2, s. 2.

This assertion is only an assumption, however set forth. It ignores the most positive terms of all prophecy; the plainest statements of all history; and the best arrangements of all chronology to the contrary. This is demonstrated thus:

I. The God-giver. The absolutely accurate number of "the forms of the kingdom of men" is "four." Zech. 1 : 18–22. The "four horns" are "the Gentiles" that "have scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem." Here is no obscurity—no possible room for evasion. The number is "four." Daniel 2d, 7th, 8th, all sustain this, and the reference to it by Jeremiah and Ezekiel confirm it.

II. The prophet Ezekiel himself knocks the theory of "five" earthly kingdoms, like the barley cake of Gideon, that struck "the tent of Midian till it laid along." Ezek. 38 : 17.

"The Gog power" (for which a place was framed in the theory of "five" earthly empires), is that spoken of by God's servants of "old time," as in Gen. 10 : 2; Isa. 10; and Isa. 11, etc. Assyria and Babylon then were that power.

The Russian power, which is imagined to be the Gog power, is not of "old time," but modern, and about twice as old as the United States. Its capital did not begin to be built till about twenty-five hundred years after the prophecy (Ezek. 38) was given. Thus the theory built on Ezek. 38 : 1–3, is destroyed by the prophet himself at verse 17th of the same chapter.

This theory, that is too blind to see so far as verse 17th, cannot have been framed by "Wisdom," nor can it have employed any one of its "seven pillars."

III. "The desolation" of Jerusalem (Dan. 9 : 26–27), was Rome; and of this all ages since have had occular demonstration in the inscription of the vessels of the temple service, on the arch of Titus, in the city of Rome. Now "that which is determined shall be poured on the desolation,"—that is, on Rome, "the fourth." Dan. 7. This is fatal to the imaginary fifth earthly empire.

Thus of every aspect in which this theory is contemplated in the light of God's truth. The prophet Jeremiah has "the north," etc., in Asia over twenty times. Ezekiel locates there the merchants of Tyrus (Ezek. 27, Dan. 11); designates Syria and Egypt as "the king of the north and the king of the south"; and so Mitchell's Ancient Geography shows it. The Mohammedans now occupy just those territories, and the eastern (the third) part of the Roman world, and the Babylon of "old time," to be disposed of in its impending judgment. Amen.

Again, the theory of a fifth earthly empire takes another and more subtle phase, but subject to the fatal objection that God's only number is always "four," as applied to the forms of "the kingdom of men."

The mis-called Spiritualists are (it has been often suggested) about to organize and thus rule the world. But this cannot be, but by the formation of a new earthly empire. A new organization, with new titles of dominion, new principles and new projects, would involve a general revolution in the world's government. But as certainly as God's "word is truth," so certainly this new and fifth earthly kingdom cannot obtain.

Rome, "the eternal," "the infallible," allows no successor. Nor does the judgment of God written against Rome allow any, save the divine. We pray in faith for the only fifth kingdom when we pray, "Thy kingdom come." Amen.

YE ARE MY WITNESSES.

"The judgment of the great day."—Jude 6.

"When every one of us shall give an account of himself to God." Rom. 14 : 12. "When God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts, by Jesus Christ, according to the gospel." Rom. 2 : 16. "When the wrath of God shall be revealed from heaven." Rom. 1 : 18; 2 : 5. The period when eternal fates shall be in righteousness administered. The day of bright glory to God's little ones. The dawn of immortality to the saved. Also the dawn of the consummation of God's purposes concerning the race of men and angels. The ushering in of the fullness of the blessed gospel of Christ. What a day will this be, attended with the most fearful and momentous consequences!

Are we approaching this decisive day, and are we ready, are, perhaps, two of the most important questions that ever have, or ever can interest the mind of intelligent and responsible man. There certainly can be no question of paramount importance to these in all the wide range of man's inquiry and thought. It may, however, be a question which of these two is first in importance.

But if we properly consider the nature of the first, and its practical bearing upon the second, we shall, I think, come to the conclusion that they are of almost equal magnitude and importance, although many honest minds seem to think that the time of the final consummation is a question of little or no concern to us. But must it not be to the class or generation living at that time? See this subject illustrated by the Savior in Matthew 24th chapter, commencing at the 42nd verse. Also Matt. 25 : 10. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut."

It appears quite evident to me by the revealed duty and obligations of the church at this particular point of time, that these two questions are so blended as also to make them of equal importance. See in reference to the duty of the church at this point, as revealed in Luke 21 : 28. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh." Look up, your expectation of speedy redemption brightens. Your duty is to look up. This duty does not appear to arise till now. But why look up now more than at any other time in the past? For the obvious reason, that day is approaching. But the relation of those then living to that day is somewhat changed by the fulfillment of the Savior's prediction, as is illustrated by him in chap. 21 : 31. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." An additional obligation,—"Know ye," etc. Most certainly a knowledge of the Savior's near approach, and a readiness for the event, is implied in the Master's instruction; a knowledge sufficiently definite for practical purposes. The church is brought to the point of continued expectation. Thus we must see that the question of the time of the judgment, and a readiness or preparation for that event, are questions that will equally agitate and interest the Christian world at the time of its near approach.

Now let me, dearly beloved flock of God, inquire,

1. Do you most certainly, as you profess, understand that we are surely near the period already referred to? Have you learned these truths from God's unerring word? Have you made it a part of your intellectual being? Have you traced out God's pencilling upon the chart of prophetic declaration? The importance of so doing is abundantly taught.

2. Does a knowledge of these things affect you practically, as it should? Does this knowledge lead to that separation from and deadness to the world that God's word requires? Does it produce that entire consecration of heart and live to God and his precious service that is enjoined? I think I have reason to fear too many are lacking that moral culture or fitness requisite in order to share the felicities of the bright world of light and life. O, may we remember that the moral fitness must be acquired here, and before the Savior comes. That unholy feet can never tread the streets of the New Jerusalem. Unholy lips will never join in the victorious song,—"Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, tongue and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

While we look at the glories of the world still future, through God's provided medium, the Resurrection, it must appear quite certain that the motives and inducements presented are sufficient to urge the truly believing one to a consistent and holy life. Yes, I see one vast chain of inducements of more than golden worth. Praise, honor and glory, immortality. Thence a life onward, while unending ages roll. Unmixed delight, joy and pleasure amid the unveiled glories of God's face. No tempting devil, no alluring world, no unrighteous ones, but the pure and the faithful of all ages shall be there.

INSPIRATION.

"For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.—Matt. 10 : 20.

Bro. Grant:—I have received a great number of encouraging letters within three months past. These letters have come from as many as ten different states, all breathing the same spirit of good cheer. One sister writes, "I pray the Lord to bless you and inspire every word you write." Who will say amen to this? Will you?

There are many at the present time who profess to be inspired by "controlling spirits," "departed friends," etc., but for one let me be inspired by the Holy Spirit. I do not know what the readers of the Crisis think of my attainments; but I can tell them, as I believe I have done before, that I want a thousand fold more of every fruit of the Spirit. This is my daily, constant prayer. And I hope that at least as many as "two or three" will unite with me in this request, that we may claim the promised blessing. And you, brethren and sisters, readers of the Crisis, shall have the benefit, when "every word" I write is then inspired.

A Good Wife.—A translation of a Welsh Triad:—

She is modest, void of deceit, and obedient.

Pure of conscience, gracious of tongue, and true to her husband.

Her heart not proud, her manners affable, and her bosom full of compassion for the poor.

Laboring to be tidy, skillful of hand, and fond of praying to God.

Her conversation amiable, her dress decent, and her house orderly.

Quick of hand, quick of eye, and quick of understanding.

Her person shapely, her manners agreeable, and her heart innocent.

Her face benignant, her head intelligent and provident.

Neighborly, gentle, and of a liberal way of thinking.

Able in directing, providing what is wanting, and a good mother to her children.

Loving her husband, loving peace, and loving God.

Happy the man possessing such a wife.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

We're going home, where sorrows cease,
Where all is joy and love and peace.
At God's right hand forevermore,
We hope to dwell when storms are o'er.
This world is full of trouble now,
Before the tempter's shrine we bow;
And thus we live from day to day,
And from our Savior turn away.
O, when will come that blessed day,
Of which we've heard our Savior say,
When pain and death will all be o'er,
And we be saved forevermore?
O come, dear Savior, quickly come,
And bring thy ransomed children home,
Where all the faithful then will live
The life that thou didst die to give.
But while we think of joys to come,
And try the christian race to run,
We long to have our dearest friends
Receive the light that Jesus sends.
O come, dear friends, come, come away,
This world will lead you far astray,
And when the Savior calls for you,
In that last hour what can you do?
The day of grace will then be o'er,
The sinner lost forevermore;
O hasten, then, with all your might,
Before the Spirit takes its flight;
How dreadful then to hear the cries,
When Jesus comes through parted skies
To slay the wicked with his rod,
And thus fulfill the word of God.
O how you'll wish you'd given heed
To all the words our Savior said,
And turned from all your wicked ways
When you were in your youthful days.
The judgment day will soon be here,
Before the Judge you must appear;
A strict account you'll have to give
Of all the ways in which you live.
Now, sinner, come, and don't delay,
Don't put it off another day;
For if you should, and be too late,
Eternal death would be your state.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER FIVE.

"And the stars shall fall from heaven," is the next event in this series of signs spoken of by the Savior.

The following is the record of a scene that occurred on the night of Nov. 13th, 1833, copied from the Connecticut Observer of Nov. 25th, 1833.

"The Falling Stars.—The editor of the Old Countryman makes a very serious matter of the Falling Stars. He says,—'We pronounce the raining fire which we saw last Wednesday morning, an awful type—a sure forerunner—a merciful sign of that great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened.

The time is just at hand, described not only in the New Testament, but in the Old. A more correct picture of a fig-tree casting its leaves when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold. Many things now occurring on the earth tend to convince us that we are in the latter days. This exhibition we deem to be a type of an awful day fast hurrying upon us. This is our sincere opinion, and what we think we are not ashamed to tell. Men may and have called us enthusiastic. We care not if they call us mad, so that we feel they are mistaken. . . . We will go on our way rejoicing. Nor would we go alone.—Hence we warn all to turn to the Lord while yet they may.'"

The following extract from Observations on Meteors, by Prof. Olmstead, taken from a work of S. Bliss, will show the nature and extent of this phenomenon:—

"The nature and extent of the showers of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America to the undefined regions among the British possessions on the north. The exhibition of shooting stars was not only visible, but everywhere presented nearly one and the same appearance. The duration and maximum, or period of greatest display, were characterized by a similar uniformity. In nearly all places the meteors began to attract attention by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the cycle."

"A similar phenomenon was witnessed on the 12th of Nov., 1799, and at the same season of the year in 1830, 1831 and 1832. The meteoric showers were repeated on the morning of Nov. 13th or 14th several years, but on a scale constantly diminishing until 1838, since which period the exhibitions have been too little remarkable to be worthy of particular notice.

"I feel assured that this is no atmospheric or terrestrial phenomenon, but these fiery meteors came to us from the regions of space, and reveal to us the existence of worlds of a nebulous or commentary nature existing in the solar system, and forming part of the solar system. Nor are these conclusions built upon mere hypotheses, but are necessary inferences from certain facts.

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the page of history. This is no longer to be looked upon as a terrestrial, but as a celestial phenomenon; and shooting stars are now to be viewed no more as casual productions of the upper regions of the atmosphere, but as visitants from other worlds, or from the planetary void.

"Subsequent inquiries have led me to the belief that the body was so distant as hardly to exhibit a parallax, but was projected on very nearly the same part of the sky by all observers. This fact at once shows that the source of the meteors was far beyond the atmosphere, and confirms the preceding conclusion that it was wholly independent of the earth."

This is the testimony of Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a man well versed in the history of science, and who has probably devoted more attention to investigations of this character than any other man in this country. If these meteors were not the predicted "falling stars," which were to be distinguished signs of the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, it would be difficult to conceive of any celestial phenomenon which would fill the prophecy.

The objection that these were not real stars is of no weight; for the falling of one such to the earth would be, not a sign of the end, but the end itself. It could not have been a planetary star which guided the wise men by going before them and standing where the child lay. All luminous bodies having the appearance of stars have been thus denominated; hence those meteorical showers have been called stars, and they are the only stars that could fall to form a sign to men of the coming of Christ.

Luke describes our Savior as saying,—"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear," etc. See chap. 21: 26, 27. All of which has come to pass within the remembrance of the present generation.

But it is again argued that the darkening of the sun and moon of 1780, and the falling of the stars of 1833, could not be the fulfillment of the Lord's prophecy, because they were not universal in their manifestation. But when we consider that all the signs which clustered around the first advent of Christ (an event involving the interests of the whole family of mankind, as well as the second), were local, yet of such a nature as to challenge the infidelity of the whole world, the argument disappears. We have no more right to say the sun and moon must be darkened all over the world to make such a sign of the second advent, than we have to say that the star which guided the wise men to the babe of Bethlehem as a sign, must appear all over the world. All must admit there were signs peculiar to that generation. Said the Master to the Scribes and Pharisees of his day, "Can ye not discern the signs of these times?" and yet those signs were local, and seen but by a few comparatively; yet the truth concerning those things was published broadcast through all the land of Judea and round about Jordan. So there are signs of the second advent near, peculiar to the last generation of the world's history, which, to be sure, have been local in their manifestation; but a proclamation of the near coming of Christ, based on those evidences, has gone abroad into all lands.

The shaking of the powers of the heavens is the last sign mentioned in the twenty-ninth verse. This is understood variously by those looking for the Lord. Some look upon it as significant of a convulsed state of the political world, and others as a deranged state of our atmosphere; and still others the literal departure of the heavens. But if it refers to the political heavens, it has had a marked fulfillment; and if it has reference to the atmospheric heavens, that has been known to be in a state of strange fluctuation for years; and it is said that Prof. Silliman once made the remark, that such was the deranged state of the elements in our atmosphere, a few years ago, had it continued but a short time longer it must have resulted in a general conflagration.

Verse 30th,—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." The sign of the Son of man I understand to refer to his visible Majesty, to distinguish him from the false Christs who had come in the desert and in the secret chambers, showing great signs and wonders.

Verse 31st,—"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Here we have illustrated one grand object of Messiah's advent to earth a second time. It is the consummation of the great work of redemption; the gathering together in one body or community all things in heaven and on earth, even in Him. See Eph. 1: 10.

Verses 32, 33,—"Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." "Now learn," i.e., when ye see the before-named precursors, know my day is near, as you may know summer is near when ye see the tender buds appearing upon the fig-tree, and the other trees.

Verse 34th,—"Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all these things shall be fulfilled." This has reference to the generation living on the earth when the sun and moon are darkened and the stars fall from heaven. "They shall not all pass away till they see accomplished the last event predicted, viz., the coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven."

Verse 35,—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Here our Lord asserts the immutability of his counsel. Earth in its present form must pass away. Its physical condition, like an old garment, must undergo a change, but the word of God remains the same. His counsel shall stand though man may devise against it.

The assurance,—"my word shall not pass away"—refers in this connection to all our blessed Redeemer had spoken in reference to the signs and certainty of his coming. Every jot and tittle shall be fulfilled, and at the end of this grand drama Christ will come. Though the human dreams of national glory and flattering prospects of human enterprize, combined with the unbelief of an infidel age, may remonstrate against such an event, yet in its time and order it will come. When the day and hour arrive, no remonstrance of man can stay the chariot wheels of his terrible Majesty.

"When sin hath moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy, shall descend
Triumphant in his chariot paved with love,
Then what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

A. ROSS.

For the World's Crisis.

THE OFFENCE OF THE CROSS;

OR,

PERSECUTION, WHAT IS IT?

"Are there no foes for me to face?
Must I not stem the flood?"

What is persecution? To be scourged in synagogues, brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake?

Is it to be stoned, sawn asunder, slain with the sword, to wander about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented? Is it to be cast into the lion's den, or the fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than is wont? This, doubtless, is persecution for righteousness' sake; but is this all? Is not opposition to God's truth in every form persecution? to vex, afflict, harass with injustice and false accusation? to inflict pain from hatred or malignity? What persecution more to be dreaded than a slanderous tongue, malice prepense, a tongue set on fire of hell—misrepresentation, silent, satanic inuendoes to destroy reputation and usefulness, hinder the cause of truth and salvation? Doubtless the vexatious hindrances of Paul among false prophets and false brethren, the time-servers and popular seekers of his age, their virulent opposition to his reformatory steps, were more aggravating and soul-trying than to suffer shipwreck, be stoned, beaten with rods, or to "receive forty stripes save one."

We may not, at this age of refinement, under our modified laws of civilization, be burned at the stake, led to the scaffold, cast into a lion's den, for preaching the gospel in all its freeness and fullness, but think you persecution has ceased, or the offence of the cross? Is not human nature still human nature? Is not Satan the very same Satan, going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, or transforming himself into an angel of light? Is not the same hatred for truth and holiness now, as when Christ was put to death, John the Baptist beheaded, James slain with the sword, and Peter crucified with his head downwards? And who were the most virulent persecutors in time of the holy prophets and apostles, who? The Gentiles, the heathen, men of the world? Nay, but a corrupt, ungodly church, a wicked Sanhedrim—those having a name to live and were dead, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof,—whom Christ denounced as false prophets, scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outward, but within were full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanliness. "Fill ye up, then," says Christ, "the measure of your fathers; ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (See Matthew, chapter 23, the whole of it, a true and graphic picture of the present degeneracy.)

Has the offence of the cross ceased? Let any man of God stand boldly against the perpetual backslidings, the fashions, and follies, the extravagant wickedness in costume, the idolatry in dress, in church building, and etiquette, the popery of the age, as Paul did, "What now? mountains in labor? fire and sword?" "Great is Diana of the Ephesians?" something perhaps more piercing than steel, the drawn sword or bayonet. "The tongue that deviseth mischiefs like a sharp razor, working deceitfully." "My soul," says the Psalmist, "is among lions, and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword." This little unruly member, whom no man can tame, more terrible to endure than a drawn dagger, is the chief instrument of persecution of a corrupt, idolatrous church of the present day.

Let any man in the sacred desk or editorial chair come out boldly, unflinchingly against the manufacture, traffic and use of strong drink and tobacco, two great engines of hell, that spread everywhere desolation and damnation, making our world an Aceldama, a field of blood; lay the ax at the root of these Upas trees, cry aloud against the distiller, the buyer, seller and consumer of this distilled damnation, and the corrupting, filthy, poisonous, body and soul destroying Indian weed, any rising up of old Adam, any bubblings of the pit?

So, also, in regard to a corrupt press, issuing its daily millions, spreading firebrands, arrows and death!

How is it that some ministers can preach year out and year in, and experience no persecution? Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? or is it because they keep back part of the price; shun to declare the whole counsel of God? The world's definition of a good man is,—"He has no enemies." But what saith the Savior?—"Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did our fathers to the false prophets;" not the true prophets. Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? Would to God it were so; but let a man step forward into the front ranks of reform, attack all the popular sins of the present day, wage an uncompromising warfare against all the powers of darkness, slavery, novel reading, rum selling, rum drinking, tobacco smoking, chewing, making and selling, all sinful indulgence in apparel, in dress, jewelry, and in all God-forbidden things, of whatever kind and name, and he will find a host to rise up against him, and persecution will rage. We may not be called to suffer martyrdom as did many of the apostles and prophets, but our names will be cast out as evil. We shall find the words of our Savior true, that a man's foes shall be they of his own household. The prophets and apostles, and our Savior, opposed all sin, and they all suffered persecution—many of them unto death. The same cause will produce the same effect; if any one doubts this, let him try it.

We perceive that those who tell us persecution has ceased, that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to stand at the cannon's mouth, place themselves in the battle's front, beard the lion in his den, wage open warfare with the combined powers of earth and hell. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, are at ease in Zion, oppose agitation, cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, bow the knee to a pro-slavery, time-serving age, loving the praise of men more than the praise of God.

"Where is thy cross? the daily care,
The daily toil, the daily strife—
The warfare they are called to bear
With foes who aim at more than life."

What says Christ? "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may) suffer persecution." "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword." "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

B. C. 482. With B. C. 482 ends both the twenty-nine years Herodotus gives Cyrus, and the seven which Xenophon allows from "the acquisition of his empire."

B. C. 479. With B. C. 479 ends the seventh year of Cambyses, who was followed by Darius the son of Hystaspes, according to Herodotus. This is involved in some difficulty. In the reply to Bro. Stevenson, we observed that the Parian Chronicle, with Dr. Hales' revision, gave B. C. 495 for the slaughter of Smerdis Magus, and the accession of Darius, son of Hystaspes, which appears to be correct; for the following reasons:

1. According to Xenophon, the "expedition to Egypt is said to have taken place" in the days of Cyrus, who "brought Egypt into subjection." Xen., b. 8, c. 7, s. 20.

2. Cyrus could not properly have said that "the Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth," until after he had subdued Egypt.

3. Megasthenes makes no allowance for the reign of Cambyses, as an independent king of Persia, but says that "Cyrus and Darius reigned thirty-six years; because, before the monarchy was reunited, they reigned six years in Persia, afterwards other six years, when the Persian kingdom being resigned to Cambyses' [his] son, they made war for six years against Tongris, queen of the Scythians. In the sixth year, when they were provoked by the Babylonians, and when Belshazzar was killed, they transferred the united monarchy to the Persians." Times of Daniel, p. 237.

4. The Parian Chronicle gives B. C. 495 for the beginning, and B. C. 460 for the end of the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes; which gives him just thirty-five years; and according to Ctesias, "Darius reigned thirty-five years,"—that is, the one that reigned after Egypt was subdued."—Times of Daniel, p. 253.

5. Rosellini mentions an inscription among those found on the Egyptian monuments, "recording the victory of the Persians . . . in the 27th year of a king, who, Rosellini does not doubt, was a Persian monarch, whose identity he cannot determine, but whose name he deciphers to be Tnebusc" (Times of Daniel, p. 228), which may be an Egyptian perversion of Hystaspes, for the date given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have mentioned, was B. C. 495, which answers to the twenty-seventh year of Darius Hystaspes.

I suppose the truth of the matter may have been about as follows: In B. C. 495, the Magus was slain, and from that time Darius the son of Hystaspes may have received the government over some province in Persia; but did not ascend the throne, as king, until the death of his uncle Artaxerxes, in B. C. 478; for the king found on the throne, between the reign of Cyrus and the second Darius, was not Cambyses, but "Artaxerxes, king of Persia."—Ezra 4: 7.

I suppose that Darius the son of Hystaspes was one of those "three presidents" (Dan. 6: 2), which were appointed "over the whole kingdom." His father being an old man, sixty-two years of age (Dan. 5: 31), he may have given the business affairs of the kingdom into the hands of his son; for when Cyrus issued his decree for the Jews to return home, this "Darius sent with them a thousand horsemen." "He sent away also all the vessels from Babylon, that Cyrus had set apart, and all that Cyrus had given in commandment; the same charged he also to be done and sent unto Jerusalem" (Esdras 4: 57 and 5: 2); and from the words of Esdras to Darius, saying, "Remember thy vow which thou hast vowed to build Jerusalem, in the day when thou comest to thy kingdom" (4: 43), two points are made clear. 1. That he was not at that time king. 2. That he was aware that he would soon come in possession of the kingdom, and this was before the death of Cyrus, for he builded Jerusalem. Isa. 45: 13.

B. C. 478. With B. C. 478 began the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes. To distinguish him from his father, Darius Hystaspes, he is called Darius Longimanus, "which the Persian historians explain, not of the length of his arm, but of the extent of his sway" (Times of Daniel, p. 259), for his dominion was "from India unto Ethiopia, of an hundred twenty and seven provinces." 1 Esdras 3: 2. On the monument erected by himself he tells us who he was, which is not Darius Hystaspes, but says, "I am Darius, the son of Hystaspes." He calls himself "the great king, the king of kings"; hence not one of the subordinate kings. The time of his reign we have, in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," fixed by the seventy years fasting and mourning, and we will have fixed it again by the document from Philo. He says there were "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation eleven years"; and he makes "the eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity the seventieth from the desolation"; hence commences the captivity with the same epoch that we have.

These "eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity and the seventy from the desolation," just reach the second year of Darius, at which time they commenced the second time to build the temple. According to the chronicle of the Seventy, "Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus (B. C. 486), went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that in the next year, when he had become victorious, . . . he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple," in B. C. 485, the year of Jubilee.

"In the first year of his (Darius') reign, Joshua, the high priest, returned to Jerusalem, and by the commandment of Haggai and Zechariah put forth his hand to build the temple. Joshua, therefore, filled the office of high priest in the first instance for thirty-six years (that is, during the reign of Darius), until the twelfth year of Assuerus the elder, and Joiakim his son in his absence eight years." So, from the death of Assuerus, or the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, to the first of Darius the son of Hystaspes, is eight years. But the work "ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius" (Ezra 4: 24); therefore, the eight years must reach near the end of the first year of Darius; so in our table of chronology, the eighth year synchronizes with the first of Darius. That the Darius, in whose sixth year the temple was completed, was called Longimanus, it is said, "when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God"; and by reference to 1 Esdras 4: 43, we find that the king in whose sixth year the temple was completed was the one that "vowed to build Jerusalem." From the monument erected by Darius, it is clear that he, "Darius the son of Hystaspes," was the king that slew "Gometus the Magian," "dispossessed him of the empire," and thus followed him as the next king; and by reference to the "Oriental Chronicle," we find that the king that followed the "Mage" reigned twenty years, though he is there called Assuerus. Times of Daniel, p. 242. The mistake as to his name may have occurred thus: In an old "fragment, said to be of Megasthenes," it stands thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus, son of Darius, twenty years." As "the elder Artaxerxes" was not son of Darius, there is evidently something wrong; but the difficulty will vanish if we add the word and, and read it thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus," and "son of Darius, twenty years."—Times of Daniel, p. 83. This removes the difficulty, for both "the elder Artaxerxes" and "Darius the son of Hystaspes" did reign about twenty years. But Herodotus not distinguishing between the father and son, gives him the thirty-six years during which his father "Darius Hystaspes reigned."

Herodotus admits that the Darius that reigned thirty-six years "was the first person who" "refined gold to the utmost perfection," and "coined money" (Herod. 4: 166), which "Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us . . . were coined not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius, by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians who coined gold money." Times of Daniel, p. 180. From this, we also learn that the father of Xerxes was not the first Darius. According to Herodotus, the Magus reigned seven months; and in allusion, as I suppose, to the same circumstance, in the document of Philo, it is said, "In the seventh month, when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God, and appointed king. In the first year of his reign, Joshua the high priest returned to Jerusalem."

B. C. 477. "In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king," "they came and did work in the house of the Lord."—Hagai 1: 14, 15. This was the ninth year from the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, "on account of" whose death "the building was impeded," which is in exact harmony with Josephus, who says "these works were hindered from going on till the second year of the reign of Darius, for nine years." Ant. b. 11, c. 2, s. 2. Also in harmony with the document of Philo, which gives the twelfth year of Assuerus, that is, the time of the death of "Darius Hystaspes," for the time at which Joshua left, who being about eight years, returned in the first of Darius; hence the second year in which they commenced to build the temple was the ninth from the time at which "the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes."

For the World's Crisis.

THE FIFTH KINGDOM.

Very much has been said, in some quarters, as to a fifth, earthly, universal monarchy,—a new form of "the kingdom of men." Russia has been assigned to this pre-eminent position. "The forms of the kingdom are five (the five is italicised, and they are named in the same compound sentence), Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, and Russia." See Anatolio, p. 2, s. 2.

This assertion is only an assumption, however set forth. It ignores the most positive terms of all propbecy; the plainest statements of all history; and the best arrangements of all chronology to the contrary. This is demonstrated thus:

I. The God-giver. The absolutely accurate number of "the forms of the kingdom of men" is "four." Zech. 1: 18–22. The "four horns" are "the Gentiles" that "have scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem." Here is no obscurity—no possible room for evasion. The number is "four." Daniel 2d, 7th, 8th, all sustain this, and the reference to it by Jeremiah and Ezekiel confirm it.

II. The prophet Ezekiel himself knocks the theory of "five" earthly kingdoms, like the barley cake of Gideon, that struck "the tent of Midian till it laid along." Ezek. 38: 17.

"The Gog power" (for which a place was framed in the theory of "five" earthly empires), is that spoken of by God's servants of "old time," as in Gen. 10: 2; Isa. 10; and Isa. 11, etc. Assyria and Babylon then were that power.

The Russian power, which is imagined to be the Gog power, is not of "old time," but modern, and about twice as old as the United States. Its capital did not begin to be built till about twenty-five hundred years after the prophecy (Ezek. 38) was given. Thus the theory built on Ezek. 38: 1–3, is destroyed by the prophet himself at verse 17th of the same chapter.

This theory, that is too blind to see so far as verse 17th, cannot have been framed by "Wisdom," nor can it have employed any one of its "seven pillars."

III. "The desolation" of Jerusalem (Dan. 9: 26–27), was Rome; and of this all ages since have had occular demonstration in the inscription of the vessels of the temple service, on the arch of Titus, in the city of Rome. Now "that which is determined shall be poured on the desolation,"—that is, on Rome, "the fourth." Dan. 7. This is fatal to the imaginary fifth earthly empire.

Thus of every aspect in which this theory is contemplated in the light of God's truth. The prophet Jeremiah has "the north," etc., in Asia over twenty times. Ezekiel locates there the merchants of Tyrus (Ezek. 27, Dan. 11); designates Syria and Egypt as "the king of the north and the king of the south"; and so Mitchell's Ancient Geography shows it. The Mohammedans now occupy just those territories, and the eastern (the third) part of the Roman world, and the Babylon of "old time," to be disposed of in its impending judgment. Amen.

Again, the theory of a fifth earthly empire takes another and more subtle phase, but subject to the fatal objection that God's only number is always "four," as applied to the forms of "the kingdom of men."

The mis-called Spiritualists are (it has been often suggested) about to organize and thus rule the world. But this cannot be, but by the formation of a new earthly empire. A new organization, with new titles of dominion, new principles and new projects, would involve a general revolution in the world's government. But as certainly as God's "word is truth," so certainly this new and fifth earthly kingdom cannot obtain.

Rome, "the eternal," "the infallible," allows no successor. Nor does the judgment of God written against Rome allow any, save the divine. We pray in faith for the only fifth kingdom when we pray, "Thy kingdom come." Amen.

YE ARE MY WITNESSES.

"The judgment of the great day."—JUDE 6.

"When every one of us shall give an account of himself to God." Rom. 14: 12. "When God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts, by Jesus Christ, according to the gospel." Rom. 2: 16. "When the wrath of God shall be revealed from heaven." Rom. 1: 18; 2: 5. The period when eternal fates shall be in righteousness administered. The day of bright glory to God's little ones. The dawn of immortality to the saved. Also the dawn of the consummation of God's purposes concerning the race of men and angels. The ushering in of the fullness of the blessed gospel of Christ. What a day will this be, attended with the most fearful and momentous consequences!

Are we approaching this decisive day, and are we ready, are, perhaps, two of the most important questions that ever have, or ever can interest the mind of intelligent and responsible man. There certainly can be no question of paramount importance to these in all the wide range of man's inquiry and thought. It may, however, be a question which of these two is first in importance.

But if we properly consider the nature of the first, and its practical bearing upon the second, we shall, I think, come to the conclusion that they are of almost equal magnitude and importance, although many honest minds seem to think that the time of the final consummation is a question of little or no concern to us. But must it not be to the class or generation living at that time? See this subject illustrated by the Savior in Matthew 24th chapter, commencing at the 42nd verse. Also Matt. 25: 10. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut."

It appears quite evident to me by the revealed duty and obligations of the church at this particular point of time, that these two questions are so blended as also to make them of equal importance. See in reference to the duty of the church at this point, as revealed in Luke 21: 28. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh." Look up, your expectation of speedy redemption brightens. Your duty is to look up. This duty does not appear to arise till now. But why look up now more than at any other time in the past? For the obvious reason, that day is approaching. But the relation of those then living to that day is somewhat changed by the fulfillment of the Savior's prediction, as is illustrated by him in chap. 21: 31. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." An additional obligation,—"Know ye," etc. Most certainly a knowledge of the Savior's near approach, and a readiness for the event, is implied in the Master's instruction; a knowledge sufficiently definite for practical purposes. The church is brought to the point of continued expectation. Thus we must see that the question of the time of the judgment, and a readiness or preparation for that event, are questions that will equally agitate and interest the Christian world at the time of its near approach.

Now let me, dearly beloved flock of God, inquire.

1. Do you most certainly, as you profess, understand that we are surely near the period already referred to? Have you learned these truths from God's unerring word? Have you made it a part of your intellectual being? Have you traced out God's pencilling upon the chart of prophetic declaration? The importance of so doing is abundantly taught.

2. Does a knowledge of these things affect you practically, as it should? Does this knowledge lead to that separation from and deadness to the world that God's word requires? Does it produce that entire consecration of heart and live to God and his precious service that is enjoined? I think I have reason to fear too many are lacking that moral culture or fitness requisite in order to share the felicities of the bright world of light and life. O, may we remember that the moral fitness must be acquired here, and before the Savior comes. That unholy feet can never tread the streets of the New Jerusalem. Unholy lips will never join in the victorious song,—"Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, tongue and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

While we look at the glories of the world still future, through God's provided medium, the Resurrection, it must appear quite certain that the motives and inducements presented are sufficient to urge the truly believing one to a consistent and holy life. Yes, I see one vast chain of inducements of more than golden worth. Praise, honor and glory, immortality. Thence a life onward, while unending ages roll. Unmixed delight, joy and pleasure amid the unveiled glories of God's face. No tempting devil, no alluring world, no unrighteous ones, but the pure and the faithful of all ages shall be there.

INSPIRATION.

"For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.—MATT. 10: 20.

BRO. GRANT:—I have received a great number of encouraging letters within three months past. These letters have come from as many as ten different states, all breathing the same spirit of good cheer. One sister writes, "I pray the Lord to bless you and inspire every word you write." Who will say amen to this? Will you?

There are many at the present time who profess to be inspired by "controlling spirits," "departed friends," etc., but for one let me be inspired by the Holy Spirit. I do not know what the readers of the Crisis think of my attainments; but I can tell them, as I believe I have done before, that I want a thousand fold more of every fruit of the Spirit. This is my daily, constant prayer. And I hope that at least as many as "two or three" will unite with me in this request, that we may claim the promised blessing. And you, brethren and sisters, readers of the Crisis, shall have the benefit, when "every word" I write is thus inspired. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

A GOOD WIFE.—A translation of a Welsh Triad:—

She is modest, void of deceit, and obedient.

Pure of conscience, gracious of tongue, and true to her husband.

Her heart not proud, her manners affable, and her bosom full of compassion for the poor.

Laboring to be tidy, skillful of hand, and fond of praying to God.

Her conversation amiable, her dress decent, and her house orderly.

Quick of hand, quick of eye, and quick of understanding.

Her person shapely, her manners agreeable, and her heart innocent.

Her face benignant, her head intelligent and provident.

Neighborly, gentle, and of a liberal way of thinking.

Able in directing, providing what is wanting, and a good mother to her children.

Loving her husband, loving peace, and loving God.

Happy the man possessing such a wife.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

We're going home, where sorrows cease,
Where all is joy and love and peace.
At God's right hand forevermore,
We hope to dwell when storms are o'er.
This world is full of trouble now,
Before the tempter's shrine we bow;
And thus we live from day to day,
And from our Savior turn away.
O, when will come that blessed day,
Of which we've heard our Savior say,
When pain and death will all be o'er,
And we be saved forevermore?
O come, dear Savior, quickly come,
And bring thy ransomed children home,
Where all the faithful then will live
The life that thou didst die to give.
But while we think of joys to come,
And try the christian race to run,
We long to have our dearest friends
Receive the light that Jesus sends.
O come, dear friends, come, come away,
This world will lead you far astray,
And when the Savior calls for you,
In that last hour what can you do?
The day of grace will then be o'er,
The sinner lost forevermore;
O hasten, then, with all your might,
Before the Spirit takes its flight;
How dreadful then to hear the cries,
When Jesus comes through parted skies
To slay the wicked with his rod,
And thus fulfill the word of God.
O how you'll wish you'd given heed
To all the words our Savior said,
And turned from all your wicked ways
When you were in your youthful days.
The judgment day will soon be here,
Before the Judge you must appear;
A strict account you'll have to give
Of all the ways in which you live.
Now, sinner, come, and don't delay,
Don't put it off another day;
For if you should, and be too late,
Eternal death would be your state.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER FIVE.

"And the stars shall fall from heaven," is the next event in this series of signs spoken of by the Savior.

The following is the record of a scene that occurred on the night of Nov. 13th, 1833, copied from the Connecticut Observer of Nov. 25th, 1833.

"The Falling Stars.—The editor of the Old Countryman makes a very serious matter of the Falling Stars. He says,—'We pronounce the raining fire which we saw last Wednesday morning, an awful type—a sure forerunner—a merciful sign of that great and dreadful day which the inhabitants of the earth will witness when the sixth seal shall be opened.

The time is just at hand, described not only in the New Testament, but in the Old. A more correct picture of a fig-tree casting its leaves when blown by a mighty wind, it is not possible to behold. Many things now occurring on the earth tend to convince us that we are in the latter days. This exhibition we deem to be a type of an awful day fast hurrying upon us. This is our sincere opinion, and what we think we are not ashamed to tell. Men may and have called us enthusiastic. We care not if they call us mad, so that we feel they are mistaken. . . . We will go on our way rejoicing. Nor would we go alone.—Hence we warn all to turn to the Lord while yet they may.'"

The following extract from Observations on Meteors, by Prof. Olmstead, taken from a work of S. Bliss, will show the nature and extent of this phenomenon:—

"The nature and extent of the showers of 1833 was such as to cover no inconsiderable portion of the earth's surface, from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west; and from the northern coast of South America to the undefined regions among the British possessions on the north. The exhibition of shooting stars was not only visible, but everywhere presented nearly one and the same appearance. The duration and maximum, or period of greatest display, were characterized by a similar uniformity. In nearly all places the meteors began to attract attention by their unusual frequency as early as eleven o'clock, and increased in numbers and splendor until about four o'clock, from which time they gradually declined, but were visible until lost in the light of day. The meteors did not fly at random over all parts of the sky, but appeared to emanate from a point in the constellation Leo, near a star called Gamma Leonis, in the bend of the cycle."

"A similar phenomenon was witnessed on the 12th of Nov., 1799, and at the same season of the year in 1830, 1831 and 1832. The meteoric showers were repeated on the morning of Nov. 13th or 14th several years, but on a scale constantly diminishing until 1838, since which period the exhibitions have been too little remarkable to be worthy of particular notice.

"I feel assured that this is no atmospheric or terrestrial phenomenon, but these fiery meteors came to us from the regions of space, and reveal to us the existence of worlds of a nebulous or commentary nature existing in the solar system, and forming part of the solar system. Nor are these conclusions built upon mere hypotheses, but are necessary inferences from certain facts.

"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the page of history. This is no longer to be looked upon as a terrestrial, but as a celestial phenomenon; and shooting stars are now to be viewed no more as casual productions of the upper regions of the atmosphere, but as visitants from other worlds, or from the planetary void.

"Subsequent inquiries have led me to the belief that the body was so distant as hardly to exhibit a parallax, but was projected on very nearly the same part of the sky by all observers. This fact at once shows that the source of the meteors was far beyond the atmosphere, and confirms the preceding conclusion that it was wholly independent of the earth."

This is the testimony of Prof. Olmstead, of Yale College, a man well versed in the history of science, and who has probably devoted more attention to investigations of this character than any other man in this country. If these meteors were not the predicted "falling stars," which were to be distinguished signs of the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, it would be difficult to conceive of any celestial phenomenon which would fill the prophecy.

The objection that these were not real stars is of no weight; for the falling of one such to the earth would be, not a sign of the end, but the end itself. It could not have been a planetary star which guided the wise men by going before them and standing where the child lay. All luminous bodies having the appearance of stars have been thus denominated; hence those meteorical showers have been called stars, and they are the only stars that could fall to form a sign to men of the coming of Christ.

Luke describes our Savior as saying,—"There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear," etc. See chap. 21: 26, 27. All of which has come to pass within the remembrance of the present generation.

But it is again argued that the darkening of the sun and moon of 1780, and the falling of the stars of 1833, could not be the fulfillment of the Lord's prophecy, because they were not universal in their manifestation. But when we consider that all the signs which clustered around the first advent of Christ (an event involving the interests of the whole family of mankind, as well as the second), were local, yet of such a nature as to challenge the infidelity of the whole world, the argument disappears. We have no more right to say the sun and moon must be darkened all over the world to make such a sign of the second advent, than we have to say that the star which guided the wise men to the babe of Bethlehem as a sign, must appear all over the world. All must admit there were signs peculiar to that generation. Said the Master to the Scribes and Pharisees of his day, "Can ye not discern the signs of these times?" and yet those signs were local, and seen but by a few comparatively; yet the truth concerning those things was published broadcast through all the land of Judea and round about Jordan. So there are signs of the second advent near, peculiar to the last generation of the world's history, which, to be sure, have been local in their manifestation; but a proclamation of the near coming of Christ, based on those evidences, has gone abroad into all lands.

The shaking of the powers of the heavens is the last sign mentioned in the twenty-ninth verse. This is understood variously by those looking for the Lord. Some look upon it as significant of a convulsed state of the political world, and others as a deranged state of our atmosphere; and still others the literal departure of the heavens. But if it refers to the political heavens, it has had a marked fulfillment; and if it has reference to the atmospheric heavens, that has been known to be in a state of strange fluctuation for years; and it is said that Prof. Silliman once made the remark, that such was the deranged state of the elements in our atmosphere, a few years ago, had it continued but a short time longer it must have resulted in a general conflagration.

Verse 30th,—"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." The sign of the Son of man I understand to refer to his visible Majesty, to distinguish him from the false Christs who had come in the desert and in the secret chambers, showing great signs and wonders.

Verse 31st,—"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Here we have illustrated one grand object of Messiah's advent to earth a second time. It is the consummation of the great work of redemption; the gathering together in one body or community all things in heaven and on earth, even in Him. See Eph. 1: 10.

Verses 32, 33,—"Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." "Now learn," i.e., when ye see the before-named precursors, know my day is near, as you may know summer is near when ye see the tender buds appearing upon the fig-tree, and the other trees.

Verse 34th,—"Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all these things shall be fulfilled." This has reference to the generation living on the earth when the sun and moon are darkened and the stars fall from heaven. "They shall not all pass away till they are accomplished;" the last event we mentioned, viz., "the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven."

Verse 35,—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Here our Lord asserts the immutability of his counsel. Earth in its present form must pass away. Its physical condition, like an old garment, must undergo a change, but the word of God remains the same. His counsel shall stand though man may devise against it.

The assurance,—"my word shall not pass away"—refers in this connection to all our blessed Redeemer had spoken in reference to the signs and certainty of his coming. Every jot and tittle shall be fulfilled, and at the end of this grand drama Christ will come. Though the human dreams of national glory and flattering prospects of human enterprize, combined with the unbelief of an infidel age, may remonstrate against such an event, yet in its time and order it will come. When the day and hour arrive, no remonstrance of man can stay the chariot wheels of his terrible Majesty.

"When sin hath moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy, shall descend
Triumphant in his chariot paved with love,
Then what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

THE OFFENCE OF THE CROSS;

OR,

PERSECUTION, WHAT IS IT?

"Are there no foes for me to face?
Must I not stem the flood?"

What is persecution? To be scourged in synagogues, brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake?

Is it to be stoned, sawn asunder, slain with the sword, to wander about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented? Is it to be cast into the lion's den, or the fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than is wont? This, doubtless, is persecution for righteousness' sake; but is this all? Is not opposition to God's truth in every form persecution? to vex, afflict, harass with injustice and false accusation? to inflict pain from hatred or malignity? What persecution more to be dreaded than a slanderous tongue, malice prepense, a tongue set on fire of hell—misrepresentation, silent, satanic inuendoes to destroy reputation and usefulness, hinder the cause of truth and salvation? Doubtless the vexatious hindrances of Paul among false prophets and false brethren, the time-servers and popular seekers of his age, their virulent opposition to his reformatory steps, were more aggravating and soul-trying than to suffer shipwreck, be stoned, beaten with rods, or to "receive forty stripes save one."

We may not, at this age of refinement, under our modified laws of civilization, be burned at the stake, led to the scaffold, cast into a lion's den, for preaching the gospel in all its freeness and fullness, but think you persecution has ceased, or the offence of the cross? Is not human nature still human nature? Is not Satan the very same Satan, going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, or transforming himself into an angel of light? Is not the same hatred for truth and holiness now, as when Christ was put to death, John the Baptist beheaded, James slain with the sword, and Peter crucified with his head downwards? And who were the most virulent persecutors in time of the holy prophets and apostles, who? The Gentiles, the heathen, men of the world? Nay, but a corrupt, ungodly church, a wicked Sanhedrim—those having a name to live and were dead, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof,—whom Christ denounced as false prophets, scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful outward, but within were full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanliness. "Fill ye up, then," says Christ, "the measure of your fathers; ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (See Matthew, chapter 23, the whole of it, a true and graphic picture of the present degeneracy.)

Has the offence of the cross ceased? Let any man of God stand boldly against the perpetual backslidings, the fashions, and follies, the extravagant wickedness in costume, the idolatry in dress, in church building, and etiquette, the popery of the age, as Paul did, "What now? mountains in labor? fire and sword?" "Great is Diana of the Ephesians?" something perhaps more piercing than steel, the drawn sword or bayonet. "The tongue that deviseth mischiefs like a sharp razor, working deceitfully." "My soul," says the Psalmist, "is among lions, and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword." This little unruly member, whom no man can tame, more terrible to endure than a drawn dagger, is the chief instrument of persecution of a corrupt, idolatrous church of the present day.

Let any man in the sacred desk or editorial chair come out boldly, unflinchingly against the manufacture, traffic and use of strong drink and tobacco, two great engines of hell, that spread everywhere desolation and damnation, making our world an Aceldama, a field of blood; lay the ax at the root of these Upas trees, cry aloud against the distiller, the buyer, seller and consumer of this distilled damnation, and the corrupting, filthy, poisonous, body and soul destroying Indian weed, any rising up of old Adam, any bubblings of the pit?

So, also, in regard to a corrupt press, issuing its daily millions, spreading firebrands, arrows and death!

How is it that some ministers can preach year out and year in, and experience no persecution? Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? or is it because they keep back part of the price; shun to declare the whole counsel of God? The world's definition of a good man is,—"He has no enemies." But what saith the Savior? "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did our fathers to the false prophets;" not the true prophets. Is it because there are no sins to rebuke? Would to God it were so; but let a man step forward into the front ranks of reform, attack all the popular sins of the present day, wage an uncompromising warfare against all the powers of darkness, slavery, novel reading, rum selling, rum drinking, tobacco smoking, chewing, making and selling, all sinful indulgence in apparel, in dress, jewelry, and in all God-forbidden things, of whatever kind and name, and he will find a host to rise up against him, and persecution will rage. We may not be called to suffer martyrdom as did many of the apostles and prophets, but our names will be cast out as evil. We shall find the words of our Savior true, that a man's foes shall be they of his own household. The prophets and apostles, and our Savior, opposed all sin, and they all suffered persecution—many of them unto death. The same cause will produce the same effect; if any one doubts this, let him try it.

We perceive that those who tell us persecution has ceased, that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to stand at the cannon's mouth, place themselves in the battle's front, beard the lion in his den, wage open warfare with the combined powers of earth and hell. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, are at ease in Zion, oppose agitation, cry "peace, peace," when there is no peace, bow the knee to a pro-slavery, time-serving age, loving the praise of men more than the praise of God.

"Where is thy cross? the daily care,
The daily toil, the daily strife—
The warfare they are called to bear
With foes who aim at more than life."

What says Christ? "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may) suffer persecution." "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword." "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

B. C. 482. With B. C. 482 ends both the twenty-nine years Herodotus gives Cyrus, and the seven which Xenophon allows from "the acquisition of his empire."

B. C. 479. With B. C. 479 ends the seventh year of Cambyses, who was followed by Darius the son of Hystaspes, according to Herodotus. This is involved in some difficulty. In the reply to Bro. Stevenson, we observed that the Parian Chronicle, with Dr. Hales' revision, gave B. C. 495 for the slaughter of Smerdis Magus, and the accession of Darius, son of Hystaspes, which appears to be correct; for the following reasons:

1. According to Xenophon, the "expedition to Egypt is said to have taken place" in the days of Cyrus, who "brought Egypt into subjection." Xen., b. 8, c. 7, s. 20.

2. Cyrus could not properly have said that "the Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth," until after he had subdued Egypt.

3. Megasthenes makes no allowance for the reign of Cambyses, as an independent king of Persia, but says that "Cyrus and Darius reigned thirty-six years; because, before the monarchy was reunited, they reigned six years in Persia, afterwards other six years, when the Persian kingdom being resigned to Cambyses' [his] son, they made war for six years against Tongris, queen of the Scythians. In the sixth year, when they were provoked by the Babylonians, and when Belshazzar was killed, they transferred the united monarchy to the Persians." Times of Daniel, p. 237.

4. The Parian Chronicle gives B. C. 495 for the beginning, and B. C. 460 for the end of the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes; which gives him just thirty-five years; and according to Ctesias, "Darius reigned thirty-five years,"—that is, the one that reigned after Egypt was subdued."—Times of Daniel, p. 253

5. Rosellini mentions an inscription among those found on the Egyptian monuments, "recording the victory of the Persians . . . in the 27th year of a king, who, Rosellini does not doubt, was a Persian monarch, whose identity he cannot determine, but whose name he deciphers to be Tnebusc" (Times of Daniel, p. 228), which may be an Egyptian perversion of Hystaspes, for the date given in the Parian Chronicle, as we have mentioned, was B. C. 495, which answers to the twenty-seventh year of Darius Hystaspes.

I suppose the truth of the matter may have been about as follows: In B. C. 495, the Magus was slain, and from that time Darius the son of Hystaspes may have received the government over some province in Persia; but did not ascend the throne, as king, until the death of his uncle Artaxerxes, in B. C. 478; for the king found on the throne, between the reign of Cyrus and the second Darius, was not Cambyses, but "Artaxerxes, king of Persia."—Ezra 4: 7.

I suppose that Darius the son of Hystaspes was one of those "three presidents" (Dan. 6: 2), which were appointed "over the whole kingdom." His father being an old man, sixty-two years of age (Dan. 5: 31), he may have given the business affairs of the kingdom into the hands of his son; for when Cyrus issued his decree for the Jews to return home, this "Darius sent with them a thousand horsemen." "He sent away also all the vessels from Babylon, that Cyrus had set apart, and all that Cyrus had given in commandment; the same charged he also to be done and sent unto Jerusalem" (Esdras 4: 57 and 5: 2); and from the words of Esdras to Darius, saying, "Remember thy vow which thou hast vowed to build Jerusalem, in the day when thou comest to thy kingdom" (4: 43), two points are made clear. 1. That he was not at that time king. 2. That he was aware that he would soon come in possession of the kingdom, and this was before the death of Cyrus, for he builded Jerusalem. Isa. 45: 13.

B. C. 478. With B. C. 478 began the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes. To distinguish him from his father, Darius Hystaspes, he is called Darius Longimanus, "which the Persian historians explain, not of the length of his arm, but of the extent of his sway" (Times of Daniel, p. 259), for his dominion was "from India unto Ethiopia, of an hundred twenty and seven provinces." 1 Esdras 3: 2. On the monument erected by himself he tells us who he was, which is not Darius Hystaspes, but says, "I am Darius, the son of Hystaspes." He calls himself "the great king, the king of kings"; hence not one of the subordinate kings. The time of his reign we have, in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," fixed by the seventy years fasting and mourning, and we will have fixed it again by the document from Philo. He says there were "from the captivity of Joiakim to the desolation eleven years"; and he makes "the eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity the seventieth from the desolation"; hence commences the captivity with the same epoch that we have.

These "eighty-one years from the Babylonish Captivity and the seventy from the desolation," just reach the second year of Darius, at which time they commenced the second time to build the temple. According to the chronicle of the Seventy, "Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus (B. C. 486), went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that in the next year, when he had become victorious, . . . he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple," in B. C. 485, the year of Jubilee.

"In the first year of his (Darius') reign, Joshua, the high priest, returned to Jerusalem, and by the commandment of Haggai and Zechariah put forth his hand to build the temple. Joshua, therefore, filled the office of high priest in the first instance for thirty-six years (that is, during the reign of Darius), until the twelfth year of Assuerus the elder, and Joiakim his son in his absence eight years." So, from the death of Assuerus, or the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, to the first of Darius the son of Hystaspes, is eight years. But the work "ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius" (Ezra 4: 24); therefore, the eight years must reach near the end of the first year of Darius; so in our table of chronology, the eighth year synchronizes with the first of Darius. That the Darius, in whose sixth year the temple was completed, was called Longimanus, it is said, "when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God"; and by reference to 1 Esdras 4: 43, we find that the king in whose sixth year the temple was completed was the one that "vowed to build Jerusalem." From the monument erected by Darius, it is clear that he, "Darius the son of Hystaspes," was the king that slew "Gometus the Magian," "dispossessed him of the empire," and thus followed him as the next king; and by reference to the "Oriental Chronicle," we find that the king that followed the "Mage" reigned twenty years, though he is there called Assuerus. Times of Daniel, p. 242. The mistake as to his name may have occurred thus: In an old "fragment, said to be of Megasthenes," it stands thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus, son of Darius, twenty years." As "the elder Artaxerxes" was not son of Darius, there is evidently something wrong; but the difficulty will vanish if we add the word and, and read it thus:—"The elder Artaxerxes Assuerus," and "son of Darius, twenty years."—Times of Daniel, p. 83. This removes the difficulty, for both "the elder Artaxerxes" and "Darius the son of Hystaspes" did reign about twenty years. But Herodotus not distinguishing between the father and son, gives him the thirty-six years during which his father "Darius Hystaspes reigned."

Herodotus admits that the Darius that reigned thirty-six years "was the first person who" "refined gold to the utmost perfection," and "coined money" (Herod. 4: 166), which "Suidas, Harpocration, and the scholiast of Aristophanes, tell us . . . were coined not by the father of Xerxes, but by an earlier Darius, by Darius the First, by the first king of the Medes and Persians who coined gold money." Times of Daniel, p. 180. From this, we also learn that the father of Xerxes was not the first Darius. According to Herodotus, the Magus reigned seven months; and in allusion, as I suppose, to the same circumstance, in the document of Philo, it is said, "In the seventh month, when Darius Longimanus had vowed that he would reverse the decree of his father concerning the building of the temple, he was set free by God, and appointed king. In the first year of his reign, Joshua the high priest returned to Jerusalem."

B. C. 477. "In the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king," "they came and did work in the house of the Lord."—Hagai 1: 14, 15. This was the ninth year from the end of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, "on account of" whose death "the building was impeded," which is in exact harmony with Josephus, who says "these works were hindered from going on till the second year of the reign of Darius, for nine years." Ant. b. 11, c. 2, s. 2. Also in harmony with the document of Philo, which gives the twelfth year of Assuerus, that is, the time of the death of "Darius Hystaspes," for the time at which Joshua left, who being absent eight years, returned in the first of Darius; hence the second year in which they commenced to build the temple was the ninth from the time at which "the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes."

For the World's Crisis.

THE FIFTH KINGDOM.

Very much has been said, in some quarters, as to a fifth, earthly, universal monarchy,—a new form of "the kingdom of men." Russia has been assigned to this pre-eminent position. "The forms of the kingdom are five (the five is italicised, and they are named in the same compound sentence), Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, and Russia." See Anatolia, p. 2, s. 2.

This assertion is only an assumption, however set forth. It ignores the most positive terms of all prophecy; the plainest statements of all history; and the best arrangements of all chronology to the contrary. This is demonstrated thus:

I. The God-giver. The absolutely accurate number of "the forms of the kingdom of men" is "four." Zech. 1: 18–22. The "four horns" are "the Gentiles" that "have scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem." Here is no obscurity—no possible room for evasion. The number is "four." Daniel 2d, 7th, 8th, all sustain this, and the reference to it by Jeremiah and Ezekiel confirm it.

II. The prophet Ezekiel himself knocks the theory of "five" earthly kingdoms, like the barley cake of Gideon, that struck "the tent of Midian till it laid along." Ezek. 38: 17.

"The Gog power" (for which a place was framed in the theory of "five" earthly empires), is that spoken of by God's servants of "old time," as in Gen. 10: 2; Isa. 10; and Isa. 11, etc. Assyria and Babylon then were that power.

The Russian power, which is imagined to be the Gog power, is not of "old time," but modern, and about twice as old as the United States. Its capital did not begin to be built till about twenty-five hundred years after the prophecy (Ezek. 38) was given. Thus the theory built on Ezek. 38: 1–3, is destroyed by the prophet himself at verse 17th of the same chapter.

This theory, that is too blind to see so far as verse 17th, cannot have been framed by "Wisdom," nor can it have employed any one of its "seven pillars."

III. "The desolation" of Jerusalem (Dan. 9: 26–27), was Rome; and of this all ages since have had occular demonstration in the inscription of the vessels of the temple service, on the arch of Titus, in the city of Rome. Now "that which is determined shall be poured on the desolation,"—that is, on Rome, "the fourth." Dan. 7. This is fatal to the imaginary fifth earthly empire.

Thus of every aspect in which this theory is contemplated in the light of God's truth. The prophet Jeremiah has "the north," etc., in Asia over twenty times. Ezekiel locates there the merchants of Tyrus (Ezek. 27, Dan. 11); designates Syria and Egypt as "the king of the north and the king of the south"; and so Mitchell's Ancient Geography shows it. The Mohammedans now occupy just those territories, and the eastern (the third) part of the Roman world, and the Babylon of "old time," to be disposed of in its impending judgment. Amen.

Again, the theory of a fifth earthly empire takes another and more subtle phase, but subject to the fatal objection that God's only number is always "four," as applied to the forms of "the kingdom of men."

The mis-called Spiritualists are (it has been often suggested) about to organize and thus rule the world. But this cannot be, but by the formation of a new earthly empire. A new organization, with new titles of dominion, new principles and new projects, would involve a general revolution in the world's government. But as certainly as God's "word is truth," so certainly this new and fifth earthly kingdom cannot obtain.

Rome, "the eternal," "the infallible," allows no successor. Nor does the judgment of God written against Rome allow any, save the divine. We pray in faith for the only fifth kingdom when we pray, "Thy kingdom come." Amen.

YE ARE MY WITNESSES.

"The judgment of the great day."—Jude 6.

"When every one of us shall give an account of himself to God." Rom. 14: 12. "When God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts, by Jesus Christ, according to the gospel." Rom. 2: 16. "When the wrath of God shall be revealed from heaven." Rom. 1: 18; 2: 5. The period when eternal fates shall be in righteousness administered. The day of bright glory to God's little ones. The dawn of immortality to the saved. Also the dawn of the consummation of God's purposes concerning the race of men and angels. The ushering in of the fullness of the blessed gospel of Christ. What a day will this be, attended with the most fearful and momentous consequences!

Are we approaching this decisive day, and are we ready, are, perhaps, two of the most important questions that ever have, or ever can interest the mind of intelligent and responsible man. There certainly can be no question of paramount importance to these in all the wide range of man's inquiry and thought. It may, however, be a question which of these two is first in importance.

But if we properly consider the nature of the first, and its practical bearing upon the second, we shall, I think, come to the conclusion that they are of almost equal magnitude and importance, although many honest minds seem to think that the time of the final consummation is a question of little or no concern to us. But must it not be to the class or generation living at that time? See this subject illustrated by the Savior in Matthew 24th chapter, commencing at the 42nd verse. Also Matt. 25: 10. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut."

It appears quite evident to me by the revealed duty and obligations of the church at this particular point of time, that these two questions are so blended as also to make them of equal importance. See in reference to the duty of the church at this point, as revealed in Luke 21: 28. "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, for the day of your redemption draweth nigh." Look up, your expectation of speedy redemption brightens. Your duty is to look up. This duty does not appear to arise till now. But why look up now more than at any other time in the past? For the obvious reason, that day is approaching. But the relation of those then living to that day is somewhat changed by the fulfillment of the Savior's prediction, as is illustrated by him in chap. 21: 31. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." An additional obligation,—"Know ye," etc. Most certainly a knowledge of the Savior's near approach, and a readiness for the event, is implied in the Master's instruction; a knowledge sufficiently definite for practical purposes. The church is brought to the point of continued expectation. Thus we must see that the question of the time of the judgment, and a readiness or preparation for that event, are questions that will equally agitate and interest the Christian world at the time of its near approach.

Now let me, dearly beloved flock of God, inquire,

1. Do you most certainly, as you profess, understand that we are surely near the period already referred to? Have you learned these truths from God's unerring word? Have you made it a part of your intellectual being? Have you traced out God's pencilling upon the chart of prophetic declaration? The importance of so doing is abundantly taught.

2. Does a knowledge of these things affect you practically, as it should? Does this knowledge lead to that separation from and deadness to the world that God's word requires? Does it produce that entire consecration of heart and live to God and his precious service that is enjoined? I think I have reason to fear too many are lacking that moral culture or fitness requisite in order to share the felicities of the bright world of light and life. O, may we remember that the moral fitness must be acquired here, and before the Savior comes. That unholy feet can never tread the streets of the New Jerusalem. Unholy lips will never join in the victorious song,—"Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, tongue and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

While we look at the glories of the world still future, through God's provided medium, the Resurrection, it must appear quite certain that the motives and inducements presented are sufficient to urge the truly believing one to a consistent and holy life. Yes, I see one vast chain of inducements of more than golden worth. Praise, honor and glory, immortality. Thence a life onward, while unending ages roll. Unmixed delight, joy and pleasure amid the unveiled glories of God's face. No tempting devil, no alluring world, no unrighteous ones, but the pure and the faithful of all ages shall be there.

INSPIRATION.

"For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.—Matt. 10: 20.

Bro. Grant:—I have received a great number of encouraging letters within three months past. These letters have come from as many as ten different states, all breathing the same spirit of good cheer. One sister writes, "I pray the Lord to bless you and inspire every word you write." Who will say amen to this? Will you?

There are many at the present time who profess to be inspired by "controlling spirits," "departed friends," etc., but for one let me be inspired by the Holy Spirit. I do not know what the readers of the Crisis think of my attainments; but I can tell them, as I believe I have done before, that I want a thousand fold more of every fruit of the Spirit. This is my daily, constant prayer. And I hope that at least as many as "two or three" will unite with me in this request, that we may claim the promised blessing. And you, brethren and sisters, readers of the Crisis, shall have the benefit, when "every word" I write is thus inspired.

A Good Wife.—A translation of a Welsh Triad:—

She is modest, void of deceit, and obedient.

Pure of conscience, gracious of tongue, and true to her husband.

Her heart not proud, her manners affable, and her bosom full of compassion for the poor.

Laboring to be tidy, skillful of hand, and fond of praying to God.

Her conversation amiable, her dress decent, and her house orderly.

Quick of hand, quick of eye, and quick of understanding.

Her person shapely, her manners agreeable, and her heart innocent.

Her face benignant, her head intelligent and provident.

Neighborly, gentle, and of a liberal way of thinking.

Able in directing, providing what is wanting, and a good mother to her children.

Loving her husband, loving peace, and loving God.

Happy the man possessing such a wife.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BRO. GRANT:—I arrived at my pilgrim's home in Compton, C. E., after an absence of about five months, safe and sound, with all the knocks and bruises I received from the enemy, in all the field battles and skirmishes and contests I have had with the devil and his children, on my long tour of three thousand miles. I expect these conflicts will grow thicker and faster, and more of them, until we come to the final contest.

I told my brethren in my last letter some blessed hard times I enjoyed in fighting Apollyon and his sympathizers. I wish to state one or two more circumstances that took place at the last great popular meeting that I attended just before I left Wisconsin. One week before this great feast of tabernacles commenced I worked for Bro. A., for one dollar a day, which I scattered among the poor. I felt bad to find no altar in this family. I found that the brethren were so much engaged in making their Sarghum, they could not get time to attend the meeting only Sundays and a little evenings. When the meeting commenced I went directly to the mill, bought my Graham meal, and did my own cooking, which cost me twenty-five cents a week, for which I received much opposition. One brother, who had his table set with all kinds of dyspepsia food and pastry, asked me with much politeness to dine with him, and give him my mush to take home to his hogs. I thanked him. I eat my mush from the kettle I had made it in, with a wooden knife I had prepared for the purpose, for I had no silver plate, or knife.

At another time I had a hard contest with a preacher on surfeiting. When I told him I thought pork was not made to eat, and that the hog was a diseased, scrofulous animal, I appeared to them like one that mocked. I reproved, rebuked, and exhorted with all long-suffering and doctrine, for I saw there were gold wedges, Babylonish garments, and changeable suits of apparel in the camp, which must be reproved. They said I was one that troubled Israel, that I took too much upon myself, that they were holy, every man of them, that I had made myself ridiculous, etc. I told them I did it on my own expense. I was threatened with being arrested by the president of the Sanhedrim for disturbing their meeting. I bore all patiently; when reviled, reviled not again; when I suffered I threatened not, but committed all to Him who judgeth righteously. My prayer was—

Lord of love, look from above
On all thy saints below;
For in this age 'tis all the rage
To make an outward show.

Lord, reward them according to their works.

THE CAUSE IN HAVERHILL.

Perhaps the readers of the Crisis may be interested to know how the cause of the soon coming One is prospering in Haverhill. Bro. Grant has spoken of the interest manifested when he was here; am happy to be able to write that it still continues, and rather increases than diminishes. Some who have been backward about bearing the cross, are seeing the importance of taking a more open stand on the side of Christ, and new ones are rallying around the blood-stained banner of our Emanuel. Our prayer-meetings are well attended; and our people as a whole are feeling the importance of girding their loins and trimming their lamps, and getting ready to meet the Bridegroom whom we expect so soon.

Bro. C. C. Stephens has been with us since Bro. Grant left, and has endeavored to be faithful in the discharge of duty, both in and out of meeting. This may account for his not complying, as yet, with the request from the brethren of Machiasport, Me., to visit them. The Lord direct us all where and how to labor with acceptance in the great vineyard, till he come and the laborers' work be done.

RUTLAND.

We spent one evening, Jan. 11th, at Rutland, Vt. Here we met Brn. H. F. Carpenter and M. Batchelor, both of whom reside at R.; but Bro. C. thinks of moving to Danielsonville, Ct., in the spring. Through his late efforts, when in D., the church there has decided to build a meeting-house. We are glad to hear of the new life manifested by that church, for since the death of some of their prominent members they have had to struggle hard against adverse circumstances, which would have completely overwhelmed them if they had not been founded upon the Rock of Ages.

If Bro. Carpenter must leave Rutland, to labor in other fields, we hope some other faithful man will be led to take his place, for there is a wide field to be cultivated.

Bro. Batchelor has felt it duty for the past two years to labor as evangelist. None need be afraid to give him a hearty welcome. He has been upon the watch-tower, looking for the coming of the Son of man, for many years. We found him strong in the faith that Jesus will soon appear. Our meeting at R. was pleasant and profitable. We were cheered by what we heard and saw. That church has had some sore trials, but we expect to see a good representation from R. at "the marriage of the Lamb." They are waiting for the coming of the Just One, to set up his everlasting kingdom.

While some churches have kept their numbers good, it is very rarely the case that their piety is as pure and active as it was twenty years since. The declension in vital godliness is truly alarming. In churches where they are dependent on true religious interest to keep them up, most are very poorly attended; and even those who are present at their solemn assemblies are very dull and stupid, showing but little interest in the worship of the Lord. But those churches in the cities, and larger villages, where popular speakers have been secured, who can entertain the intellectual class of hearers with interesting theological essays, and eloquent sayings, are well sustained by the rich and fashionable; while the poor saints of the Lord can scarcely get a seat in a corner pew; and even if they could, they would be fed like one sitting down to a table spread with silver plate, but containing no food fit to eat. It is only much ado about nothing.

CHAMPLAIN.

Friday evening, Jan. 13th, we had an interesting meeting at Champlain, N. Y. When we arrived at Rouses Point,—four miles from Champlain, we received a cordial greeting by Brn. D. T. Taylor, and Alva Loomise. Bro. Loomise had come from Champlain to take us there, instead of having us wait some three hours for the cars. We found Bro. Taylor strong in faith, and ready to sound the proclamation, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" He is able to preach every Lord's day.

Notwithstanding a snow storm, we had quite a full house of very attentive listeners. One rose for prayers. Here we met Bro. G. W. Stetson for the first time. This is his native place. We had a very pleasant visit with him, and found him an able minister of the New Testament. He should meet with a hearty welcome wherever he may be called to labor. He has sacrificed all for the sake of the "blessed hope," and feels no regret for having done it. May the Lord bless his labors and give him great success in winning souls to Christ.

POULTNEY.

We spent one evening at Poultney, Vt., had a very pleasant interview with the Brn. and sisters. Sr. Elvira Jennings is preaching to that church at present, and is highly esteemed for her faithful labors. Quite a number who were converted there some years since have moved away, some have died, and some turned back to the world; but we found a goodly number who feel determined to "endure to the end." Two rose for prayers, and we trust Sr. Jennings will succeed in winning several more to Christ, and in strengthening the remaining church to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made" them "free."

THE WORLD'S FAIR IN PARIS.

The "World's Fair," to be held in Paris this year, is an item of interest, among other important events that may be expected to transpire in 1866. Napoleon intends that this fair shall surpass all others ever held in the world.

The editor of the New York Herald remarks:—

"The proposed universal exposition of the products and arts of all nations in Paris will be, undoubtedly, the most complete and grand exhibition ever witnessed. Our World's Fair and the world's fairs of other countries will sink into insignificance in comparison. . . . It will be competition on the grandest scale for the highest prize—that is, for the markets or the trade of the world."

Napoleon knows how to turn all such things to his own advantage; and thus keep on the top of the popular wave. He loses no opportunity that may be employed to give him more power over the nations of the earth; and he seems to know just when to make his movements so as to secure the most successful results. His cunning is remarkable. But few comprehend him. His plans are deep laid, and he seldom fails of accomplishing his object. The gathering of the nations at his great "world's fair" will tend largely to elevate him higher in their estimation, and assist him in becoming more firmly seated in his elevated position.

MODERN PROGRESS.

There is much said about "progression" in these last days. Satan seems to be very anxious to make people believe that the world is growing better, and that the time has now come when it will improve very rapidly; but, we think no one can believe this, without denying the Bible and facts. If the deceiver can make us believe that the conversion of the world will soon begin, then he may expect to keep the people quietly waiting for the good time to come, until he has rocked them all to sleep on the brink of perdition. Let us beware of his devices. The great progress now being made by the world is away from Christ and his word, into pride, selfishness, covetousness, licentiousness, and all other base passions, and from thence to destruction.

The following from the Christian Era shows a sad fact among the Baptists in N. H.:—

"The decline of our denomination in New Hampshire is represented as painful to contemplate. We have now only 7718 members, though in 1840 we numbered 9555—a decline of 1837 in twenty-five years."

THE POPE'S FINANCES.

The Scriptures inform us that the woman representing the church power on the seven hills at Rome, is to become comparatively poor just before her overthrow. Once she rolled in luxury, and kings and emperors were her servants, and obedient to her commands; but it is far otherwise now. She is poverty-stricken, and there is no prospect she will ever be in a better condition; but all things indicate that she will soon come to a miserable end. Her purse is empty, her lovers are gone, and perdition stares her in the face. Soon may we expect to see her fall to rise no more for ever. When she goes down we think the Scriptures show that "the marriage of the Lamb" is an event immediately following.

A letter from Florence, Italy, dated Dec. 9th, says:—

"It seems that the Holy Father is about to apply to the money dealers for an accommodation of a couple of millions sterling. We are told it is utterly impossible for him to pay the interest on the old debt, shortly falling due, without contracting this new one. Of course the Holy Father will have to pay ruinously usurious interest for the little bill he proposes drawing on posterity."

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 4.

Having learned from the testimony of the spirits and their followers that they operate just as "a good mesmerizer" does, it now remains to be shown how a mesmerizer performs his wonderful manifestations. When this is understood, we think the whole will be plain.

In mesmerism we know that the objects seen by the persons under mesmeric control are not real objects, present at the time, but only exist in the mind of the operator. To explain this point, let us take a case. When in Chicago, Ill., in 1864, we gathered the following facts, which are but a sample of myriads that might be given to illustrate the phenomena of mesmerism.

Dr. Blain, son of Eld. J. Blain, attended a lecture on Mesmerism. At the close of the lecture the speaker desired those to present themselves that were willing to be mesmerized, provided the speaker could do it. Dr. Blain submitted himself for trial, and was mesmerized. The operator then made the Dr. believe that he was about to amputate a limb. Accordingly, he went through the motions necessary to get out his surgical instruments, then prepared his subject for the operation, took his knife and cut through the flesh to the bone, then took his saw and sawed off the bone, then his knife again to cut off the remaining muscle; then got his needle and thread and took up the arteries, and so on till the wound was all done up nicely, when the operator exclaimed,—"all right," and the Dr. came out of the mesmeric state.

While the Dr. was going through the movements necessary for amputating the limb, it was a reality to him, as truly as it would have been, had he taken it off when in his natural condition; and yet it was but a scene of deception, for at that time he had no limb to amputate, nor instruments with him for that purpose. How was this strange work accomplished? The operator formed a mental picture of the whole scene, in his own mind, and that became a reality to Dr. Blain. If the operator looks mentally at a rose, a bird, fish, serpent, or child; those objects in his mind become real objects to the one under his mesmeric control. The objects exist at the time only as thoughts in the mind of the operator; and he can represent the child or other object, to his mesmerized subject, in any form or dress he may choose, by simply thinking of it in the state he would have it appear to the one under his influence.

Now we come to the application of these facts to Spiritualism. Let it be borne in mind that all the spirits, and Spiritualists, so far as we know, are unanimous in teaching that the spirits operate just as a mesmerizer does. Having found how a mesmerizer performs his strange deeds, we are prepared to understand the wonders of Spiritualism. In order to make this point very plain, and confirm it beyond all controversy, we will quote a conversation with a spirit, as reported in the Banner of Light, of April 9th, 1864. The questions and answers were as follows:—

"Q. Is the flower as tangible to the disembodied in spirit-life as it is to us?

A. Flowers in the spirit-land take the form of beautiful thoughts. Are they tangible? [illegible] the fleeting flowers of earth-life.

Q. Are there not real spirit-flowers, such as we are accustomed to seeing here?

A. No, there are not. Pardon us, if we have ruthlessly swept away the pleasant allusion, but some one must do this, sooner or later. Your own senses, mayhap, will do this.

Q. Why are they brought to us from the spirit-land, if they are not real flowers?

A. Because while you, as a spirit, are existing in the sensuous world, you weigh and measure all life through your physical senses, and can weigh and measure them in no other way. It is on this account that your spirit-friends find it necessary to meet you with symbols that can be comprehended by your physical senses. . . . They do not present them to deceive you, but your spirit-friends know perfectly well that you are living in that nature. Now, you have not passed beyond it, therefore all things that are presented to you from the spirit-world, must take the form of something that you are familiar with in this sensuous world.

Q. Will it not be with our spirit-friends as with flowers, when we get to the spirit-world—that we shall not know them?

A. You will recognise them, not by form and feature, surely, but by love, by that internal, all-powerful and God-given attraction that binds souls together.

Q. I cannot see how we shall know them hereafter.

A. Is love dependent upon form and feature?

Q. It is, if we realize our spirit-friends are continually near us; for we can think of them only as they looked to us when here.

A. True, you have not, nor has any one in the flesh, any clear idea of spirit-forms and scenes. It is vain for us to present Spiritual ideas to mortality, unless those ideas be clothed with forms that you can comprehend."

It will be seen from the foregoing conversation with the spirit, that the flowers, birds, fields, groves, etc., about which the spirits talk so readily, exist "in the spirit-land" only as "beautiful thoughts;" consequently have no real existence. So we think it is with "the spirit-land" itself, of which we hear so much, and of which the Bible does not say one word. Still further, if the flowers, birds, rivers, gardens, groves and fields exist only as "beautiful thoughts," we may well ask,—"Will it not be with our spirit-friends as with flowers?" i. e., that they are no more really existing in a "spirit-land" than are the flowers and other objects which are seen by the mediums among Spiritualists?

Let us advance another step in this investigation, by quoting from the writings of Mr. A. E. Newton, formerly editor of the Spiritual Age, published in Boston. Mr. Newton is a noted Spiritualist, and as well qualified to speak on this subject, probably, as any one living, unless it be Andrew Jackson Davis. Mr. Newton says:—

1st. It is alleged to be possible and common for spirits of a certain class to assume the appearance and characteristics of other spirits, or of other persons still in the body, so completely that the disguise cannot be detected by ordinary spirit-seers. This may be so, and hence the common evidences of the identity of spirits are little to be relied on.

2d. When two persons are closely in sympathetic or magnetic rapport with each other, the images that are in one mind may be perceived as objected realities by the other. This seems to be the case with the magnetizer and his subject, in the once common phenomenon of mesmerism. The operator forms an image, as of a person, a serpent, a fire, or any other object, in his own mind; when the subject, if well under control, instantly sees the same thing as an objective reality. So, positive minds in a circle, or positive spirits who are around, may present the image of any person with whom they are familiar, and it may appear as a reality to the impressible medium."

It will be seen, from the foregoing extract, that Mr. Newton very plainly states that the spirits operate just as a mesmerizer does, and also confirms all we have said on this part of the subject. Just as a mesmerizer makes his subject see men, women, children, birds, flowers, etc., which exist only as mental pictures in his mind; "So, . . . positive spirits, who are around, may present the image of any person with whom they are familiar, and it may appear as a reality to the impressible medium." What spirits are these doing this work? The spirits of demons, not human spirits. Then it follows that the only difference between Mesmerism and Spiritualism is simply this: in Mesmerism a human being is the operator, and in Spiritualism a demon. But in both cases the medium does not see any real friends, flowers, birds, or other objects; consequently it follows that our deceased friends are not present to make any communications, but another class of beings—the demons—are trying to make us believe that they themselves are our spirit-friends, by presenting mental pictures of them to their mediums, who, when under their control, see these mental pictures as real persons, and describe them most minutely.

At this point we will introduce the testimony of Andrew Jackson Davis, formerly editor of the Herald of Progress, published in New York. In the Herald of Progress, for Oct. 27th, 1860, he says:—

"It is known that a wise and strong-minded person in the spirit-world has the power to make visible to the eyes of mortals the exact appearance or semblance of the body it wore before death. This representation is elaborated sometimes to the minutest particular, even to the reproduction of the appearance of the habiliments, etc., by which the person was characterized and identified while a resident of the earth."

Again he says, in the Herald of Progress for Feb. 1st, 1862:—

"All intelligent spirits are great artists. They can psychologize a medium to see them, and to describe them, in the style which would produce the deepest impression on the receiver. . . . They can easily represent themselves as being old or young, as in worldly dress or flowing robes, as is deemed best suited to accomplish the ends of the visitation."

Now the whole secret and mystery of Spiritualism seems to be clearly revealed. All its characteristics harmonize with the idea that the demons mesmerize their mediums, and then "speak, write, act, through" them just as a mesmerizer does.

It is a well-known fact that a mesmerizer may control his medium when out of sight, and when at quite a distance from him. We heard Prof. Britton state in one of his lectures that he had mesmerized a person at the distance of one hundred and fifty miles. Demons, doubtless, can control a medium much farther than a human being, because they have greater power than men.

We can now see how Mr. Partridge received his intelligence in Rochester, N. Y., that "Messrs. Finley, Johnson & Co., of San Francisco" had failed, before the news of the failure came by mail. The demons knew when the failure took place, and impressed their medium at Rochester to state the fact to Mr. Partridge, the demon claiming at the same time to be the spirit of Mr. Partridge's deceased brother, who died in California. When we come to examine the doctrines of Spiritualism, we shall see more clearly why the demons are so anxious to make us believe they are the spirits of our friends who have died.

We think it is now clearly shown,—the Spiritualists and spirits themselves being witnesses,—that the mediums do not see real persons, when under the control of a spirit, any more than one does when in a mesmeric state; but the mental pictures of the mesmerizer, whether a human being, or a demon, appear as real objects to the medium, and are described as such. If the demon has a distinct recollection of the looks of the individual called for, as in the case of Samuel, he can form a clear mental picture of the individual, and then the medium sees him as a living being, and gives a minute description of his person.

"FINAL STATE OF THE WICKED."

The subject of future punishment is being re-examined by many candid minds, some of whom already see that the doctrine of eternal suffering is not taught in the Bible, as they had once supposed. We are glad to see this, because it will lead those who see the truth to love the Lord more, and to prize the Bible higher, besides showing them harmony where before they could see nothing but discord.

We find the following in the New York Independent, dated Jan. 4th, 1866:—

"INSTALLATION DECLINED.—A council was called lately at Upton, Mass., to install Rev. S. O. Dyer as pastor of the church to which he has been preaching as a supply. But the council declined the service, on account of the imperfectness of his views with regard to the final state of the wicked. This question needs a thorough theological examination. The best way to deal with it by councils is also an important inquiry."

Truly "this question needs a thorough theological examination," which is just what we most earnestly desire and request. Criticism will only make the truth shine brighter. The doctrine of the destruction of the wicked is spreading among the churches, and many of their best members are satisfied that the Lord will not keep the wicked in eternal torment, but "destroy" them as he has declared, and thus end sin, by ending the sinner who will not repent and be saved. We hope those who see this great and solemn truth, will stand up boldly in its defense. The people have been filled with fables till they hardly know what to believe. They are in a very confused state of mind. Let us do all we can to scatter the light by means of tracts, as well as the living preacher. Let us stand up boldly in defense of the truth wherever we go. Let the light shine, and blessed results will follow.

CRIME IN NEW YORK.

The report of crime in New York City shows a startling increase of wicked deeds. We think but few are aware of the amount of wickedness that is prevailing in the larger cities and villages. But little restraint is put in the way of the servants of sin and Satan. Magistrates are often a party in the crime; but if not, but few have courage to do their duty, and execute the laws of the land. Laws seem to have no more power to restrain people now, than a last year's scarecrow to keep away the birds from the corn-field. They have found out that they can trample upon them without danger. People may well ask, "What are we coming to next?" The Bible answers, only a worse state of things till Jesus appears.

When speaking of the annual report of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners in New York City, the editor of the Daily Herald, Jan. 6th, 1866, says:—

"Although prepared for an unusually extensive budget of criminal statistics, we confess that we are astonished and startled at many of the revelations contained in the document. It appears that the number of arrests for offences of all grades, amounted to the enormous number of sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, or about fourteen thousand more than the previous year. Crimes of violence toward the person have increased in a still greater ratio, the total number being nine hundred and ninety-five, against six hundred and twenty-four in 1864. . . .

The report shows that there are twelve hundred "daughters of perdition" in the concert saloons, and that there exist in this city and Brooklyn the fearful number of ten thousand places where intoxicating drinks are sold, over eight thousand of which are unlicensed. The License law and the Excise law are nearly inoperative. . . . Bad and dangerous as the tenement houses are for habitations, it appears there are others which are worse. In one precinct there are sixty places, or dens, where the wretched poor, the criminals and depraved resort to lodge, paying from ten to fifteen cents per night for miserable accommodations. These places are chiefly in cellars, with naked stone or brick walls, damp and decayed floors, without beds or bedding fit for human beings. These dens are filthy beyond description, overflowing with vermin and infested by rats. In these hideous places are packed nightly an average of six hundred persons—men, women and children—white and black sleeping promiscuously together, without regard to family relation, and exhibiting less of the impulses of decency than the brute creation. They consist of drunken wretches, male and female beggars, ragpickers of the poorer sort, sneak thieves, juvenile pimps, ragged and drunken prostitutes, and others of the same vile class. . . .

In the course of this revolting record of crime, vice and immorality, we observe the statement that certain laws and ordinances are not enforced because the justices are dependent for their places upon the very offenders they are called upon to punish."

PERSONAL.—We learn that Sr. [illegible], wife of Eld. L. [illegible], fell asleep in [illegible], Wednesday, the 17th inst. [illegible] brother in his great affliction.

OUR MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

FROM BRO. MIMES' JOURNAL.

St. Louis, Sabbath, Dec. 24. All are now preparing for Christmas. It is one of the greatest holidays of the year, with both the white and colored people; and as it comes to-morrow, much is said in reference to it in the churches to-day.

I attended the Love Feast at 9 A. M. with the African M. E. church in Eleventh-street. It was well attended, and full of life. I was much interested in the deep experience of many of the saints. They have had hard struggles for want of Bible knowledge. One Freedwoman said she lived thirty-five years before she ever saw a Bible, to know the nature of the book. She heard others speak of religion; and what she knew of Christ and of the plan of redemption she got from her associates, who were also unable to read. Yet she got the idea of Jesus' mission, of the resurrection, and had had a deep experience in the things of God.

There was one new thing to me, in this meeting, which I enjoyed much. It was "breaking bread in love together," as they called it. It consisted in the following exercise: After the bread and water had been carried around, and all had partaken as is the custom, and one after another had spoken, the pastor said, "Now, brethren, we will spend a short time in breaking bread in love together." He then took a piece of bread from the plate, others following his example. They break off each a small piece, which they put into the hand each of another, in exchange, giving a hearty shake of the hand, and a God bless you, with various words of good cheer, while most were singing a thrilling hymn. In less than a minute all in the house were on their feet, electrified with sentiments of love and fellowship. I "fell in," and enjoyed it much.

I attended the forenoon service of the M. E. church (South), in Eighth street. The edifice is large, costly, and magnificently fitted up. On entering, I found a fashionable audience, with all the outward show of dress and pride that is usual for the most fashionable gatherings of the worldly-minded. My first thought was, "What would John Wesley have said to this?"

The sermon was an able production, from Rom. 8: 35,—"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" He said this did not mean the love of Christ to us; but our love to him. Who shall separate us? There were many things calculated to do this; but, by God's grace, there was nothing that could. It was an argument more in favor of the doctrine of the final perseverance of the saints, than the Methodist view of falling from grace. Though an able sermon, it was too dry, long, and tedious. Many of the rich secessionists attend this church; but they have been greatly humbled by the fall of the Southern Confederacy, and their feelings are greatly changed. Some of them have given themselves up to God, and enjoy more religion than ever in former days. The sermon, no doubt, had reference to the trials of secession.

At 3 P. M., I met with the African church in Seventh street. We had an anxious crowd of the humble, the poor, the ignorant, and hitherto down-trodden—the Lord's poor—to hear the word of the Lord. I took up the second of Daniel, and as nearly all present were unable to read, I told them they might read with me; so I read distinctly and slow, and they repeated it after me, in concert, and felt an interest in it. So glad were they that they could speak the words of God as he gave them by inspiration! They were sweet to them as honey!

In my exposition, I compared scripture with scripture; and in each case, and on each point, I repeated the prophecy, then the interpretation and application; and thus I made the image speak for once so that these illiterate ones saw and understood the vision and the interpretation. A more happy audience I never saw. It was all new to them. Various exclamations were made of wonder, surprise, and joy. One sister exclaimed, "Well, well, well! Did I ever hope to see this day, and hear such good things. Is it possible the Lord's kingdom is so nigh!" And now they want to read the Bible more than ever before.

Bro. Flagg spoke in the evening, at the same place, to a crowded audience, and with much effect. About fifty came out for prayer, and many were blessed. The word of God is having a free course, and is being glorified. Praise God!

At the close of this meeting a goodly number of us stepped into the Free Methodist Watch-meeting, and spent an hour or more. It was Christmas Eve. The meeting was small, and of little force, although some good things were said. This people have come out of the Episcopal Methodist church on account of their conformity to the world; and they are right in this. But still they lack the power enjoyed by the early Methodists.

Sr. Prescott has raised up some interests in this vicinity of which the Free Methodists (in the absence of Advent ministers) have taken the charge, and worked in union with her. She was invited to join them, but could not do so conscientiously, whereupon they, very unwisely, turned their influence against her, and shut her and some of her friends out of the very churches she had raised and the chapels she had been the means of building. And on one occasion, when she was present, while calling the penitent to the altar, they invited those present who believed in the sleep of the dead, and destruction of the wicked, to come forward for prayer, and repent of their damnable heresies! But Sr. P. has the spirit of a christian, and could say, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. * * *

Monday, Dec. 25. I spoke this forenoon in the Seventh street church. A large audience of colored people were present, with some whites. I was requested to give a christmas sermon. This I did, by giving (1) the genealogy of Christ from Adam to Abram, and from Abraham to David, and from David to the Savior; (2) the time of his birth. I made them read in concert with me all the scriptures in Isaiah, Jeremiah and Daniel bearing upon this point, until the whole matter was made plain, and they themselves understood it. There were many glad and bright countenances. They never heard the gospel on this position before.

At the close of this meeting I told them that we were about to establish a day school in the neighborhood of Benton Barracks, about two miles out, for the Freedmen and their children. But our teacher would be able also to hold an evening school for all here in the heart of the city; and if the vestry of this church could be fitted up for the purpose, and they help us in the work, we would have an evening school. How many are there here who would like to learn to read and write, and will attend? Please rise up. One hundred rose to their feet. We hope for success in the enterprise.

In the afternoon I met the colored ministers again, to explain the prophecies. We spent an hour on the visions of Daniel, at their request. At the close they expressed great satisfaction, and wanted more light on these (to them) mysterious visions. One of the ministers present is on his way to New Orleans, where he is stationed this year; and has given me a pressing invitation to visit him, and preach to the Freedmen there.

A family of Freedmen invited me to eat a Christmas dinner with them to-day, which I was not reluctant to do. They feel so pleased to have any notice or respect paid them, that I was most happy to comply with their request. They had all been slaves their whole life long—the grandmother, who invited me, and her daughter with six children. The daughter's husband and two sons are in the army. The mother was of a quite light complexion, and a more intelligent looking and dignified lady I have not seen. She is an humble christian, and most of the family fear God. They moved into the city two years ago, after they got their freedom. They would all be glad to learn to read the word of God. The worst thing they had to suffer was their belonging to various persons, and from time to time being sold to different parties. But after the Emancipation Act took effect, they got together; and now, though in low circumstances, they are a happy family. I enjoyed this visit much.

Tuesday, Dec. 26. Meeting in Seventh St. was not large, but very good. The snow-storm kept many away. Bro. Flagg spoke with good effect. About twenty came out for prayer, and we had some cases of conversion. The change is deep and thorough. One of these persons was at a dance last night, and to-night she is a converted woman. She will, no doubt, maintain her integrity, and be a shining light. Some fall away, but where they give themselves up, and a powerful work seems to be wrought in them, they are heroic and persevering. They live a new life, and whatever may be thought of the means by which it is effected, it is effectual in most instances.

Wednesday, Dec. 27. Visited among the Freedmen, the sick, and others. Called upon John Fouche and family. His wife is sick. He is pastor of the African church in Seventh street. He and all his family have been slaves, and have been kept in ignorance. He is a man of good common sense, and by his energy has risen to a position of influence among his people. He can now read and write, and makes good use of his knowledge. He is of French descent, through his father.

Next called on Bro. Reuben Warner. He is, also, a preacher, and is a pure African. Was raised in Virginia, and sold South. Was first sold in Mississippi, and after this was sold on the auction-block no less than seven times. He was taken as a servant to the Mexican war, and was wounded. While laid up he learned to read. He is now quite a student—understands the Bible, in his way, has read history, and is quite intelligent. He reads music well, has now got some of The Christian Lyres, and will teach a singing school among his brethren. His wife is also intelligent, though all her life a slave in Tennessee, till within two years. She has children there now, but cannot find them, they being scattered and sold, she knows not where.

Called on the family of the famous Dred Scott, who sued for his liberty on the ground of what was considered constitutional law. The case was carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States; and as the great principle of human liberty in the United States was involved in its decision, the Slave power made the most of it. Chief Justice Taney gave a long, and in some respects an able argument in support of the slavery of the colored race in the United States, and decided that the colored men of our country were not citizens, and that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect! This filled the cup of our judicial iniquity. The Rebellion followed, and next, glory be to the God of justice and liberty! universal emancipation. This Scott family are pure Africans. The father is dead. The widow and two children now live here, to call on whom it was a pleasure to me. They are poor, but now free, industrious, and happy.

I spoke this evening in Seventh St. church, on "Who is on the Lord's side?" (Ex. 32; 26.) Good attendance. Some new cases of conviction, and several conversions. The good work goes on among the colored people.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

A few months ago, a letter dated at Montreal, and signed "E. B.," was received by my wife in my absence, in which the author very freely expressed his views on this wise: He had been informed in some place in Boston, that I was making money, getting rich by publishing books and tracts, and was living in considerable splendor, owned houses, etc., etc., and was in a state of very great prosperity; all of which seemed to be a matter of considerable concern and regret to him. As many others may have heard the same statement from the same source, I propose to offer a few words of explanation, and more especially as my wife, wishing to spare my feelings, by the advice of a friend, destroyed the letter, writing an answer to "E. B., Montreal," which, doubtless never reached him, and she only a little while ago informed me of the facts in the case. Concerning all this I have to say,

1. If I appear before the public as a beggar, it is perfectly fair that they should search my pockets first, and see what there is in them. But if I ask no alms, and earn my own living, it is no particular concern of the good people whether I am rich or poor.

2. There is no living person, except my wife, that knows how rich I am, or how poor, how much I have, or owe, or have owed to me, and consequently no man but myself can state truly any facts in the case.

3. I make no pretensions to poverty.—There are poor preachers enough, and enough who profess to be poor, without me; men who cannot preach a sermon without so much pay, and who keep up a perpetual grumble about their salaries, their living, or something else, and are always concocting some device in the shape of collections, subscriptions, and donations, by which men are desired to help them forward after a godly sort, without counting me in among that class.

4. Since the time when, in the year 1858, I requested the church where I labored to burn up their subscription paper, as henceforth I intended to trust in God, I have been so cared for by the good Lord, that I could not consistently dishonor him, and the faith I profess, by repining, or complaining of my poverty, when my Lord hath said, "All things are yours," and has promised to withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.

5. I think the man does not live who ever heard me say I must have so much money, or I could not preach to the people the word of God; nor do I think that the man can be found who ever knew me to set a price upon my preaching before I did it, or grumble at the smallness of the gifts which men were disposed to bestow upon me afterwards. Nor do I think the man can be found who ever heard me ask a congregation or an individual for money for my own benefit, or ask any one else to ask them on my behalf.

6. As to getting rich, when I stated the facts to the United States Assessor, who wanted to tax my "Income exceeding $600 per year," he thought it was best to let me pass as a poor subject. I honored his judgment.

7. As to getting rich by publishing gospel truth in the shape of books and tracts, I may remark that I seem to be the first person who has got rich out of it, for most engaged in it have complained of poverty, and begged for aid, and I have published tracts, etc., cheaper than any one else in the country before me, and the presumptions would seem to be against the conclusion; and further, during the last three years, I have never raised the prices of my books, though the expenses of manufacturing them have doubled, and other publishers have advanced their prices in proportion. And I question whether I have made one dollar of clear profit on all the books I have published during the past two years, over and above the expense and labor involved in their issue. I cannot tell exactly how this is, but this is my best judgment of the matter, although I have no accounts to show it accurately.

8. I offered to sell out the business of publishing books, and every stereotype plate I had, to the Publication Society, for $1200, reserving, however, the privilege of having what books I wanted to sell or give away in my travels, at cost, and they did not think the property worth the money, and declined accepting the proposal. These plates included the whole of my Bible Student's Library.

9. As regards my present prospects and position, I have gone into the work of publishing once more, because I saw the work must be done. When I sold out the plates of my Tracts for $500, I invested the money where it would be ready to be used in the spreading of truth when needed. When I sold out my stock of tracts and books on hand, I had a few hundred dollars which were needed and used to purchase the exemption of two or three young preachers who were conscripted. A legacy of over $400 from a friend who fell asleep in Christ, and various other donations, have replaced this, and proved that lending to the Lord was safe business. As I enter upon the work again, I have placed these funds in stock again, for the Lord's glory. I have now a small stock of books on hand, but am out of several kinds. I have some paper, enough for present needs, and am owing between $400 and $500 for these, which I shall pay when I get the money. I have not enough now.

I have stereotype plates which are of some value. I shall not say how much their value is, because other people, perhaps, do not think they are worth as much as I do. I think they are worth pretty nearly their weight in gold to publish truth from. But the Type Founder would only give fifteen cents per lb. for them; and if they could not be used for publishing, this is their only value. But he cannot have them to melt up, nor any one else at present, as I mean to use them more, provided I can find any one who will buy or read the books I publish.

10. If any one wishes to be informed of my exact state, [illegible] will call [illegible] 19 Lindall street, Boston, Mass., in the rear of the Boston post office. In a few cases of type, some stereotype and electrotype plates, some piles of printing paper, and some books, bound and not bound, and also in the volumes that compose my private library at Lawrence, and a few small debts, not easily collected, he will find every dollar that I can rightly call my own. He may estimate the value for himself, and make me a good offer for it if he dare, binding himself to keep up the book publishing business at the rates I do, and then make all the money out of it that he can.

11. I have plenty of credit, and for ten years past have never lacked much for ready means. I have had hundreds and even thousands lying in my hands at times, but it was not mine. It was property for which I was responsible, and which I must pay over when it was called for. I have such funds in my possession now, upon which I pay the customary interest. By some means, certain persons have sometimes had confidence enough in me to place their money in my hands unsolicited, to be used or cared for, instead of placing it in banks or elsewhere; and hundreds of times I should have been penniless and in straits, had not God in this or some other way provided for me. Well do I remember the time when myself and wife knelt in our upper chamber in the city of New York in 1854, and asked of the Lord for money in our needs, and then I went out to the post office and found twenty dollars from a man I had never seen, to be used for him in the purchase of rare and expensive books. And from that day to this I have hardly passed a week without having some of that man's money in my hands, with the privilege of using it myself till I had the opportunity to use it for him. Such funds are in my hands to-day; but I have not a dollar that I can rightfully call my own, outside of the plates and stock on hand in the Repository; that, I think, is worth a great deal more than one would probably want to pay me for it.

12. As it regards houses and lands, I own, perhaps, about as much land as Abraham did—a third share in a plot some three rods square, the place where my grandparents, aunt, father, and three brothers sleep the sleep of death; and also two-thirds of a mortgage on an old house and lot, left by my father, the whole of which I tried to sell for thirty dollars, but no man would buy it.

When we lived in Rochester, N. Y., as we could not afford to pay $10 per month for rent, I bought a house; and bought it only because by so doing I could pay half the price in books. So I purchased my first real estate;—a house with three little rooms on the floor, a couple of attics, where the chickens had roosted, a wet cellar where the pigs had run, and a shed adjoining it where a horse had been stabled. We lived there till my health failed; fixed up the house a little, came off, waited a year or two, got cheated out of the rent, went back, and sold it for between five and six hundred dollars. So much for the only house I ever owned.

13. A friend in Providence, R. I., knowing of my ill health, kindly offered to house us for a year, if we would come to Providence, where the climate was more mild: and so we came. He first hired a house, then bought one, in part with our money, for about $1350, and put us in it. At length he was under the necessity of selling it, and so we borrowed some more money, and my wife sold the piano she had bought to teach music on for a living, and took the house into her own hands. She kept it till we left Providence, and then sold it out for about what it cost, and we came on to Boston. We lived in Charlestown and Boston two years, part of the time in a house where the sun never shone in the rooms the family lived in during the time we were there, until my wife got the consumption; and then we fled to Lawrence to save her life, found a house to sell, none to rent, and bought it for my wife, paying $1800 for it, which I borrowed out of a Boston bank, and paid again in due time. There my wife, somewhat improved in health, my poor, old, lame, half-blind mother, my sister, and three little ones who call me father, live; and, for a wonder, I have been here yesterday and to-day. To-morrow I am off again. I live in Boston, in the "Scriptural Tract Repository," where I eat, drink, sleep, and work, keeping bachelor's hall to save paying my board, and living away from my family to avoid the expenses of car fare, eating potatoes, hasty pudding, and hard tack, with good relish; and working like a beaver to prepare tracts for folks who probably sit down to turkey and roast beef, and worry about my getting rich! And when I asked my wife this week if she would sell her house if needful, and put it into books and tracts, she said, "Yes."

So we go on, and if any one wants to know how we live, just call and see. If they want to know how many dresses my wife has, or whether my children have clothes fit to go to meeting, or any other matters that busy-bodies are usually interested in, let them write to Mrs. H. L. Hastings, Box 515, Lawrence, Mass., on these, or any other matters connected with her private business. If any one wishes to investigate my private business, they can find me most of the time at my Repository in Boston, except when I am away preaching.

If this letter reaches the eye of our Canadian friend and well-wisher, I have only to say if he had sent his full name and address, he would doubtless have enjoyed the reading of a very excellent and interesting letter, much more so I presume than this, from Mrs. Hastings to "E. B. of Montreal," which discussed these matters, I presume, with much force, but which probably has long since gone to the Postmaster General's office.

With thankfulness to God for all temporal prosperity, with malice toward none, and charity for all, I subscribe myself,

A servant of Christ and his church,

H. L. Hastings.

Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 29th, 1865.

The President's Faith.—President Johnson recently received a delegation of Mississippians, and said to them in conversation:

"If I know my own heart, my highest and only ambition is to be an instrument in the hands of a higher power in restoring the government to its rightful condition by the speediest method consistent with safety. I am not a candidate, and can afford to do right. Of course, in a work of such magnitude, difficult and unlooked for problems may arise; but we shall find that by doing one thing at a time, most of these knotty questions will solve and adjust themselves. Often my plans disappoint me, but I have learned to do in my politics as I do in my religion—when my facts fail, I rely on my faith, and my faith is still strong that all will be well."

NEW HAMPSHIRE QUAR. CONF.

This conference commenced according to notice. Preachers present during the meeting were the following: J. Couch, J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, Wm. Sutherland, J. Harvey, J. Morrill, Henry M. Bryant, D. Leavitt, J. Parsons, and A. W. Sibley.

There was preaching during the meeting by J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, J. Knowles, J. Couch, and A. W. Sibley. Many brethren from the adjacent towns came to the meeting, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, and found it warm within, although very cold without. The Lord was present and some found peace. Thank his Name.

A business session of the conference was held Saturday, P. M., after the regular service from the stand, Eld. J. Knowles, Lake Village, N. H., presiding. After prayer by Bro. J. G. Smith, and some remarks about various matters, on motion, Bro. Henry M. Bryant was received as a member of the conference.

Adjourned till the call of the "Board."

A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. W. Thomas.

Bro. Grant:—The work of God has commenced in New Bedford. Yesterday we had a powerful time all day, and in the evening the power of God was felt. Some backsliders started anew, and one sister arose and said that Bro. Sam'l G. Gidley, who lived in Dartmouth, seven miles from the city of New Bedford, had been struck both deaf and dumb, and requested the Elders of the church to pray for him, that he might be healed. We talked the matter over, and Bro. Tripp, who is uncle to the brother afflicted, told us that he would carry us over the next day. We arrived at the house of Bro. Gidley about ten o'clock this morning, and found him prostrated upon the bed, both deaf and speechless; and when we inquired, we found that he had been in that condition for six days. After a few minutes, he raised himself up and saw Bro. Hook, Bro. Piper, and myself, and then motioned for a slate and wrote the following words:

"Three servants of God. It will all soon be well."

We were all strangers to him. He also wrote the following:

"There is a balm in Gilead; there is a great Physician. Pray, brothers in Christ, pray."

When asked if he felt distressed, he wrote—

"No, the power of God is on me. Bros., I feel it. I know it. Satan must be conquered."

We saw that he had the same power now as when he was on the earth. God commenced to work. Bro. Piper read the fifth chapter of James, anointed him with oil in the name of the Lord, and then prayed. Bro. Hook and myself followed him in prayer. Before we had finished pleading with God, he sprang from the bed, shouting and praising God at the top of his voice. Such praising I never heard before. When asked if he could hear, he said,

"Yes, I am perfectly whole." Glory to God and the Lamb for ever!

I have been urged to write these few lines for the Crisis. This miracle has been wrought before several witnesses, and had I space I would give their names. O that this may be the beginning of a greater work. Pray for us.

Joseph W. Thomas.

From Bro. J. Porter.

Bro. Grant:—The year 1866 having come in upon me with so much majestic importance, as no year in all my history has ever woven, '66, '67, '68 are to me as Noah, Daniel, and Job are to the Scriptures of the Old Testament. We have some signs of waking up a little in Danville. Character is fast finding its own place. The wicked shall do wickedly, and the sleeper will sleep on.

Obituaries.

Caverly. Died in Tuftonborough, N. H., Dec. 27th, 1865, Bro. Samuel Caverly, aged seventy-two years.

His health had been failing for a year or more. Had been a professor of the religion of Christ for some thirty years, and was a deacon for a number of years in the Christian church. In 1843 he embraced the blessed truth of the Lord's soon coming. The religion of our brother was one of principle as well as feeling, so that the pressure of business did not prevent him from reading the Bible, or from family prayer; and the poor were not forgotten by him. When his brethren had expenses to bear he was ready to step forward and do his part. In this death a companion, children, and a large circle of friends are left to feel the loss of a kind husband, a good father, and a true friend. May the death of our brother be sanctified to the good of the living. J. G. Smith.

Brooks. Died in New Durham, N. H., Dec. 9th, 1865, of diphtheria, Eliza Ellen, only daughter of Charles and Mary R. Brooks, aged five years, two months, and twenty-seven days.

J. G. Smith.

Beneath the cold earth our Nellie is sleeping,
And we are left here for her to be weeping;
But we are exhorted for her not to weep,
For we have a hope that in Christ she doth sleep.

S. P. S.

Rawson. In Jamaica, Vt., Oct. 30th, of typhoid fever and pneumonia, Henry O. Rawson, son of Lyman and Charlotte Rawson, aged twenty-seven years, seven months and five days.

He was a fine young man, beloved by all who knew him. He leaves a wife to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband, yet we mourn not as those without hope.

Corliss. Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 22, 1865, little Freddie, only son of M. W. and Octavia Corliss.

He sojourned with us fifteen months and fourteen days, and then laid down to sleep till the morning of the resurrection. Discourse by the writer. J. Lenfest.

Adams. Died in Newfane, Vt., Dec. 30th, Mrs. William Adams, aged sixty-seven.

Also in Dover, Nov. 17th, Elinor, wife of Aseph Adams, aged thirty-six.

Also in Dover, Nov. 24th, Dana C. Adams, son of Aseph and Elinor Adams, aged six years.

☞ It is the custom of Rome for the cardinals to write every year to the Catholic emperors and kings, to offer the compliments and congratulations suggested by the return of Christmas and the opening of a new year. The Pope has forbidden the members of the Sacred College to pay this mark of respect to the Emperor of Mexico, so a London paper says.

The Plymouth Sentinel of the 12th inst. reports that during the intense cold weather large numbers of the fish inhabiting the waters of Cape Cod Bay perished from cold, myriads of which, consisting of sea bass, black fish, lobsters, etc., washed ashore in that locality, strewing the coast for miles around with their frozen carcasses.

☞ The English journals tell us of another article from which paper is manufactured with success. It grows in Spain and is called [illegible] [illegible]. So great is the demand for it that the price has risen to over twenty dollars a ton.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Queenstown 7th instant.

There has been a revolt on the part of two Spanish regiments under Gen. Prim, but it makes no progress, and the insurgents were being pursued to the mountains.

The Fenian trials were concluded at Cork on the 2d inst. Several more prisoners had been tried, convicted and sentenced.

Furious gales have prevailed around the English coast, causing many marine disasters.

The Emperor of Austria sent the order of St. Stephen of Hungary for the French Prince Imperial. The alliance between France and Austria is spoken of.

The Pope received the congratulation of the French army at Rome on the 1st inst. He returned thanks, and said it would probably be the last time he could bestow his blessings upon them. He feared the enemies of the church would go to Rome after the departure of the French troops.

The Times anticipates that by next January the Emperor Napoleon will have withdrawn all the troops from Mexico and from Rome.

Napoleon gave his usual New Year's to the diplomatic bodies. He expressed happiness that the past year had strengthened the bonds of peace and given an augury for a long day of peace and prosperity for the world.

Later from Mexico.

The Sociedad of the 3d inst. says: "It is to be feared that trouble will occur at Matamoras, not with the government of the United States, but with Federal troops, who have openly sympathized with the Juarists and given them material aid."

The reinforcements reaching Mexico from Europe during last week in December numbered twelve hundred.

An earthquake was severely felt at Orizaba; much damage was done, and several lives were lost. There was a severe shock at Puebla, and a slight one in the city of Mexico.

A Havana correspondent says the latest advices are unfavorable to the Imperial cause. The inhabitants of Monterey feel no security in Maximilian's Mexican troops, and were leaving the city enmasse. Over 30,000 are said to have left in three days. The merchants are sending their goods and valuables to San Luis.

News from the Department of Sinaloa is also gloomy for the Imperialists. Mazatlan alone remains in the hands of the Imperialists, and provisions for that city must pass through the revenue tax offices of the Republican General Corona. On the 31st ult. a guerrilla force of 300, among whom were said to be several Americans, captured a place named San Juan, in Burango. After having completely destroyed it, they left to attack the town of San Miguel Del Mesquintol. The guerrillas were headed by two natives. A French-Mexican force had left Durango to attack the band.

The Imperialists claim a victory at the town of Comittipa in the State of Puebla. They also claim a victory over the Republican Gen. Regneles, who attacked Augangos with over 8000 troops. On the 16th ult. another place named Macavatio was attacked by Regneles, but he is said to have been repulsed.

The Indians of Sahacaba had defeated the Imperialists under Lopez in Yucatan. They then attacked Senotillo, but were repulsed. The Lieutenant of Engineers was killed and the Empress sent a sum of money to his widow. Lopez was to be tried by court martial. Various other engagements with varied success on either side had taken place.

The conspirators to assassasinate the Minister of War had been arrested at the very moment of carrying the scheme into operation.

DOMESTIC.

A Princely Domain.—The country domestic establishment only of the Duke of Devonshire would occupy one of our largest counties. The park immediately surrounding the palace is eleven miles in circumference, and contains 3000 acres. The principal garden for vegetables, fruits, green-houses, etc., is twenty five acres. There are thirty green-houses, each from fifty to seventy-five feet long. Three or four of these contain nothing but pine apples; others contain nothing but melons and cucumbers. One peach tree on the glass wall measures fifty-one feet in width and fifteen in height, and bears one thousand peaches. It is the largest in the world. The grape houses, five or six in all, are six hundred feet long—and such grapes! There are pine-apples weighing ten or fifteen pounds each. One green-house has only figs; another only mushrooms. But what shall be said of the great conservatory, filled with every variety of tropical plants? It is one of the wonders of the world. It covers an acre of ground, is one hundred feet high, of oval shape, and cost $500,000. It is heated by steam and hot water pipes, which, in all, are six miles in length. The apparatus consumes six hundred tons of coal in a year. There are banana trees twenty feet high, with clusters of fruit; sugar cane, coffee trees, bamboo, and in short, every tropical plant that can be named. Several of the palm trees are from fifty to sixty feet high. The smoke of the immense fire underneath is carried in pipes under ground to an outlet in the woods. The coal is brought in a tunnel six hundred yards under ground. One fountain throws a jet of water to the height of two hundred seventy-five feet.

☞ A secret congress of the Roman Catholic hierarchy has been held in Dublin. Twenty-six archbishops and bishops took part in the mysterious proceedings, which, it is supposed, had reference to certain matters of a semi-political character.

☞ A fact highly honorable to typos is disclosed by a late report of the New York Inspector of State Prisons; while all other occupations are represented in their large number of convicts, there is not a single printer.

Notices.

A New Enterprize.

I propose, if the Lord will, to issue a sheet about the size of the Crisis, filled with new tracts, during this present month of January, 1866, and afterwards as often as once a month, if practicable. It will be a newspaper in form, but not in fact, as it will be printed with wide columns, and after it is printed and scattered, each tract will be also printed separately, in the usual form.

REASONS FOR IT.

1. I have on hand large quantities of matter, thousands of pages of reported sermons by H. L. Hastings, Edwin Burnham and others; multitudes of choice tracts and extracts, hymns, tunes, etc., etc., enough to fill a weekly paper, I presume, for a year, and too numerous, by far, to intrude on any existing periodical.

2. When these tracts are printed, I want to save them for future publication, and hence I wish them in broad columns, so I can preserve them stereotyped, in book form, for future use.

3. In ordinary papers, choice articles cannot be obtained and circulated separately, and sometimes matters of little general interest occupy large portions of a paper. In this, all such matters are intended to be omitted, and only articles of permanent value are to be issued.

4. Many persons will read a newspaper when they would not read a tract, even if it contained the same matter; and I wish to reach them with the gospel message.

5. Many persons want to see all the new tracts that are issued, but it is too troublesome and expensive for them to write separately for each one, and this arrangement will give them a steady supply of samples, so they can see what is issued, and know what to order.

6. In tracts, about one-fourth of the paper is used for the white margins, and more than half the labor is expended in folding, stitching, and trimming them. This I save by the newspaper form, and can publish cheaper than in any other way, considering the amount of matter published.

7. I want to put this sheet outside of all sectarian boundaries and limits, among missions, Freedmen, Sunday schools and churches, thus spreading the glad tidings of the grace of God; and I propose to fill up this sheet with sermons, exhortations, hymns, music, expositions of Scripture, records of God's good providence over his people, notes of discourses, and reading matter for young and old, great and small.

8. Moving in this matter without the knowledge, counsel, or help of any one but the Lord, having only sought his guidance, remembering that if God be pleased the work will not be in vain, I shall strive to conduct this publication with a single eye to his glory; and though the responsibility is great, and the eye of reason does not see the way through future difficulties, yet faith declares "the Lord will provide."

The title of the periodical will be

THE CHRISTIAN.

I know of no better name than this, and pray that its character may correspond with the title chosen.

TERMS.

1. It will be sent for 60 cents per volume, of 12 numbers, to any address in the United States or British Provinces.

2. Ten copies will be sent for $5. To the Provinces, the price will be $6 for ten copies.

3. Persons ordering ten or more copies for free distribution in Missions, Hospitals, Sunday schools, among Freedmen, and in similar localities, can have ten copies for $4.

The Lord's poor shall have The Christian free, so long as we can send it.

WHEN ORDERED IN ADVANCE,

Copies of any single number will be sent out at cost of paper and printing, no charge being made for the type-setting, editing, and similar expenses. They will be sent by mail, 100 copies for $3, postpaid, and by express, 100 copies for $2.50.

Who will order 1000 copies of the first number for $25? Who will order 400 copies for $10? Who will order 33 copies for $1? Who will order 10 copies for 30 cents? Who will order 5 copies, or more, for nothing? All shall be supplied who send. Those who choose to may send stamps to prepay postage. But do not delay sending, as when once the printing is done, and the edition scattered, no more can be had at any price. This rate affords about FORTY PAGES OF TRACT MATTER FOR ONE CENT.

WHO WILL HELP?

I invite the friends of Christ, wherever they are, to co-operate in the circulation of this periodical. 1. Pray for it. 2. Work for it. 3. Subscribe for it. It will be issued as regularly as practicable, though from the nature of its contents, it will be in season at any time, and hence we shall not be forced to print without due preparation, as would be the case with a more frequent issue.

Any preacher, or any one else, can have packages of ten or twenty copies sent freely and gladly to use as specimens in securing subscribers.

WRITE IMMEDIATELY if you wish them, as otherwise you will be too late. Those who wish to receive it regularly can send their subscriptions at once, as by so doing I shall avoid prepaying the postage on it. And they can pay it at the office where the paper is received, quarterly, in advance.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST NUMBER.

For the first number, among others, the following original articles are prepared, and will be published, so far as space will permit:

1. Fishers of Men; a sermon by H. L. Hastings, phonographically reported.
2. De Gruchy and De Carterette, a Story of Grace. A deeply interesting account of the conversation of two hardened infidels.
3. Sold Cheap. A plain talk to young men, by H. L. H.
4. Wild Oats. A plain talk to young men.
5. The Good Master. A large print tract for Freedmen and mission circulation, by H. L. H.
6. Marks, Good and Bad. Another large print tract for Freedmen, by H. L. H.
7. Various other original or carefully selected articles.
8. Original poetry, by H. L. H.
9. Original music, by H. L. H.
10. Book notices, Prospectus, and sundry other matters which cannot now be specified.

This is the programme of the new enterprise. I submit it to the brethren and friends, praying for the blessing of God, and hoping for the prayers of his people.

Please to direct all letters, orders, and remittances to

H. L. HASTINGS, Scriptural Tract Repository, 19 Lindall St., Boston.

Jan. 4th, 1866.

Notice.

Some nine or ten lots of ground were spoken for last fall to erect board tents with at Alton Bay, and as it would be a saving both of lumber and time in erecting, to send a schedule of the lumber that the friends want, if they will send now to Mr. Jeremiah Woodman, of Alton, N. H., he will get out what is wanted, and have it ready and delivered when specified. J. G. Smith.

Notice.

We will hold a series of meetings in Lawrence, Mass., corner of Essex and Lawrence streets, commencing Sunday, January 28th.

S. S. Brewer,
D. A. Dickson.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at North Barnsted, N. H., Thursday evening, Feb. 1st, and hold day and evening and over the following Sabbath.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. Dixon—Yes.
P. A. Smith—E. Horner's $2.50 was received and acknowledged.
Hiram Choate—Have paid to No. 512.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 538. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468 if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

lion followed, and next, glory be to the God of justice and liberty! universal emancipation. This Scott family are pure Africans. The father is dead. The widow and two children now live here, to call on whom it was a pleasure to me. They are poor, but now free, industrious, and happy.

I spoke this evening in Seventh St. church, on "Who is on the Lord's side?" (Ex. 32: 26.) Good attendance. Some new cases of conviction, and several conversions. The good work goes on among the colored people.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

A few months ago, a letter dated at Montreal, and signed "E. B.," was received by my wife in my absence, in which the author very freely expressed his views on this wise: He had been informed in some place in Boston, that I was making money, getting rich by publishing books and tracts, and was living in considerable splendor, owned houses, etc., etc. and was in a state of very great prosperity; all of which seemed to be a matter of considerable concern and regret to him. As many others may have heard the same statement from the same source, I propose to offer a few words of explanation, and more especially as my wife, wishing to spare my feelings, by the advice of a friend, destroyed the letter, writing an answer to "E. B., Montreal," which, doubtless never reached him, and she only a little while ago informed me of the facts in the case. Concerning all this I have to say,

1. If I appear before the public as a beggar, it is perfectly fair that they should search my pockets first, and see what there is in them. But if I ask no alms, and earn my own living, it is no particular concern of the good people whether I am rich or poor.

2. There is no living person, except my wife, that knows how rich I am, or how poor, how much I have, or owe, or have owed to me, and consequently no man but myself can state truly any facts in the case.

3. I make no pretensions to poverty.—There are poor preachers enough, and enough who profess to be poor, without me; men who cannot preach a sermon without so much pay, and who keep up a perpetual grumble about their salaries, their living, or something else, and are always concocting some device in the shape of collections, subscriptions, and donations, by which men are desired to help them forward after a godly sort, without counting me in among that class.

4. Since the time when, in the year 1858, I requested the church where I labored to burn up their subscription paper, as henceforth I intended to trust in God, I have been so cared for by the good Lord, that I could not consistently dishonor him, and the faith I profess, by repining, or complaining of my poverty, when my Lord hath said, "All things are yours," and has promised to withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.

5. I think the man does not live who ever heard me say I must have so much money, or I could not preach to the people the word of God; nor do I think that the man can be found who ever knew me to set a price upon my preaching before I did it, or grumble at the smallness of the gifts which men were disposed to bestow upon me afterwards. Nor do I think the man can be found who ever heard me ask a congregation or an individual for money for my own benefit, or ask any one else to ask them on my behalf.

6. As to getting rich, when I stated the facts to the United States Assessor, who wanted to tax my "income exceeding $600 per year," he thought it was best to let me pass as a poor subject. I honored his judgment.

7. As to getting rich by publishing gospel truth in the shape of books and tracts, I may remark that I seem to be the first person who has got rich out of it, for most engaged in it have complained of poverty, and begged for aid, and I have published tracts, etc., cheaper than any one else in the country before me, and the presumptions would seem to be against the conclusion; and further, during the last three years, I have never raised the prices of my books, though the expenses of manufacturing them have doubled, and other publishers have advanced their prices in proportion. And I question whether I have made one dollar of clear profit on all the books I have published during the past two years, over and above the expense and labor involved in their issue. I cannot tell exactly how this is, but this is my best judgment of the matter, although I have no accounts to show it accurately.

8. I offered to sell out the business of publishing books, and every stereotype plate I had, to the Publication Society, for $1200, reserving, however, the privilege of having what books I wanted to sell or give away in my travels, at cost, and they did not think the property worth the money, and declined accepting the proposal. These plates included the whole of my Bible Student's Library.

9. As regards my present prospects and position, I have gone into the work of publishing once more, because I saw the work must be done. When I sold out the plates of my Tracts for $500, I invested the money where it would be ready to be used in the spreading of truth when needed. When I sold out my stock of tracts and books on hand, I had a few hundred dollars which were needed and used to purchase the exemption of two or three young preachers who were conscripted. A legacy of over $400 from a friend who fell asleep in Christ, and various other donations, have replaced this, and proved that lending to the Lord was safe business. As I enter upon the work again, I have placed these funds in stock again, for the Lord's glory. I have now a small stock of books on hand, but am out of several kinds. I have some paper, enough for present needs, and am owing between $400 and $500 for these, which I shall pay when I get the money. I have not enough now.

I have stereotype plates which are of some value. I shall not say how much their value is, because other people, perhaps, do not think they are worth as much as I do. I think they are worth pretty nearly their weight in gold to publish truth from. But the Type Founder would only give fifteen cents per lb. for them; and if they could not be used for publishing, this is their only value. But he cannot have them to melt up, nor any one else at present, as I mean to use them more, provided I can find any one who will buy or read the books I publish.

10. If any one wishes to be informed of my exact state, I can soon show him, if he will call at the "Scriptural Tract Repository," 19 Lindall street, Boston, Mass., in the rear of the Boston post office. In a few cases of type, some stereotype and electrotype plates, some piles of printing paper, and some books, bound and not bound, and also in the volumes that compose my private library at Lawrence, and a few small debts, not easily collected, he will find every dollar that I can rightly call my own. He may estimate the value for himself, and make me a good offer for it if he dare, binding himself to keep up the book publishing business at the rates I do, and then make all the money out of it that he can.

11. I have plenty of credit, and for ten years past have never lacked much for ready means. I have had hundreds and even thousands lying in my hands at times, but it was not mine. It was property for which I was responsible, and which I must pay over when it was called for. I have such funds in my possession now, upon which I pay the customary interest. By some means, certain persons have sometimes had confidence enough in me to place their money in my hands unsolicited, to be used or cared for, instead of placing it in banks or elsewhere; and hundreds of times I should have been penniless and in straits, had not God in this or some other way provided for me. Well do I remember the time when myself and wife knelt in our upper chamber in the city of New York in 1854, and asked of the Lord for money in our needs, and then I went out to the post office and found twenty dollars from a man I had never seen, to be used for him in the purchase of rare and expensive books, and from that day to this I have hardly passed a week without having some of that man's money in my hands, with the privilege of using it myself till I had the opportunity to use it for him. Such funds are in my hands today; but I have not a dollar that I can rightfully call my own, outside of the plates and stock on hand in the Repository; that, I think, is worth a great deal more than one would probably want to pay me for it.

12. As it regards houses and lands, I own, perhaps, about as much land as Abraham did—a third share in a plot some three rods square, the place where my grandparents, aunt, father, and three brothers sleep the sleep of death; and also two-thirds of a mortgage on an old house and lot, left by my father, the whole of which I tried to sell for thirty dollars, but no man would buy it.

When we lived in Rochester, N. Y., as we could not afford to pay $10 per month for rent, I bought a house; and bought it only because by so doing I could pay half the price in books. So I purchased my first real estate;—a house with three little rooms on the floor, a couple of attics where the chickens had roosted, a wet cellar where the pigs had run, and a shed adjoining it where a horse had been stabled. We lived there till my health failed, fixed up the house a little, came off, waited a year or two, got cheated out of the rent, went back, and sold it for between five and six hundred dollars. So much for the only house I ever owned.

13. A friend in Providence, R. I., knowing of my ill health, kindly offered to house us for a year, if we would come to Providence, where the climate was more mild: and so we came. He first hired a house, then bought one, in part with our money, for about $1350, and put us in it. At length he was under the necessity of selling it, and so we borrowed some more money, and my wife sold the piano she had bought to teach music on for a living, and took the house into her own hands. She kept it till we left Providence, and then sold it out for about what it cost, and we came on to Boston. We lived in Charlestown and Boston two years, part of the time in a house where the sun never shone in the rooms the family lived in during the time we were there, until my wife got the consumption; and then we fled to Lawrence to save her life, found a house to sell, none to rent, and bought it for my wife, paying $1800 for it, which I borrowed out of a Boston bank, and paid again in due time. There my wife, somewhat improved in health, my poor, old, lame, half-blind mother, my sister, and three little ones who call me father, live; and, for a wonder, I have been here yesterday and to-day. To-morrow I am off again. I live in Boston, in the "Scriptural Tract Repository," where I eat, drink, sleep, and work, keeping bachelor's hall to save paying my board, and living away from my family to avoid the expenses of car fare, eating potatoes, hasty pudding, and hard tack, with good relish; and working like a beaver to prepare tracts for folks who probably sit down to turkey and roast beef and worry about my getting rich! And when I asked my wife this week if she would sell her house if needful, and put it into books and tracts, she said, "Yes."

So we go on, and if any one wants to know how we live, just call and see. If they want to know how many dresses my wife has, or whether my children have clothes fit to go to meeting, or any other matters that busy-bodies are usually interested in, let them write to Mrs. H. L. Hastings, Box 515, Lawrence, Mass., on these, or any other matters connected with her private business. If any one wishes to investigate my private business, they can find me most of the time at my Repository in Boston, except when I am away preaching.

If this letter reaches the eye of our Canadian friend and well-wisher, I have only to say if he had sent his full name and address, he would doubtless have enjoyed the reading of a very excellent and interesting letter, much more so I presume than this, from Mrs. Hastings to "E. B. of Montreal," which discussed these matters, I presume, with much force, but which probably has long since gone to the Postmaster General's office.

With thankfulness to God for all temporal prosperity, with malice toward none, and charity for all, I subscribe myself,

A servant of Christ and his church,

H. L. Hastings.

The President's Faith.—President Johnson recently received a delegation of Mississippians, and said to them in conversation:

"If I know my own heart, my highest and only ambition is to be an instrument in the hands of a higher power in restoring the government to its rightful condition by the speediest method consistent with safety. I am not a candidate, and can afford to do right. Of course, in a work of such magnitude, difficult and unlooked for problems may arise; but we shall find that by doing one thing at a time, most of these knotty questions will solve and adjust themselves. Often my plans disappoint me, but I have learned to do in my politics as I do in my religion—when my facts fail, I rely on my faith, and my faith is still strong that all will be well."

NEW HAMPSHIRE QUAR. CONF.

This conference commenced according to notice. Preachers present during the meeting were the following: J. Couch, J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, Wm. Sutherland, J. Harvey, J. Morrill, Henry M. Bryant, D. Leavitt, J. Parsons, and A. W. Sibley.

There was preaching during the meeting by J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, J. Knowles, J. Couch, and A. W. Sibley. Many brethren from the adjacent towns came to the meeting, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, and found it warm within, although very cold without. The Lord was present and some found peace. Thank his Name.

A business session of the conference was held Saturday, P. M., after the regular service from the stand, Eld. J. Knowles, Lake Village, N. H., presiding. After prayer by Bro. J. G. Smith, and some remarks about various matters, on motion, Bro. Henry M. Bryant was received as a member of the conference.

Adjourned till the call of the "Board."

A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. W. Thomas.

Bro. Grant:—The work of God has commenced in New Bedford. Yesterday we had a powerful time all day, and in the evening the power of God was felt. Some backsliders started anew, and one sister arose and said that Bro. Sam'l G. Gidley, who lived in Dartmouth, seven miles from the city of New Bedford, had been struck both deaf and dumb, and requested the Elders of the church to pray for him, that he might be healed. We talked the matter over, and Bro. Tripp, who is uncle to the brother afflicted, told us that he would carry us over the next day. We arrived at the house of Bro. Gidley about ten o'clock this morning, and found him prostrated upon the bed, both deaf and speechless; and when we inquired, we found that he had been in that condition for six days. After a few minutes, he raised himself up and saw Bro. Hook, Bro. Piper, and myself, and then motioned for a slate and wrote the following words:

"Three servants of God. It will all soon be well."

We were all strangers to him. He also wrote the following:

"There is a balm in Gilead; there is a great Physician. Pray, brothers in Christ, pray."

When asked if he felt distressed, he wrote—"No, the power of God is on me. Bros., I feel it. I know it. Satan must be conquered."

We saw that he had the same power now as when he was on the earth. God commenced to work. Bro. Piper read the fifth chapter of James, anointed him with oil in the name of the Lord, and then prayed. Bro. Hook and myself followed him in prayer. Before we had finished pleading with God, he sprang from the bed, shouting and praising God at the top of his voice. Such praising I never heard before. When asked if he could hear, he said,

"Yes, I am perfectly whole." Glory to God and the Lamb for ever!

I have been urged to write these few lines for the Crisis. This miracle has been wrought before several witnesses, and had I space I would give their names. O that this may be the beginning of a greater work. Pray for us.

Joseph W. Thomas.

New Bedford, Jan. 15th, 1866.

From Bro. J. Porter.

Bro. Grant:—The year 1866 having come in upon me with so much majestic importance, as no year in all my history has ever woven, '66, '67, '68 are to me as Noah, Daniel, and Job are to the Scriptures of the Old Testament. We have some signs of waking up a little in Danville. Character is fast finding its own place. The wicked shall do wickedly, and the sleeper will sleep on.

Obituaries.

Caverly. Died in Tuftonborough, N. H., Dec. 27th, 1865, Bro. Samuel Caverly, aged seventy-two years.

His health had been failing for a year or more. Had been a professor of the religion of Christ for some thirty years, and was a deacon for a number of years in the Christian church. In 1843 he embraced the blessed truth of the Lord's soon coming. The religion of our brother was one of principle as well as feeling, so that the pressure of business did not prevent him from reading the Bible, or from family prayer; and the poor were not forgotten by him. When his brethren had expenses to bear he was ready to step forward and do his part. In this death a companion, children, and a large circle of friends are left to feel the loss of a kind husband, a good father, and a true friend. May the death of our brother be sanctified to the good of the living. J. G. Smith.

Brooks. Died in New Durham, N. H., Dec. 9th, 1865, of diphtheria, Eliza Eften, only daughter of Charles and Mary R. Brooks, aged five years, two months, and twenty-seven days.

J. G. Smith.

Beneath the cold earth our Nellie is sleeping,
And we are left here for her to be weeping;
But we are exhorted for her not to weep,
For we have a hope that in Christ she doth sleep.

S. F. B.

Rawson. In Jamaica, Vt., Oct. 30th, of typhoid fever and pneumonia, Henry O. Rawson, son of Lyman and Charlotte Rawson, aged twenty-seven years, seven months and five days.

He was a fine young man, beloved by all who knew him. He leaves a wife to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband, yet we mourn not as those without hope. J. K. Bellows.

Corliss. Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 22, 1865, little Freddie, only son of M. W. and Octavia Corliss.

He sojourned with us fifteen months and fourteen days, and then laid down to sleep till the morning of the resurrection. Discourse by the writer. J. Lenfest.

Adams. Died in Newfane, Vt., Dec. 30th, Mrs. William Adams, aged sixty-seven.

Also in Dover, Nov. 17th, Elinor, wife of Azeph Adams, aged thirty-six.

Also in Dover, Nov. 24th, Dana C. Adams, son of Azeph and Elinor Adams, aged six years.

☞ It is the custom of Rome for the cardinals to write every year to the Catholic emperors and kings, to offer the compliments and congratulations suggested by the return of Christmas and the opening of a new year. The Pope has forbidden the members of the Sacred College to pay this mark of respect to the Emperor of Mexico, so a London paper says.

The Plymouth Sentinel of the 12th inst. reports that during the intense cold weather large numbers of the fish inhabiting the waters of Cape Cod Bay perished from cold, myriads of which, consisting of sea bass, black fish, lobsters, etc., washed ashore in that locality, strewing the coast for miles around with their frozen carcasses.

☞ The English journals tell us of another article from which paper is manufactured with success. It grows in Spain and is called Atocha or esparto grass. So great is the demand for it that the price has risen to over twenty dollars a ton.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Queenstown 7th instant.

There has been a revolt on the part of two Spanish regiments under Gen. Prim, but it makes no progress, and the insurgents were being pursued to the mountains.

The Fenian trials were concluded at Cork on the 2d inst. Several more prisoners had been tried, convicted and sentenced.

Furious gales have prevailed around the English coast, causing many marine disasters.

The Emperor of Austria sent the order of St. Stephen of Hungary for the French Prince Imperial. The alliance between France and Austria is spoken of.

The Pope received the congratulation of the French army at Rome on the 1st inst. He returned thanks, and said it would probably be the last time he could bestow his blessings upon them. He feared the enemies of the church would go to Rome after the departure of the French troops.

The Times anticipates that by next January the Emperor Napoleon will have withdrawn all the troops from Mexico and from Rome.

Napoleon gave his usual New Year's to the diplomatic bodies. He expressed happiness that the past year had strengthened the bonds of peace and given an augury for a long day of peace and prosperity for the world.

Later from Mexico.

The Sociedad of the 3d inst. says: "It is to be feared that trouble will occur at Matamoras, not with the government of the United States, but with Federal troops, who have openly sympathized with the Juarists and given them material aid."

The reinforcements reaching Mexico from Europe during last week in December numbered twelve hundred.

An earthquake was severely felt at Orizaba; much damage was done, and several lives were lost. There was a severe shock at Puebla, and a slight one in the city of Mexico.

A Havana correspondent says the latest advices are unfavorable to the Imperial cause. The inhabitants of Monterey feel no security in Maximilian's Mexican troops, and were leaving the city enmasse. Over 30,000 are said to have left in three days. The merchants are sending their goods and valuables to San Luis.

News from the Department of Sinaloa is also gloomy for the Imperialists. Mazatlan alone remains in the hands of the Imperialists, and provisions for that city must pass through the revenue tax offices of the Republican General Corona. On the 31st ult. a guerrilla force of 300, among whom were said to be several Americans, captured a place named San Juan, in Durango. After having completely destroyed it, they left to attack the town of San Miguel Del Mesquintol. The guerrillas were headed by two natives. A French-Mexican force had left Durango to attack the band.

The Imperialists claim a victory at the town of Comittipa in the State of Puebla. They also claim a victory over the Republican Gen. Regneles, who attacked Augangos with over 8000 troops. On the 16th ult. another place named Macavatio was attacked by Regneles, but he is said to have been repulsed.

The Indians of Sahacaba had defeated the Imperialists under Lopez in Yucatan. They then attacked Senotillo, but were repulsed. The Lieutenant of Engineers was killed and the Empress sent a sum of money to his widow. Lopez was to be tried by court martial. Various other engagements with varied success on either side had taken place.

The conspirators to assassassinate the Minister of War had been arrested at the very moment of carrying the scheme into operation.

DOMESTIC.

A Princely Domain.—The country domestic establishment only of the Duke of Devonshire would occupy one of our largest counties. The park immediately surrounding the palace is eleven miles in circumference, and contains 3000 acres. The principal garden for vegetables, fruits, green-houses, etc., is twenty-five acres. There are thirty green-houses, each from fifty to seventy-five feet long. Three or four of these contain nothing but pine apples; others contain nothing but melons and cucumbers. One peach tree on the glass wall measures fifty-one feet in width and fifteen in height, and bears one thousand peaches. It is the largest in the world. The grape houses, five or six in all, are six hundred feet long—and such grapes! There are pine-apples weighing ten or fifteen pounds each. One green-house has only figs; another only mushrooms. But what shall be said of the great conservatory, filled with every variety of tropical plants? It is one of the wonders of the world. It covers an acre of ground, is one hundred feet high, of oval shape, and cost $500,000. It is heated by steam and hot water pipes, which, in all, are six miles in length. The apparatus consumes six hundred tons of coal in a year. There are banana trees twenty feet high, with clusters of fruit; sugar cane, coffee trees, bamboo, and in short, every tropical plant that can be named. Several of the palm trees are from fifty to sixty feet high. The smoke of the immense fire underneath is carried in pipes under ground to an outlet in the woods. The coal is brought in a tunnel six hundred yards under ground. One fountain throws a jet of water to the height of two hundred seventy-five feet.

☞ A secret congress of the Roman Catholic hierarchy has been held in Dublin. Twenty-six archbishops and bishops took part in the mysterious proceedings, which, it is supposed, had reference to certain matters of a semi-political character.

☞ A fact highly honorable to typos is disclosed by a late report of the New York Inspector of State Prisons; while all other occupations are represented in their large number of convicts, there is not a single printer.

Notices.

A New Enterprize.

I propose, if the Lord will, to issue a sheet about the size of the Crisis, filled with new tracts, during this present month of January, 1866, and afterwards as often as once a month, if practicable. It will be a newspaper in form, but not in fact, as it will be printed with wide columns, and after it is printed and scattered, each tract will be also printed separately, in the usual form.

REASONS FOR IT.

1. I have on hand large quantities of matter, thousands of pages of reported sermons by H. L. Hastings, Edwin Burnham and others; multitudes of choice tracts and extracts, hymns, tunes, etc., etc., enough to fill a weekly paper, I presume, for a year, and too numerous, by far, to intrude on any existing periodical.

2. When these tracts are printed, I want to save them for future publication, and hence I wish them in broad columns, so I can preserve them stereotyped, in book form, for future use.

3. In ordinary papers, choice articles cannot be obtained and circulated separately, and sometimes matters of little general interest occupy large portions of a paper. In this, all such matters are intended to be omitted, and only articles of permanent value are to be issued.

4. Many persons will read a newspaper when they would not read a tract, even if it contained the same matter; and I wish to reach them with the gospel message.

5. Many persons want to see all the new tracts that are issued, but it is too troublesome and expensive for them to write separately for each one, and this arrangement will give them a steady supply of samples, so they can see what is issued, and know what to order.

6. In tracts, about one-fourth of the paper is used for the white margins, and more than half the labor is expended in folding, stitching, and trimming them. This I save by the newspaper form, and can publish cheaper than in any other way, considering the amount of matter published.

7. I want to put this sheet outside of all sectarian boundaries and limits, among missions, Freedmen, Sunday schools and churches, thus spreading the glad tidings of the grace of God; and I propose to fill up this sheet with sermons, exhortations, hymns, music, expositions of Scripture, records of God's good providence over his people, notes of discourses, and reading matter for young and old, great and small.

8. Moving in this matter without the knowledge, counsel, or help of any one but the Lord, having only sought his guidance, remembering that if God be pleased the work will not be in vain, I shall strive to conduct this publication with a single eye to his glory; and though the responsibility is great, and the eye of reason does not see the way through future difficulties, yet faith declares "the Lord will provide."

The title of the periodical will be

THE CHRISTIAN.

I know of no better name than this, and pray that its character may correspond with the title chosen.

TERMS.

1. It will be sent for 60 cents per volume, of 12 numbers, to any address in the United States or British Provinces.

2. Ten copies will be sent for $5. To the Provinces, the price will be $6 for ten copies.

3. Persons ordering ten or more copies for free distribution in Missions, Hospitals, Sunday schools, among Freedmen, and in similar localities, can have ten copies for $4.

The Lord's poor shall have The Christian free, so long as we can send it.

WHEN ORDERED IN ADVANCE,

Copies of any single number will be sent out at cost of paper and printing, no charge being made for the type-setting, editing, and similar expenses. They will be sent by mail, 100 copies for $3, post-paid, and by express, 100 copies for $2.50.

Who will order 1000 copies of the first number for $25? Who will order 400 copies for $10? Who will order 33 copies for $1? Who will order 10 copies for 30 cents? Who will order 5 copies, or more, for nothing? All shall be supplied who send. Those who choose to may send stamps to prepay postage. But do not delay sending, as when once the printing is done, and the edition scattered, no more can be had at any price. This rate affords about FORTY PAGES OF TRACT MATTER FOR ONE CENT.

WHO WILL HELP?

I invite the friends of Christ, wherever they are, to co-operate in the circulation of this periodical. 1. Pray for it. 2. Work for it. 3. Subscribe for it. It will be issued as regularly as practicable, though from the nature of its contents, it will be in season at any time, and hence we shall not be forced to print without due preparation, as would be the case with a more frequent issue.

Any preacher, or any one else, can have packages of ten or twenty copies sent freely and gladly to use as specimens in securing subscribers.

WRITE IMMEDIATELY if you wish them, as otherwise you will be too late. Those who wish to receive it regularly can send their subscriptions at once, as by so doing I shall avoid prepaying the postage on it. And they can pay it at the office where the paper is received, quarterly, in advance.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST NUMBER.

For the first number, among others, the following original articles are prepared, and will be published, so far as space will permit:

1. Fishers of Men; a sermon by H. L. Hastings, phonographically reported.
2. De Gruchy and De Carterette, a Story of Grace. A deeply interesting account of the conversation of two hardened infidels.
3. Sold Cheap. A plain talk to young men, by H. L. H.
4. Wild Oats. A plain talk to young men.
5. The Good Master. A large print tract for Freedmen and mission circulation, by H. L. H.
6. Marks, Good and Bad. Another large print tract for Freedmen, by H. L. H.
7. Various other original or carefully selected articles.
8. Original poetry, by H. L. H.
9. Original music, by H. L. H.
10. Book notices, Prospectus, and sundry other matters which cannot now be specified.

This is the programme of the new enterprise. I submit it to the brethren and friends, praying for the blessing of God, and hoping for the prayers of his people.

Please to direct all letters, orders, and remittances to

Notice.

Some nine or ten lots of ground were spoken for last fall to erect board tents with at Alton Bay, and as it would be a saving both of lumber and time in erecting, to send a schedule of the lumber that the friends want, if they will send now to Mr. Jeremiah Woodman, of Alton, N. H., he will get out what is wanted, and have it ready and delivered when specified. J. G. Smith.

Notice.

We will hold a series of meetings in Lawrence, Mass., corner of Essex and Lawrence streets, commencing Sunday, January 28th.

S. S. Brewer,
Dr. A. Dixon.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at North Barnsted, N. H., Thursday evening, Feb. 1st, and hold day and evening and over the following Sabbath.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. Dixon—Yes.
F. A. Smith—E. Horner's $2.50 was received and acknowledged.
Hiram Choate—Have paid to No. 512.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 533. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468 if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

lion followed, and next, glory be to the God of justice and liberty! universal emancipation. This Scott family are pure Africans. The father is dead. The widow and two children now live here, to call on whom it was a pleasure to me. They are poor, but now free, industrious, and happy.

For the World's Crisis.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

A few months ago, a letter dated at Montreal, and signed "E. B.," was received by my wife in my absence, in which the author very freely expressed his views on this wise: He had been informed in some place in Boston, that I was making money, getting rich by publishing books and tracts, and was living in considerable splendor, owned houses, etc., etc. and was in a state of very great prosperity; all of which seemed to be a matter of considerable concern and regret to him. As many others may have heard the same statement from the same source, I propose to offer a few words of explanation, and more especially as my wife, wishing to spare my feelings, by the advice of a friend, destroyed the letter, writing an answer to "E. B., Montreal," which, doubtless never reached him, and she only a little while ago informed me of the facts in the case. Concerning all this I have to say,

1. If I appear before the public as a beggar, it is perfectly fair that they should search my pockets first, and see what there is in them. But if I ask no alms, and earn my own living, it is no particular concern of the good people whether I am rich or poor.

2. There is no living person, except my wife, that knows how rich I am, or how poor, how much I have, or owe, or have owed to me, and consequently no man but myself can state truly any facts in the case.

3. I make no pretensions to poverty.—There are poor preachers enough, and enough who profess to be poor, without me; men who cannot preach a sermon without so much pay, and who keep up a perpetual grumble about their salaries, their living, or something else; and are always concocting some device in the shape of collections, subscriptions, and donations, by which men are desired to help them forward after a godly sort, without counting me in among that class.

4. Since the time when, in the year 1858, I requested the church where I labored to burn up their subscription paper, as henceforth I intended to trust in God, I have been so cared for by the good Lord, that I could not consistently dishonor him, and the faith I profess, by repining, or complaining of my poverty, when my Lord hath said, "All things are yours," and has promised to withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.

5. I think the man does not live who ever heard me say I must have so much money, or I could not preach to the people the word of God; nor do I think that the man can be found who ever knew me to set a price upon my preaching before I did it, or grumble at the smallness of the gifts which men were disposed to bestow upon me afterwards. Nor do I think the man can be found who ever heard me ask a congregation or an individual for money for my own benefit, or ask any one else to ask them on my behalf.

6. As to getting rich, when I stated the facts to the United States Assessor, who wanted to tax my "income exceeding $600 per year," he thought it was best to let me pass as a poor subject. I honored his judgment.

7. As to getting rich by publishing gospel truth in the shape of books and tracts, I may remark that I seem to be the first person who has got rich out of it, for most engaged in it have complained of poverty, and begged for aid, and I have published tracts, etc., cheaper than any one else in the country before me, and the presumptions would seem to be against the conclusion; and further, during the last three years, I have never raised the prices of my books, though the expenses of manufacturing them have doubled, and other publishers have advanced their prices in proportion. And I question whether I have made one dollar of clear profit on all the books I have published during the past two years, over and above the expense and labor involved in their issue. I cannot tell exactly how this is, but this is my best judgment of the matter, although I have no accounts to show it accurately.

8. I offered to sell out the business of publishing books, and every stereotype plate I had, to the Publication Society, for $1200, reserving, however, the privilege of having what books I wanted to sell or give away in my travels, at cost, and they did not think the property worth the money, and declined accepting the proposal. These plates included the whole of my Bible Student's Library.

9. As regards my present prospects and position, I have gone into the work of publishing once more, because I saw the work must be done. When I sold out the plates of my Tracts for $500, I invested the money where it would be ready to be used in the spreading of truth when needed. When I sold out my stock of tracts and books on hand, I had a few hundred dollars which were needed and used to purchase the exemption of two or three young preachers who were conscripted. A legacy of over $400 from a friend who fell asleep in Christ, and various other donations, have replaced this, and proved that lending to the Lord was safe business. As I enter upon the work again, I have placed these funds in stock again, for the Lord's glory. I have now a small stock of books on hand, but am out of several kinds. I have some paper, enough for present needs, and am owing between $400 and $500 for these, which I shall pay when I get the money. I have not enough now.

I have stereotype plates which are of some value. I shall not say how much their value is, because other people, perhaps, do not think they are worth as much as I do. I think they are worth pretty nearly their weight in gold to publish truth from. But the Type Founder would only give fifteen cents per lb. for them; and if they could not be used for publishing, this is their only value. But he cannot have them to melt up, nor any one else at present, as I mean to use them more, provided I can find any one who will buy or read the books I publish.

10. If any one wishes to be informed of my exact state, I can soon show him, if he will call at the "Scriptural Tract Repository," 19 Lindall street, Boston, Mass., in the rear of the Boston post office. In a few cases of type, some stereotype and electrotype plates, some piles of printing paper, and some books, bound and not bound, and also in the volumes that compose my private library at Lawrence, and a few small debts, not easily collected, he will find every dollar that I can rightly call my own. He may estimate the value for himself, and make me a good offer for it if he dare, binding himself to keep up the book publishing business at the rates I do, and then make all the money out of it that he can.

11. I have plenty of credit, and for ten years past have never lacked much for ready means. I have had hundreds and even thousands lying in my hands at times, but it was not mine. It was property for which I was responsible, and which I must pay over when it was called for. I have such funds in my possession now, upon which I pay the customary interest. By some means, certain persons have sometimes had confidence enough in me to place their money in my hands unsolicited, to be used or cared for, instead of placing it in banks or elsewhere; and hundreds of times I should have been penniless and in straits, had not God in this or some other way provided for me. Well do I remember the time when myself and wife knelt in our upper chamber in the city of New York in 1854, and asked of the Lord for money in our needs, and then I went out to the post office and found twenty dollars from a man I had never seen, to be used for him in the purchase of rare and expensive books, and from that day to this I have hardly passed a week without having some of that man's money in my hands, with the privilege of using it myself till I had the opportunity to use it for him. Such funds are in my hands today; but I have not a dollar that I can rightfully call my own, outside of the plates and stock on hand in the Repository; that, I think, is worth a great deal more than one would probably want to pay me for it.

12. As it regards houses and lands, I own, perhaps, about as much land as Abraham did—a third share in a plot some three rods square, the place where my grandparents, aunt, father, and three brothers sleep the sleep of death; and also two-thirds of a mortgage on an old house and lot, left by my father, the whole of which I tried to sell for thirty dollars, but no man would buy it.

When we lived in Rochester, N. Y., as we could not afford to pay $10 per month for rent, I bought a house; and bought it only because by so doing I could pay half the price in books. So I purchased my first real estate;—a house with three little rooms on the floor, a couple of attics, where the chickens had roosted, a wet cellar where the pigs had run, and a shed adjoining it where a horse had been stabled. We lived there till my health failed; fixed up the house a little, came off, waited a year or two, got cheated out of the rent, went back, and sold it for between five and six hundred dollars. So much for the only house I ever owned.

13. A friend in Providence, R. I., knowing of my ill health, kindly offered to house us for a year, if we would come to Providence, where the climate was more mild: and so we came. He first hired a house, then bought one, in part with our money, for about $1350, and put us in it. At length he was under the necessity of selling it, and so we borrowed some more money, and my wife sold the piano she had bought to teach music on for a living, and took the house into her own hands. She kept it till we left Providence, and then sold it out for about what it cost, and we came on to Boston. We lived in Charlestown and Boston two years, part of the time in a house where the sun never shone in the rooms the family lived in during the time we were there, until my wife got the consumption; and then we fled to Lawrence to save her life, found a house to sell, none to rent, and bought it for my wife, paying $1800 for it, which I borrowed out of a Boston bank, and paid again in due time. There my wife, somewhat improved in health, my poor, old, lame, half-blind mother, my sister, and three little ones who call me father, live; and, for a wonder, I have been here yesterday and today. To-morrow I am off again. I live in Boston, in the "Scriptural Tract Repository," where I eat, drink, sleep, and work, keeping bachelor's hall to save paying my board, and living away from my family to avoid the expenses of car fare, eating potatoes, hasty pudding, and hard tack, with good relish; and working like a beaver to prepare tracts for folks who probably sit down to turkey and roast beef, and worry about my getting rich. And when I asked my wife this week if she would sell her house if needful, and put it into books and tracts, she said, "Yes."

So we go on, and if any one wants to know how we live, just call and see. If they want to know how many dresses my wife has, or whether my children have clothes fit to go to meeting, or any other matters that busy-bodies are usually interested in, let them write to Mrs. H. L. Hastings, Box 515, Lawrence, Mass., on these, or any other matters connected with her private business. If any one wishes to investigate my private business, they can find me most of the time at my Repository in Boston, except when I am away preaching.

If this letter reaches the eye of our Canadian friend and well-wisher, I have only to say if he had sent his full name and address, he would doubtless have enjoyed the reading of a very excellent and interesting letter, much more so I presume than this, from Mrs. Hastings to "E. B. of Montreal," which discussed these matters, I presume, with much force, but which probably has long since gone to the Postmaster General's office.

With thankfulness to God for all temporal prosperity, with malice toward none, and charity for all, I subscribe myself,

A servant of Christ and his church,

H. L. HASTINGS.

THE PRESIDENT'S FAITH.—President Johnson recently received a delegation of Mississippians, and said to them in conversation:

"If I know my own heart, my highest and only ambition is to be an instrument in the hands of a higher power in restoring the government to its rightful condition by the speediest method consistent with safety. I am not a candidate, and can afford to do right. Of course, in a work of such magnitude, difficult and unlooked for problems may arise, but we shall find that by doing one thing at a time, most of these knotty questions will solve and adjust themselves. Often my plans disappoint me, but I have learned to do in my politics as I do in my religion—when my facts fail, I rely on my faith, and my faith is still strong that all will be well."

NEW HAMPSHIRE QUAR. CONF.

This conference commenced according to notice. Preachers present during the meeting were the following: J. Couch, J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, S. S. Mooney, Wm. Sutherland, J. Harvey, J. Morrill, Henry M. Bryant, D. Leavitt, J. Parsons, and A. W. Sibley.

There was preaching during the meeting by J. G. Smith, C. S. Emerson, J. Knowles, J. Couch, and A. W. Sibley. Many brethren from the adjacent towns came to the meeting, notwithstanding the severity of the weather, and found it warm within, although very cold without. The Lord was present and some found peace. Thank his Name.

A business session of the conference was held Saturday, P. M., after the regular service from the stand, Eld. J. Knowles, Lake Village, N. H., presiding. After prayer by Bro. J. G. Smith, and some remarks about various matters, on motion, Bro. Henry M. Bryant was received as a member of the conference.

Adjourned till the call of the "Board."

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. W. Thomas.

BRO. GRANT:—The work of God has commenced in New Bedford. Yesterday we had a powerful time all day, and in the evening the power of God was felt. Some backsliders started anew, and one sister arose and said that Bro. Sam'l G. Gidley, who lived in Dartmouth, seven miles from the city of New Bedford, had been struck both deaf and dumb, and requested the Elders of the church to pray for him, that he might be healed. We talked the matter over, and Bro. Tripp, who is uncle to the brother afflicted, told us that he would carry us over the next day. We arrived at the house of Bro. Gidley about ten o'clock this morning, and found him prostrated upon the bed, both deaf and speechless; and when we inquired, we found that he had been in that condition for six days. After a few minutes, he raised himself up and saw Bro. Hook, Bro. Piper, and myself, and then motioned for a slate and wrote the following words:

"Three servants of God. It will all soon be well."

We were all strangers to him. He also wrote the following:

"There is a balm in Gilead; there is a great Physician. Pray, brothers in Christ, pray."

When asked if he felt distressed, he wrote—

"No, the power of God is on me. Bros., I feel it. I know it. Satan must be conquered."

We saw that he had the same power now as when he was on the earth. God commenced to work. Bro. Piper read the fifth chapter of James, anointed him with oil in the name of the Lord, and then prayed. Bro. Hook and myself followed him in prayer. Before we had finished pleading with God, he sprang from the bed, shouting and praising God at the top of his voice. Such praising I never heard before. When asked if he could hear, he said,

"Yes, I am perfectly whole." Glory to God and the Lamb for ever!

I have been urged to write these few lines for the Crisis. This miracle has been wrought before several witnesses, and had I space I would give their names. O that this may be the beginning of a greater work. Pray for us.

BRO. GRANT:—The year 1866 having come in upon me with so much majestic importance, as no year in all my history has ever woven, '66, '67, '68 are to me as Noah, Daniel, and Job are to the Scriptures of the Old Testament. We have some signs of waking up a little in Danville. Character is fast finding its own place. The wicked shall do wickedly, and the sleeper will sleep on.

Obituaries.

CAVERLY. Died in Tuftonborough, N. H., Dec. 27th, 1865, Bro. Samuel Caverly, aged seventy-two years.

His health had been failing for a year or more. Had been a professor of the religion of Christ for some thirty years, and was a deacon for a number of years in the Christian church. In 1843 he embraced the blessed truth of the Lord's soon coming. The religion of our brother was one of principle as well as feeling, so that the pressure of business did not prevent him from reading the Bible, or from family prayer; and the poor were not forgotten by him. When his brethren had expenses to bear he was ready to step forward and do his part. In this death a companion, children, and a large circle of friends are left to feel the loss of a kind husband, a good father, and a true friend. May the death of our brother be sanctified to the good of the living.

J. G. SMITH.

BROOKS. Died in New Durham, N. H., Dec. 9th, 1865, of diphtheria, Eliza Ellen, only daughter of Charles and Mary R. Brooks, aged five years, two months, and twenty-seven days.

J. G. SMITH.

Beneath the cold earth our Nellie is sleeping,
And we are left here for her to be weeping;
But we are exhorted for her not to weep,
For we have a hope that in Christ she doth sleep.

S. F. S.

RAWSON. In Jamaica, Vt., Oct. 30th, of typhoid fever and pneumonia, Henry O. Rawson, son of Lyman and Charlotte Rawson, aged twenty-seven years, seven months and five days.

He was a fine young man, beloved by all who knew him. He leaves a wife to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband, yet we mourn not as those without hope.

CORLISS. Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 22, 1865, little Freddie, only son of M. W. and Octavia Corliss.

He sojourned with us fifteen months and fourteen days, and then laid down to sleep till the morning of the resurrection. Discourse by the writer.

ADAMS. Died in Newfane, Vt., Dec. 30th, Mrs. William Adams, aged sixty-seven.

Also in Dover, Nov. 17th, Elinor, wife of Aseph Adams, aged thirty-six.

Also in Dover, Nov. 24th, Dana C. Adams, son of Aseph and Elinor Adams, aged six years.

☞ It is the custom of Rome for the cardinals to write every year to the Catholic emperors and kings, to offer the compliments and congratulations suggested by the return of Christmas and the opening of a new year. The Pope has forbidden the members of the Sacred College to pay this mark of respect to the Emperor of Mexico, so a London paper says.

The Plymouth Sentinel of the 12th inst. reports that during the intense cold weather large numbers of the fish inhabiting the waters of Cape Cod Bay perished from cold, myriads of which, consisting of sea bass, black fish, lobsters, etc., washed ashore in that locality, strewing the coast for miles around with their frozen carcasses.

☞ The English journals tell us of another article from which paper is manufactured with success. It grows in Spain and is called Atocha or esparto grass. So great is the demand for it, that the price has risen to over twenty dollars a ton.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Queenstown 7th instant.

There has been a revolt on the part of two Spanish regiments under Gen. Prim, but it makes no progress, and the insurgents were being pursued to the mountains.

The Fenian trials were concluded at Cork on the 2d inst. Several more prisoners had been tried, convicted and sentenced.

Furious gales have prevailed around the English coast, causing many marine disasters.

The Emperor of Austria sent the order of St. Stephen of Hungary for the French Prince Imperial. The alliance between France and Austria is spoken of.

The Pope received the congratulation of the French army at Rome, on the 1st inst. He returned thanks, and said it would probably be the last time he could bestow his blessings upon them. He feared the enemies of the church would go to Rome after the departure of the French troops.

The Times anticipates that by next January the Emperor Napoleon will have withdrawn all the troops from Mexico and from Rome.

Napoleon gave his usual New Year's to the diplomatic bodies. He expressed happiness that the past year had strengthened the bonds of peace and given an augury for a long day of peace and prosperity for the world.

Later from Mexico.

The Sociedad of the 3d inst. says: "It is to be feared that trouble will occur at Matamoras, not with the government of the United States, but with Federal troops, who have openly sympathised with the Juarists and given them material aid."

The reinforcements reaching Mexico from Europe during last week in December numbered twelve hundred.

An earthquake was severely felt at Orizaba; much damage was done, and several lives were lost. There was a severe shock at Puebla, and a slight one in the city of Mexico.

A Havana correspondent says the latest advices are unfavorable to the Imperial cause. The inhabitants of Monterey feel no security in Maximilian's Mexican troops, and were leaving the city en masse. Over 30,000 are said to have left in three days. The merchants are sending their goods and valuables to San Luis.

News from the Department of Sinaloa is also gloomy for the Imperialists. Mazatlan alone remains in the hands of the Imperialists, and provisions for that city must pass through the revenue tax offices of the Republican General Corona. On the 31st ult. a guerrilla force of 300, among whom were said to be several Americans, captured a place named San Juan, in Durango. After having completely destroyed it, they left to attack the town of San Miguel Del Mesquintol. The guerrillas were headed by two natives. A French-Mexican force had left Durango to attack the band.

The Imperialists claim a victory at the town of Comittipa in the State of Puebla. They also claim a victory over the Republican Gen. Regneles, who attacked Augangos with over 8000 troops. On the 16th ult. another place named Macavatio was attacked by Regneles, but he is said to have been repulsed.

The Indians of Sahacaba had defeated the Imperialists under Lopez in Yucatan. They then attacked Senotillo, but were repulsed. The Lieutenant of Engineers was killed and the Empress sent a sum of money to his widow. Lopez was to be tried by court martial. Various other engagements with varied success on either side had taken place.

The conspirators to assassinate the Minister of War had been arrested at the very moment of carrying the scheme into operation.

DOMESTIC.

A PRINCELY DOMAIN.—The country domestic establishment only of the Duke of Devonshire would occupy one of our largest counties. The park immediately surrounding the palace is eleven miles in circumference, and contains 3000 acres. The principal garden for vegetables, fruits, greenhouses, etc., is twenty-five acres. There are thirty green-houses, each from fifty to seventy-five feet long. Three or four of these contain nothing but pine apples; others contain nothing but melons and cucumbers. One peach tree on the glass wall measures fifty-one feet in width and fifteen in height, and bears one thousand peaches. It is the largest in the world. The grape houses, five or six in all, are six hundred feet long—and such grapes! There are pine-apples weighing ten or fifteen pounds each. One green-house has only figs; another only mushrooms. But what shall be said of the great conservatory, filled with every variety of tropical plants? It is one of the wonders of the world. It covers an acre of ground, is one hundred feet high, of oval shape, and cost $500,000. It is heated by steam and hot water pipes, which, in all, are six miles in length. The apparatus consumes six hundred tons of coal in a year. There are banana trees twenty feet high, with clusters of fruit; sugar cane, coffee trees, bamboo, and in short, every tropical plant that can be named. Several of the palm trees are from fifty to sixty feet high. The smoke of the immense fire underneath is carried in pipes under ground to an outlet in the woods. The coal is brought in a tunnel six hundred yards under ground. One fountain throws a jet of water to the height of two hundred seventy-five feet.

☞ A secret congress of the Roman Catholic hierarchy has been held in Dublin. Twenty-six archbishops and bishops took part in the mysterious proceedings, which, it is supposed, had reference to certain matters of a semi-political character.

☞ A fact highly honorable to typos is disclosed by a late report of the New York Inspector of State Prisons; while all other occupations are represented in their large number of convicts, there is not a single printer.

Notices.

A New Enterprise.

I propose, if the Lord will, to issue a sheet about the size of the Crisis, filled with new tracts, during this present month of January, 1866, and afterwards as often as once a month, if practicable. It will be a newspaper in form, but not in fact, as it will be printed with wide columns, and after it is printed and scattered, each tract will be also printed separately, in the usual form.

REASONS FOR IT.

1. I have on hand large quantities of matter, thousands of pages of reported sermons by H. L. Hastings, Edwin Burnham and others; multitudes of choice tracts and extracts, hymns, tunes, etc., etc., enough to fill a weekly paper, I presume, for a year, and too numerous, by far, to intrude on any existing periodical.

2. When these tracts are printed, I want to save them for future publication, and hence I wish them in broad columns, so I can preserve them stereotyped, in book form, for future use.

3. In ordinary papers, choice articles cannot be obtained and circulated separately, and sometimes matters of little general interest occupy large portions of a paper. In this, all such matters are intended to be omitted, and only articles of permanent value are to be issued.

4. Many persons will read a newspaper when they would not read a tract, even if it contained the same matter; and I wish to reach them with the gospel message.

5. Many persons want to see all the new tracts that are issued, but it is too troublesome and expensive for them to write separately for each one, and this arrangement will give them a steady supply of samples, so they can see what is issued, and know what to order.

6. In tracts, about one-fourth of the paper is used for the white margins, and more than half the labor is expended in folding, stitching, and trimming them. This I save by the newspaper form, and can publish cheaper than in any other way, considering the amount of matter published.

7. I want to put this sheet outside of all sectarian boundaries and limits, among missions, Freedmen, Sunday schools and churches, thus spreading the glad tidings of the grace of God; and I propose to fill up this sheet with sermons, exhortations, hymns, music, expositions of Scripture, records of God's good providence over his people, notes of discourses, and reading matter for young and old, great and small.

8. Moving in this matter without the knowledge, counsel, or help of any one but the Lord, having only sought his guidance, remembering that if God be pleased the work will not be in vain, I shall strive to conduct this publication with a single eye to his glory; and though the responsibility is great, and the eye of reason does not see the way through future difficulties, yet faith declares "the Lord will provide."

The title of the periodical will be

THE CHRISTIAN.

I know of no better name than this, and pray that its character may correspond with the title chosen.

TERMS.

1. It will be sent for 60 cents per volume, of 12 numbers, to any address in the United States or British Provinces.

2. Ten copies will be sent for $5. To the Provinces, the price will be $6 for ten copies.

3. Persons ordering ten or more copies for free distribution in Missions, Hospitals, Sunday schools, among Freedmen, and in similar localities, can have ten copies for $4.

The Lord's poor shall have The Christian free, so long as we can send it.

WHEN ORDERED IN ADVANCE,

Copies of any single number will be sent out at cost of paper and printing, no charge being made for the type-setting, editing, and similar expenses. They will be sent by mail, 100 copies for $3, post-paid, and by express, 100 copies for $2.50.

Who will order 1000 copies of the first number for $25? Who will order 400 copies for $10? Who will order 33 copies for $1? Who will order 10 copies for 30 cents? Who will order 5 copies, or more, for nothing? All shall be supplied who send. Those who choose to may send stamps to prepay postage. But do not delay sending, as when once the printing is done, and the edition scattered, no more can be had at any price. This rate affords about FORTY PAGES OF TRACT MATTER FOR ONE CENT.

WHO WILL HELP?

I invite the friends of Christ, wherever they are, to co-operate in the circulation of this periodical. 1. Pray for it. 2. Work for it. 3. Subscribe for it. It will be issued as regularly as practicable, though from the nature of its contents, it will be in season at any time, and hence we shall not be forced to print without due preparation, as would be the case with a more frequent issue.

Any preacher, or any one else, can have packages of ten or twenty copies sent freely and gladly to use as specimens in securing subscribers.

WRITE IMMEDIATELY if you wish them, as otherwise you will be too late. Those who wish to receive it regularly can send their subscriptions at once, as by so doing I shall avoid prepaying the postage on it. And they can pay it at the office where the paper is received, quarterly, in advance.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST NUMBER.

For the first number, among others, the following original articles are prepared, and will be published, so far as space will permit:

1. Fishers of Men; a sermon by H. L. Hastings, phonographically reported.
2. De Gruchy and De Carterette, a Story of Grace. A deeply interesting account of the conversation of two hardened infidels.
3. Sold Cheap. A plain talk to young men, by H. L. H.
4. Wild Oats. A plain talk to young men.
5. The Good Master. A large print tract for Freedmen and mission circulation, by H. L. H.
6. Marks, Good and Bad. Another large print tract for Freedmen, by H. L. H.
7. Various other original or carefully selected articles.
8. Original poetry, by H. L. H.
9. Original music, by H. L. H.
10. Book notices, Prospectus, and sundry other matters which cannot now be specified.

This is the programme of the new enterprise. I submit it to the brethren and friends, praying for the blessing of God, and hoping for the prayers of his people.

Please to direct all letters, orders, and remittances to

Notice.

Some nine or ten lots of ground were spoken for last fall to erect board tents with at Alton Bay, and it would be a saving both of lumber and time in bracing, to send a schedule of the lumber that the friends want, if they will send now to Mr. Jeremiah Woodman, of Alton, N. H., he will get out what is wanted, and have it ready and delivered when specified. J. G. SMITH.

Notice.

We will hold a series of meetings in Lawrence, Mass., corner of Essex and Lawrence streets, commencing Sunday, January 28th.

S. S. BREWER,
DR. A. DIXON.

Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting will commence at North Barnstead, N. H., Thursday evening, Feb. 1st, and hold day and evening and over the following Sabbath.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 528. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 469, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 469, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

"I LOVE HIM TOO."

Low on his death bed the young sufferer lay,
Just [illegible] summers had seen pass away,
Years that had passed as a dream of the night,
Which memory treasures with mournful delight.

Consumption had fastened upon his frail form,
And stricken him down in life's early storm;
Not the prayers nor the tears of his parents could save,
Nor a sister's fond love keep him from the grave.

But the spirit of Jesus drew lovingly near,
Assuaging our sorrow and calming each fear;
And we knew that our loved one was safe 'mid the storm,
Though the cold arms of death should enfold his dear form.

One morning his father, as he stood by his bed,—
"Jesus loves you, dear Bradley," he soothingly said;
Then with a sweet smile that was blessed to view,
He answered him quickly, "And I love him too."

Sweet words, how echoing, how cheering to hear,
Like strains of rich music they fell on my ear,
And though months have passed since those words were spoken,
And the dear voice is hushed in a silence unbroken;

Yet fondly I cherish their memory still,
And press like a dove my spirit doth fill,
As I think of that morn when, springing from dust,
My dear one will waken to dwell with the just.

A few days of sorrow, a few days of pain,
A few fiery trials and victories to gain,—
Oh then I shall meet my loved boy on that shore,
Where all who love Jesus will live evermore.

For the World's Crisis.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—It is with a fixed purpose to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, to have all other things in subordination, to labor with greater zeal for the meat which endureth unto life eternal, than for that which perisheth, that I enter upon this new year—1866! For many years students of prophecy have regarded this year with interest. The grant of Phocas made in 606, by which the Pope of Rome became "Universal Bishop," has led learned men to date the commencement of the 1260 years of Papal supremacy from that point, thus ending them in 1866. And we think there is some strength in this position. The little horn prevails against the saints until the Ancient of Days comes and the saints possess the kingdom. The man of sin is destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Yet some are expecting a Millennium before Jesus comes! The conversion of the world is still talked about. How strange it looks to me that any in these days, when so much light is beaming forth from the sacred Word, should cherish views so directly in opposition to its teachings. A millennium in which the "little horn" prevails against the saints—where the wheat and tares grow together in the field—evil men and seducers wax worse and worse—good and evil servants are occupied in their respective work. Woe trumpets close the series, and the last ushers in the everlasting kingdom, and the resurrection from the dead. The sixth seal brings to view the signs of the judgment, and the appearance of the Lamb on the great white throne. Voices proclaim under the sounding of the seventh trump, "Thy wrath is come." Under the sixth seal the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, chief captains and mighty men, cry out, "The great day of his wrath is come!" How, then, can the world be converted?

We are living among the closing scenes of earth's sad history. With rapidity events are filling their destined places in the prophetic mould, and Christ is at the door. It is very probable that this year will come the death-blow of Papacy. And while from all parts of the globe Catholic devotees are summoned to Rome, it may result as did Belshazzar's feast at the close of the seventy years' captivity. A finger upon the wall of the Vatican may write—"MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN."

So long have we been looking for and expecting redemption, we may have ceased to realize and feel the influence of those truths which bear an important relation to the time in which we live; yet this affects not one whit their force, nor the certainty of their accomplishment. The day has greatly advanced since twenty years ago we hailed with gladness the glow in the east; its brightness has dispelled the misty vail and sombre shades beneath which many a precious truth then lay hidden; and with the increasing brightness, the certainty of the speedy rising of the Sun of Righteousness, and the advent of an eternal day, has strengthened, so that we know of a truth that the kingdom of God is at hand.

But how sad the thought that many of those who went forth with gleaming lamp to meet the Bridegroom, have become weary in the tarrying time, and are now slumbering all unconscious of the light around them. Robes, then unsullied, have since been defiled by earth's pollutions, and need to be rewashed in the blood of the Lamb.

How diligently we ought now to watch, how often and fervently pray, lest the day of the Lord come upon us as a snare. How earnest ought to be our efforts for the salvation of souls, seeing probation is so near ended. Let us be the Lord's marked ones who sigh and cry over the abominations that are done in the land; and then, when the destroying angel is sent forth to destroy all who have not the mark, as he was commissioned to slay the first-born where no mark was found on the door-posts, we may escape the awful doom and stand before the Son of man.

This is no time for questions which gender strife; no time for disputings on points of time; evidences sufficient for all to understand are afforded to show us that we are amid the last scenes of earth's history, and the labor expended on such things had better be unitedly bestowed in efforts to warn the ungodly to flee from the wrath so soon to come, and to awaken the church to greater purity and zeal.

In my own mind, I am fully persuaded that the preaching of definite time with positiveness has ever been attended with evil results; and past experience ought to teach all a lesson to profit thereby. Multitudes have been awakened, on definite time, who were previously exerting no influence for the advancement of Christ's cause, and the effect produced on their minds has been to excite a zeal not according to knowledge, nor for the health of the church; cherishing a denunciatory spirit toward those who honestly differed from them in opinion, apparently destitute of that love and meekness and gentleness toward all men which the Bible enjoins; and just as soon as the time passed, their zeal was all gone, their prayers and labors ended, and they plunged now into worldly business with a zest which said plainly, "We will now seek to regain all we have lost by our sacrifice, and add as much thereto as possible."

A spirit of discord and division is not of God. Humiliation, deep and heartfelt consecration, love which bears long and patiently with the faults of others and leads us to bear another's burden, the spirit of earnest and prevailing prayer, and watchfulness, with a deep interest for souls, are fruits which evince a preparation for Christ's coming far more than so much contention about certain matters of history which, however positively affirmed, can never purify the heart and fit the individual for translation. It is not a knowledge of the hour in which our Lord will come that constitutes the preparation, but a deadness to the world, a love for Christ and his work, a watching, prayerful state.

May the Lord enable us to have our loins girded, our lights burning, our garments white, our hearts sanctified continually; and then at whatever watch our Lord doth come, we shall be caught up to meet him in the air, and so be forever with him. MARY D. WELLCOME.

CHARITY.

The apostle's creed was, Faith, hope, and charity. There are few employments more interesting, perhaps none more useful, than to search out the poor and needy, sick and afflicted, relieve the oppressed, speak a comforting word to the sad and mourning, and encourage those who are seeking for the truth. There are oftentimes many obstacles that impede their progress; difficulties arise before them, difficulties without and foes within; difficulties arise from wrong counsel, pride, love of the world, ignorance, folly, etc., causing strife; leading man to waste his breath in sharp conflict with his fellow men, when it would be far better to bridle the tongue, speak evil of no one, but strive to cultivate charity one for another.

If we have not charity, we become as "sounding brass," or a "tinkling cymbal." Our motto should be, when we can say no good of a person, to be careful and say no harm of them. Sometimes in an unguarded moment we are led to say what we should not; therefore we should watch, lest we enter into temptation.

We are to lay aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisy, and envy, and all evil speaking. "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. . . . For while one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." We are also to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world. We may shudder at the thought of death and the grave, but if we are true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, we can look forward and rejoice when we think of that blest morn when we shall be clothed with immortality and eternal life, having found the "pearl of great price."

Let us fulfill the word of God, and seek to bring others to the knowledge of the truth, that they, too, may partake of the tree of life, and be saved from the second death. If we keep the commandments of Christ with an eye single to the glory of God, "though our sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Let us search our own hearts and turn to God, if we would have Jesus reveal himself unto us as a bright and morning star. Let us not grieve the Spirit, but to Christ alone let us open all the secrets of our hearts, for he purchased us with his blood. We should ever bear in mind the examples he set for us to follow. We find he went about doing good; he visited the sick, and sought out the poor and afflicted. He not only went among the rich and honored, but among the humble and lowly. He raised the sick to health, and poured a healing balm into the hearts of the sorrowing. Such was the example of our blessed Savior. Let us as christians strive to follow his example, and know the thrill of happy consciousness that, having the comfort and welfare of our fellow beings at heart, we can do as we would that others should do unto us. IS IT RIGHT?

Is what right? Is it right that three or four brethren and one or two sisters should bear very nearly all the burden of sustaining the preaching of the gospel, in a place where the members number from thirty to forty, or more, as the case may be? Is it right for one brother to make a sacrifice and pay one hundred dollars a year for preaching because he feels the truth must be kept before the people, when others having money lying idle or in the bank, or at interest, refuse to pay anything of account? I know that it is very convenient for one to come to the place of worship at the hour appointed for preaching or prayer, and find the house all warm, and clean, and well lighted, and all comfortable, and so enjoy a good sermon or prayer meeting; but does every member that so meets consider that it costs some one a large amount of money and time to keep all these things in order about the house of worship, to say nothing about supporting the man of God who is always found in his place to preach the word of life?

Should we not all feel that it is our duty to help bear one another's burdens? Will our heavenly Father respect a stingy giver—one that will fumble over a hundred dollars for some time in order to find a three cent or a five cent shinplaster to put in the treasury of the Lord, and then double it all up in a heap so that no one can see how much he puts in? I say, will God look upon such acts as that and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

Now I know that one cent given by those that can give no more is acceptable to God; but, in Heaven's name, what can we think of those that have their hundreds and thousands, and still refuse to give comparatively nothing? Some will make it a point to pay eight dollars a year, and some less; and then again others will even think they will pay for the cause they love so well the enormous sum of twenty dollars a year, when their income each year is ten times as much as that of the brother who makes a sacrifice and pays one hundred dollars a year, and perhaps more. You see these last mentioned have no stopping place. When the cause of Christ calls for help, they stand ready to give. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If you do not believe it, just try it, and you will find that God always tells the truth.

Now we often hear some of those covetous ones talking and praying very loudly, and we often hear them say they love the Lord, and love his people; and have a great anxiety for the welfare of their neighbors; but do they stop to think that God looks at the heart, and knows every motive that prompts us to action? My dear brethren, in God's name let us look well to our own ways, and be sure that we are not deceiving ourselves in these things. Do you know that the Judge standeth at the door, and the day that cometh will try our works of what sort they are? If you love your money, or this world, remember that the love of God is not in you. Be not deceived. If you allow yourself to be deceived in these things, remember that all is lost.

Now of all the people in this world, we that profess before the world to be looking for the great Life-giver to come, and that very soon, to reward every one as his work shall be, we ought to be the most liberal, and act the most consistently. O Lord, help us to examine our own hearts, and see if they are pure before God, for none but pure hearts will be accepted in that trying day.

A goodly number of our preaching brethren leave their families in close quarters, hardly enough to keep them from being hungry and cold, while they go warning people to flee the wrath to come. They go trusting in God, and praying that their little ones may be cared for. My dear brethren, God's way of taking care of those little ones is by his children whom he has blessed with this world's goods, and if they neglect and refuse to use their Lord's money in the way that he intended they should, what will he say of such when he comes?

If a man really does possess that charity that the apostle says is requisite in order to be saved, that love will open that man's heart, and he will show his faith by his works. James says, "Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works." What good do you suppose it will do us to say we love the Lord, and love his cause, and then refuse to sustain it; and when called upon to give, to hunt around among a roll of bills as big as our arm to find a ten cent shinplaster to give, and then pinch that so close as to tear off one corner of it? Do you suppose if we should treat the cause of our families in that way, that we should love them? Do you not see at once that our profession would be merely a piece of hypocrisy? May the Lord help us to look well to our ways, and not let the devil deceive us and cheat us out of that great reward that all the obedient ones will receive.

"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethen, ye did it not to me," says the Judge. D. COGSWELL.

WHAT WE OWE THE FREEDMEN.

I am an Abolitionist. I was thoroughly converted when in my teens, and have been neither ashamed nor afraid to avow it. It has been my earnest request to my heavenly Father, since I have been looking for "the coming One," that the colored people might be placed in a position where they could hear the glad tidings of speedy deliverance; even though there should be a necessity for special interference on the part of Providence. As when the Lord's chosen were delivered from Egyptian taskmasters, God has heard the prayer of the needy, toiling black race, and the captives are set at liberty, and their feet set in a large place, though it has been accomplished in a manner of which none of us thought—the slaying of our first-born throughout all the land. A long, pitiful wail has been, and yet is, ascending to heaven from mothers, wives, and orphans, bereft of support and of those loved ones who have yielded their heart's blood in the accomplishment of the deliverance of the oppressed. How many can say, in reference to the occupants of poor soldiers' graves, as did the christian mother of the philanthropic Lovejoy, who was shot at his post of duty in Alton, Ill.: "The blood of the atonement has been spilled; the innocent is slain for the guilty." At such cost have the weeping millions been liberated who have been kept as ignorant as the dumb brute from age to age by the iron rule of their white masters, who have purposely endeavored to annihilate all intellectuality in the negro. Mental culture would make his vassals slippery property; thought and reason would be very incompatible with servility; hence the untiring efforts of the master to close every avenue of improvement for the mind from his bond-slave, and keep him ignorant of all the relations of the outside world, save his master's wishes, often enforced by oft-repeated threats, oaths, horrid imprecations, whips, gags, hounds, and death in its most horrid forms. Thus shut out from every avenue of learning; worked like machines from early twilight till dewy eve, these human cattle have drudged from age to age for a most degrading pittance, supplying us with the staple for all our various cotton goods, at a very cheap rate; but we scarcely thought that those who sowed, hoed and picked it were mostly denied even the small recompense of comfortable clothing, even where it was so abundant and cheap.

But such was the northern demand for this staple that the land and slave owning chivalry supposed cotton was king of these States. So cotton was worshiped; and they called like the daughters of the horse-leech, "Give, give," while we at the North, non-producers, have been the consumers, and are to-day deeply in debt to the Freedmen of the South. Now can we not make partial payment enough to clothe some of the half-naked innocents, or give a warm garment for that man or woman who picked cotton to clothe you and yours, unrequited? If you can't do this, because you have no heart to do it, then don't call yourself a Christian. From whence have we received our delicious sugars? almost entirely from slave labor. Our food has been made palatable at a very small expense to us; but the cry of those who have labored for naught has entered the ears of the God of Sabaoth, and he will avenge them. Shall our gold or silver eat as doth a canker?

Again, we as a people believe that the glad tidings of the kingdom should be preached to all; but who shall go to that people who of all classes would be most likely to joyfully receive it? The preacher or teacher must not only be sent, but he must not be muzzled. I know, as my husband has often said since meeting in the colored churches at Louisville and Nashville, last spring, that the earnest devotion of that people ought to put to blush all northern christians; yet the mass scarcely know the first letters of God's will concerning them, or their future. Shall we, who ought to be the light of the world, hide the light of life from so many benighted ones? Rather let us unitedly say to the teacher of the spelling book and Bible, Go, and I will hold up your hands with my money, with food and with raiment for these poor ones.

Many of those who call so piteously on us for aid have been the most faithful soldiers in the terrible struggle for the salvation of our once peaceful nation. They came to the rescue, and, in reality, permitted so many of our kin to stay at home and be at ease. While of the former slave it is truly said,

"Well hath he fought by fort and wall,
Midst withering cannonades of ball,
On parapet, by rampart side,
Well hath he charged and bravely died.
Happy in darkness of the night
He fights where Grant and Sherman fight;
Steps with the men of Smith and Banks;
Shoulders his gun in Foster's ranks;
In fort or rifle-pit awaits,
Beleaguering the Charleston gates;
Rides with the troops of Sheridan,
A stalwart, battle-hardened man;
With Farragut the Gulf assails,
With Porter dares the ocean gales."

Shall we not help such, and their families, helpless and poor as many of them are? The winter is upon us, with its icy winds, piercing to the very bones of those whose tattered garments scarce cover their persons, much less preserve them from suffering. May our heads, hearts, and hands be moved with Christ-like pity, and may our christianity prove to be POCKET DEEP. MARY A. SEYMOUR.

TO THEM THAT LOVE GOD.

"For we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—ROM. 8: 28.

How this truth was inwrought afresh upon my soul as I bowed the knee with a sorrow-stricken mother, whose hopes had been dashed in a daughter's fall. This mother loved Jesus. Her daughter, too, had made profession of his love; but, in an unguarded hour, was overcome by temptation, and fell. What a trial of faith, and at the same time its triumph, to bow with this mother in the presence of her family, and the daughter in question, with the fruit of her sin in her arms, and claim this promise—We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.

When that daughter went forward in baptism, how easy for that mother, who had walked alone without the aid of her husband all these years, to believe that all things work together for good; but now how changed the aspect. Yet has the word of God changed? Has it failed? Does not that promise stand out as bold as ever? And does it not as much apply to that mother now, as in the days of her brightest hopes? Does she love the Lord less in this the hour of her affliction? Does she less need the balm that is in Gilead and the physician there? Is it Jesus to forsake in the seventh trouble?

Nay, verily, we felt as there we mingled our tears and prayers. Such sweet promises welled up that seemed to reach even to the fallen. The voice of man is, let her suffer the penalty of the law; the voice of Jesus—let him that is without sin execute that law. Ah! we there felt we could not lift a stone. We could only with them smite upon our breasts and cry, God be merciful to us sinners.

Oh! how the gospel shone on such a scene as this. A salvation that reached to the last! Did that daughter love God? This her fall will work for her good. O! what a power to bring good out of evil—to turn all into gold. The true philosopher's stone is the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Who will not be a christian? Who will not love Jesus? He only has the balm that is in Gilead. He only is the physician there. Beloved fellow-pilgrims, may we have the spirit of Jesus "to bind up the broken-hearted, to comfort all that mourn."

Your sister in this blessed mission,

Hammonton, N. J. E. S. WILLARD.

WORDS OF COUNSEL.

Be moderate in your estimates and desires of worldly good.—It may seem necessary and important to you, but it is not. At best it can serve you but imperfectly, and only for a little while. It is vanity, and may only do you mischief, instead of rendering you profit. It was a christian exhortation which the poet gave when he said,—

"Lean not on earth; 'twill pierce thee to the heart,
A broken reed at best, and oft a spear
On whose sharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires."

If you have position, influence, means, use them wisely for God, and set not your heart on them, nor be proud of them, nor glory in them. And if you are among the less favored in these respects, do not murmur nor complain, but be content with such things as you have. They that hasten to be rich, pierce themselves with many sorrows; and the devotees of pleasure, while they are gay and joyous for a time, soon find, as Solomon found, that all is vanity and vexation of spirit. Wealth is good, and all the proper pleasures of life are good, but they all perish in the using, and fail when our brief race on earth is run. Learn, then, to call them by their right names, and be not captivated by their specious show.

Seek after that which is abiding and precious. The things of this world are vanity; but there is a world of reality and substance. There is that which can fill the soul, and make it glad, even amid privations and sufferings, and satisfy it with enduring happiness. "This is eternal life, to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." With the soul anchored on the Almighty and Immutable, with the heart set to meet his will, with the life solemnly consecrated to his service, we become linked to his eternal Majesty, so as to share somewhat in his imperishable excellencies, and become "partakers of a divine nature," being the sons and heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus, with a reserved inheritance, incorruptible and unfading. Having laid hold upon the refuge set before us in the gospel, we plant ourselves on the immutable things of God, and find strong consolation in the hope of a future of blessedness, high as heaven, changeless as God, and enduring as eternity. And why should any one cheat himself out of that glorious portion for the trifles and vanities of earth? Why should you waste your precious life running after shadows, and let go the bliss of eternal realities? What have you gained by neglect of God and his service and commands? What comfort does it give you as you look forward to death, judgment, and eternity? Lift up your heart, then, and pray that God may turn away your eyes from beholding vanity. Look about you, and see, that the truth of God is really worth your possessing and pursue it, and hold to it at any price.

Fix your mind upon the coming again of the Lord Jesus.—He has said that he will come again. Angels have said that he will come again. The Holy Ghost, in the hearts of prophets and apostles, has given us the repeated assurance that he will come again. There is nothing that can prevent his coming; and everything demands that he should come speedily. All the prophetic dates, at the end of which his advent is fixed, are almost run out. The signs which characterize the world when near its end are manifesting themselves on all sides. The most devout and earnest-hearted in the church, in all lands, are becoming aroused and expectant, with reference to the speedy fulfillment of all that the Scriptures have spoken. Be not indifferent, then, to the solemn subject and the blessed hope. If the indications of the nearness of that day were even far less than they are, our hearts should still be set upon it, and our lives disposed with reference to it, as freighted with all that we may covet or dread, as we are prepared or unprepared. The fewest weeds floating on the sea of time, showing that we are nearing the continent of glory—the smallest flowers, here and there, however few or fragile, heralding the approaching summer of the promised blessedness,—ought to impress us most deeply, and incite to all manner of earnest endeavor, that we may be found waiting and ready when the grand crisis comes. And though no angel from heaven be sent to you, nor any startling token like that which flashed Belshazzar's doom along his banquet-halls, be made to herald to you the Savior's nearness, believe, nevertheless, that his coming is at hand, and that it is now late in the Saturday evening of this world.

Be firm and unyielding in your faith and adherence to Christ, whatever may occur.—By taking fast hold on Jesus, and making him your hope and life, you take hold on what cannot fail you, and find sanctuary amid the changeless verities of God. And if you should be reproached by the world for such oddities, care not for it. If you suffer, let it be as a christian, with meekness and forbearance, that the trial of your faith may be found unto praise, and honor, and glory. And if others mock, and continue to be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and give themselves to vanity, let it be your part to follow the Master, to deny yourself, and to wait for your recompense at the resurrection of the just.—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article we were examining the word "destruction," where it refers to destroying death, and "him that had the power of death, that is the devil," and asked the question, if it meant to preserve death alive, and also the devil, and torment them?

Now we will turn to the book of Job, 31: 3, where Job asks the question, "Is not destruction to the wicked?" Solomon says, in Prov. 29: 1, destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity. Isaiah says, 1: 28, "the destruction of the transgressors, and of the sinner, shall be together; and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." Does not the word "consumed" convey the same meaning as the word destroy? Most certainly. Then it cannot mean to preserve them alive, and torment them to all eternity; but it means eternal non-existence, and nothing else. The word destruction is from the Greek word olethros, and signifies ruin, loss of life.

We will now examine the Bible on the word death, as the punishment for sin. We will notice first the apostle's words in Rom. 1: 32,—"Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they who commit such things are worthy of death." In the preceding verses, St. Paul brings to view a catalogue of dreadful crimes, and dreadful characters; but instead of saying they were worthy of endless misery, he says they were "worthy of death." Webster, the great standard of the English language, says death is an extinction of life. In Rom. 5: 21, we read, that, "as sin reigneth unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." Here life and death are put in contrast. If life means to live, or to exist, then death means to die, or to cease to exist.

In Rom. 6: 21, St. Paul asks the question, "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death," and in the 23d verse of the same chapter he tells us, "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Would it not have been just as easy for St. Paul to have said, "the wages of sin is" eternal life in misery, as to say "is death?" Certainly it would, if it was truth. In Rom. 7: 5,—"For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members, to bring forth fruit unto death." Why not say eternal life in misery, if it be truth?

In Rom. 7: 10, we read, "And the commandment which was ordained to life, and found to be unto death." This, of course, would result in the second, or eternal death of the sinner, after he is raised from the dead to receive his final sentence. But to the saint, who would have to pass through death, it would be a sleep in Jesus, from which he would rise to eternal life. The word "death" is in contrast with life, and death is just as long to the sinner as life is to the saint.

We will now look at Rom. 8: 6,—"To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Here are two perfect opposites, as follows: to follow the influence of a carnal mind, would be to be "dead in trespasses and sins," or spiritual death; and leads to a final, or "second death;" but to follow the influence of a spiritual mind is life and peace; which is to be spiritually alive unto God; or, in other words, is to walk after the Spirit; and, of course, they who are thus alive in the cause of God, and continue so while in this life, will surely reap eternal life when Christ comes.

We are informed in 2 Cor. 2: 16, of the effect of the gospel of Christ on its hearers; viz., of life unto life to them who are saved; and of death unto death to them that perish. Here we have another antithesis formed, of life and death; and also the proof that perish is synonymous with death.

We will now look at James 1: 15. Here we are informed by the apostle James that "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." This, of course, must be second or final death, as all saints die the first death.

Dear reader, can you discover any thing, in all these positive declarations of death, as the punishment for sin, that would convey the idea of an endless life of suffering in misery? Certainly not, unless you can bring positive evidence that the sinner has an immortal soul, that leaves the body at death, and lives as a separate entity from the body; but such proof cannot be found between the two lids of the Bible; but we can find plenty of proof that no one is immortal but God.

But let us see if we can find positive proof that the soul dies. How is it? What shall we say of James 5: 20, where we are informed that "he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." What! an immortal, never-dying soul, saved from death? That cannot be, unless it can die. B. PERHAM.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

BE KIND TO THE BEGGAR.

Be kind to the beggar
You meet by the way,
Whose cheeks are all furrowed,
Whose hair is turned gray;
For once he was happy
As mortal could be,
From life's wasting cares he
Was perfectly free.

O'er joys fell a shadow;
His children so dear
In the dark valley slumber,
And his wife lies near;
His cottage, where flowers
Bloomed brightly around,
In the depth of the winter
Was burned to the ground.

Now, houseless and friendless,
He begs in the streets,
Soliciting pennies
From all that he meets;
With grief in his bosom,
A tear in his eye,
O give to the pilgrim
Who's now passing by.

Ye know not the future;
Perhaps you may be,
When aged and furrowed,
As friendless as he;
Then give to the beggar
A trifle to-day,
And smile on him kindly
As he travels away.

Your Maker who looketh
At every good deed,
Will not let you suffer
If ever in need;
But true friends will gather
Around you to bless,
Your wants to supply, or
Your temples to press.

Then give to the needy,
Give all you can spare,
Give food for the body,
And raiment to wear;
And God, your kind father,
Will bless from his throne;
Such children he always
Delighteth to own.

HISTORY OF A TOWEL.

Having told little Georgie one day that the sponge with which his face was washed was part of an animal, he naturally asked,

"Is the towel an animal, too?"

"No, George; the towel is a plant, so is a rose-bush, and corn, and grass. There is not much resemblance between them, you see; still less does the towel resemble either; and I will tell you all the changes the plant passes through before it becomes a towel."

The towel is made from a plant called flax.

Far away—in Asia, on the plains of Persia—this plant grows wild. In most countries of Europe, especially France, England, and Belgium, and in many parts of America, large fields of it are cultivated. It bears a pretty, delicate blue flower, shaped like a little bell; its leaves are small, narrow and pointed; it belongs, in the study of Botany (for flowers in Botany are all divided into classes and orders)—to the fifth class and fifth order. That is, in the center of the flower are five little knobs called stamens, and five other little things called pistils.

This pretty plant, which gives a blue hue to the appearance of the fields when it is in blossom, grows to the height of two or three feet.

But it is of neither the leaves nor flowers that our towels and linen clothes are made; it is of the slender, delicate stem, so frail that it bends before every wind that sweeps over it, like a field of grass.

To understand the structure of this stem, you may take a skein of fine cotton, and extend it on the table, then lay upon it, lengthwise a small stick, like a very small pipe-stem, or a very large knitting-needle, and press the threads so close to it on all sides as to hide it, wash the whole over with gum or glue to keep them all together, and you have a good representation of a stalk of flax.

We will suppose now that flax-seed was planted in the spring.

When it was about two inches high, women and children were employed to creep all over the fields, barefooted, and pull up the weeds from it. Children are preferred, as they trample it down less; however, the little plants soon revive again, and grow up and bear leaves and flowers.

When the leaves turn yellow, and the last blossoms disappear, is the time for harvest. It is then pulled up by the roots. Women and children are employed for this in France; and, after spreading it thinly on the ground from which it was taken, they again go over the field and tie it up in small bunches, which are placed on end, leaning one against the other, to dry. In one week it is dry, and then it is taken to the barn to be stripped of its seed. To do this several ways are used. Sometimes they only beat it with a flat-headed mallet—that is, a huge wooden hammer—then shake the seeds out, for planting next year, and the stalks they lay by themselves.

These stalks are now tied in larger bundles; and what next is to be done to make out of them all these convenient clothes which we have; these soft linen-cambric handkerchiefs, these linen collars, and these very necessary towels? for now they only look like dried sticks.

I will tell you. These stalks—like your imitations of them with a pipe-stem, a skein of cotton, and some gum—consist of precisely three such parts.

And of these three, one part only is valuable—the threads, or fiber, as it is called; and that which is to be done now is to soak these threads loose from the gum, and separate them from the wood center, which is called the bole. This is called retting, or rotting it.

Now, if these bundles of stalks are spread out in a meadow, exposed to the sun, and rain, and dew, or if they are laid in water, either in a creek or a pond, or, better still, in warm water, this will be accomplished. The center-wood, or bole, will decay, the glue will dissolve, and the fiber, or threads, can easily be separated from them, and tied in bundles by themselves. To do this requires a few weeks' time; or, if warm water is used, it takes less time.

Soon now this flax will take the shape of a towel.

These bundles of fiber, after being nicely cleaned, are made straight and smooth with great iron combs, in the same way as you would smooth your hair, or untangle a bunch of yarn. Then they are taken to some great factory, where there are hundreds of wheels, moved by steam and machinery, and where all these little fibers, which are as fine as the finest hairs, will be spun into thread.

A part of it, also, will be spun by the tidy wives and daughters of the flax-farmers. When all the summer work is finished and cold winter comes, they will sit through the long evenings, round the great bright wood fire, with their little spinning-wheels twirling and humming away, making spool after spool of pretty, smooth thread.

One thing only is yet to be done; this thread is to be carried to the weavers, who with their great looms will soon weave it into a variety of useful fabrics; some they will weave in a particular way, with little figures in it, expressly for towels; and behold! Georgie will be provided with a beautiful and necessary towel, which is, as you see, Georgie, part of a plant—the Flax.—Independent.

PLAY FAIR.

Play is the work of children. It is their regular business. Any little labor or study that they do is just so much taken from their play. They play in the sweat of their brow, and often fatigue themselves as much in building a snow-house or snow-man, or damming up a ditch, as their parents would do in a ship-yard or a factory.

Children form very important habits at their plays. Their character comes out. People see what kind of children they are. If they are passionate, you will be sure to see it in the holidays. If they are greedy, they show it in their sports. Liars will always lie on the playground. It is therefore important for boys and girls to play in the right manner.

If you will go where a number of boys are playing marbles or ball, or snowballing, or any game, you will not fail to hear such words as the following: "There now, Tom, play fair."—"It is not your turn."—"O Bill! how can you cheat so?"—"You know it's my play."—"I say, Jim, you are caught out, and you know it."—"No inching."—"Fair play's a jewel."

These are familiar terms. They show that boys have a very keen sense of justice. I do not believe this sense is keener in any than in children. And it is of vast importance that children should be encouraged in these judgments. Honesty in the play-ground is the foundation of honesty in business. If you tell lies about marbles, you will tell lies about money; if you cheat at ball, you will, perhaps, forge in bank; if you are dishonorable in your plays, you will probably be disgraced in your merchandise.

Fair play is the same thing as just play, right play, honest play, true play. Fairness in a game is the same as fairness in a bargain. It makes no difference whether it is marbles or ninepins or money; if you are unfair, you are unjust. Avoid it, then, as you would avoid any filthy, abominable thing on your hands or face. You might wash this off; but how can you wash foul sins off your conscience? Learn to hate a lie or a dishonest action.—Well Spring.

THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

"X. X.," on the fifth commandment, says "it is meant for children. It tells them to honor father and mother." I want to tell you why you should honor father and mother.

1. They love you more than any one else. You are their children, for whom they feel the warmest attachment. They wish you to be happy. All their toil by day and night is for you. And when they ask or command any thing of you, your happiness is bound up in your obedience, because they cannot ask, command, or prohibit anything of you but what is essential to your good. Their love for you makes this positive.

2. They have more knowledge of men and things, have more experience and age, and are, therefore, better prepared to say what is best for you; in other words, what will be most likely to make you happy. So that to their love for you is added their wisdom and experience in directing you in the road to happiness.

3. For these reasons God commands you to obey your parents, and only promises the blessing to the obedient. "Honor thy father and mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Now don't you think God and your parents love you better than any one else? And don't you think they know best what you ought to do? And will you not forever hereafter obey without a murmur? God help you all to do so.—S. S. Ad.

ADVICE TO YOUTH.

Do your duty now this moment, and you will do it every moment.

If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be such that no one will believe him.

Say but little, think much, and do more.

Avoid borrowing and lending.

Learn to say "no" with decision, "yes" with caution.

Never be idle.

If your hands cannot be employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.

Always speak the truth.

Make few promises.

Live up to your engagements.

Keep your own secrets, if you have any.

When you speak to a person, look him in the face.

Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.

Good character is above any thing else.

Never grieve over what you cannot prevent.

You are as accountable for moments of time, as for grains of gold.

Dear Bro. and Sis.—It is with a fixed purpose to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, to have all other things in subordination, to labor with greater zeal for the meat which endureth unto life eternal, than for that which perisheth, that I enter upon this new year—1866! For many years students of prophecy have regarded this year with interest. The grant of Phocas made in 606, by which the Pope of Rome became "Universal Bishop," has led learned men to date the commencement of the 1260 years of Papal supremacy from that point, thus ending them in 1866. And we think there is some strength in this position. The little horn prevails against the saints until the Ancient of Days comes and the saints possess the kingdom. The man of sin is destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Yet some are expecting a Millennium before Jesus comes! The conversion of the world is still talked about. How strange it looks to me that any in these days, when so much light is beaming forth from the sacred Word, should cherish views so directly in opposition to its teachings. A millennium in which the "little horn" prevails against the saints—where the wheat and tares grow together in the field—evil men and seducers wax worse and worse—good and evil servants are occupied in their respective work. Voices trumpets close the series, and the last ushers in the everlasting kingdom, and the resurrection from the dead. The sixth seal brings to view the signs of the judgment, and the appearance of the Lamb on the great white throne. Voices proclaim under the sounding of the seventh trump, "Thy wrath is come." Under the sixth seal the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, chief captains and mighty men, cry out, "The great day of his wrath is come!" How, then, can the world be converted?

We are living among the closing scenes of earth's sad history. With rapidity events are filling their destined places in the prophetic mould, and Christ is at the door. It is very probable that this year will come the death-blow of Papacy. And while from all parts of the globe Catholic devotees are summoned to Rome, it may result as did Belshazzar's feast at the close of the seventy years' captivity. A finger upon the wall of the Vatican may write—"MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN."

So long have we been looking for and expecting redemption, we may have ceased to realize and feel the influence of those truths which bear an important relation to the time in which we live; yet this affects not one whit their force, nor the certainty of their accomplishment. The day has greatly advanced since twenty years ago we hailed with gladness the glow in the east; its brightness has dispelled the misty vail and sombre shades beneath which many a precious truth then lay hidden; and with the increasing brightness, the certainty of the speedy rising of the Sun of Righteousness, and the advent of an eternal day, has strengthened, so that we know of a truth that the kingdom of God is at hand.

But how sad the thought that many of those who went forth with gleaming lamp to meet the Bridegroom, have become weary in the tarrying time, and are now slumbering all unconscious of the light around them. Robes, then unsullied, have since been defiled by earth's pollutions, and need to be rewashed in the blood of the Lamb.

How diligently we ought now to watch, how often and fervently pray, lest the day of the Lord come upon us as a snare. How earnest ought to be our efforts for the salvation of souls, seeing probation is so near ended. Let us be the Lord's marked ones who sigh and cry over the abominations that are done in the land; and then, when the destroying angel is sent forth to destroy all who have not the mark, as he was commissioned to slay the first-born where no mark was found on the door-posts, we may escape the awful doom and stand before the Son of man.

This is no time for questions which gender strife; no time for disputings on points of time; evidences sufficient for all to understand are afforded to show us that we are amid the last scenes of earth's history, and the labor expended on such things had better be unitedly bestowed in efforts to warn the ungodly to flee from the wrath so soon to come, and to awaken the church to greater purity and zeal.

In my own mind, I am fully persuaded that the preaching of definite time with positiveness has ever been attended with evil results; and past experience ought to teach all a lesson to profit thereby. Multitudes have been awakened on definite time who were previously exerting no influence for the advancement of Christ's cause, and the effect produced on their minds has been to excite a zeal not according to knowledge, nor for the health of the church; cherishing a denunciatory spirit toward those who honestly differed from them in opinion, apparently destitute of that love and meekness and gentleness toward all men which the Bible enjoins; and just as soon as the time passed, their zeal was all gone, their prayers and labors ended, and they plunged new into worldly business with a zest which said plainly, "We will now seek to regain all we have lost by our sacrifices, and add as much thereto as possible."

A spirit of discord and disunion is not of God. Humiliation, deep and heartfelt consecration, love which bears long and patiently with the faults of others and leads us to bear another's burden, the spirit of earnest and prevailing prayer, and watchfulness, with a deep interest for souls, are fruits which evince a preparation for Christ's coming far more than so much contention about certain matters of history which, however positively affirmed, can never purify the heart and fit the individual for translation. It is not a knowledge of the hour in which our Lord will come that constitutes the preparation, but a deadness to the world, a love for Christ and his work, a watching, prayerful state.

May the Lord enable us to have our loins girded, our lights burning, our garments white, our hearts sanctified continually; and then at whatever watch our Lord doth come, we shall be caught up to meet him in the air, and so be forever with him. MARY D. WELLCOME.

CHARITY.

The apostle's creed was, Faith, hope, and charity. There are few employments more interesting, perhaps none more useful, than to search out the poor and needy, sick and afflicted, relieve the oppressed, speak a comforting word to the sad and mourning, and encourage those who are seeking for the truth. There are oftentimes many obstacles that impede their progress; difficulties arise before them, difficulties without and foes within; difficulties arise from wrong counsel, pride, love of the world, ignorance, folly, etc., causing strife; leading man to waste his breath in sharp conflict with his fellow men, when it would be far better to bridle the tongue, speak evil of no one, but strive to cultivate charity one for another.

If we have not charity, we become as "sounding brass," or a "tinkling cymbal." Our motto should be, when we can say no good of a person, to be careful and say no harm of them. Sometimes in an unguarded moment we are led to say what we should not; therefore we should watch, lest we enter into temptation.

We are to lay aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisy, and envy, and all evil speaking. "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. . . . For while one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." We are also to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world. We may shudder at the thought of death and the grave, but if we are true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, we can look forward and rejoice when we think of that blest morn when we shall be clothed with immortality and eternal life, having found the "pearl of great price."

Let us fulfill the word of God, and seek to bring others to the knowledge of the truth, that they, too, may partake of the tree of life, and be saved from the second death. If we keep the commandments of Christ with an eye single to the glory of God, "though our sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Let us search our own hearts and turn to God, if we would have Jesus reveal himself unto us as a bright and morning star. Let us not grieve the Spirit, but to Christ alone let us open all the secrets of our hearts, for he purchased us with his blood. We should ever bear in mind the examples he set for us to follow. We find he went about doing good; he visited the sick, and sought out the poor and afflicted. He not only went among the rich and honored, but among the humble and lowly. He raised the sick to health, and poured a healing balm into the hearts of the sorrowing. Such was the example of our blessed Savior. Let us as christians strive to follow his example, and know the thrill of happy consciousness that, having the comfort and welfare of our fellow beings at heart, we can do as we would that others should do unto us. B. L. HAGGETT.

For the World's Crisis.

IS IT RIGHT?

Is what right? Is it right that three or four brethren and one or two sisters should bear very nearly all the burden of sustaining the preaching of the gospel, in a place where the members number from thirty to forty, or more, as the case may be? Is it right for one brother to make a sacrifice and pay one hundred dollars a year for preaching because he feels the truth must be kept before the people, when others having money lying idle or in the bank, or at interest, refuse to pay anything of account? I know that it is very convenient for one to come to the place of worship at the hour appointed for preaching or prayer, and find the house all warm, and clean, and well lighted, and all comfortable, and so enjoy a good sermon or prayer meeting; but does every member that so meets consider that it costs some one a large amount of money and time to keep all these things in order about the house of worship, to say nothing about supporting the man of God who is always found in his place to preach the word of life?

Should we not all feel that it is our duty to help bear one another's burdens? Will our heavenly Father respect a stingy giver—one that will fumble over a hundred dollars for some time in order to find a three cent or a five cent shinplaster to put in the treasury of the Lord, and then double it all up in a heap so that no one can see how much he puts in? I say, will God look upon such acts as that and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

Now I know that one cent given by those that can give no more is acceptable to God; but, in Heaven's name, what can we think of those that have their hundreds and thousands, and still refuse to give comparatively nothing? Some will make it a point to pay eight dollars a year, and some ten; and then again others will even think they will pay for the cause they love so well the enormous sum of twenty dollars a year, when their income each year is ten times as much as that of the brother who makes a sacrifice and pays one hundred dollars a year, and perhaps more. You see these last mentioned have no stopping place. When the cause of Christ calls for help they stand ready to give. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If you do not believe it, just try it, and you will find that God always tells the truth.

Now we often hear some of those covetous ones talking and praying very loudly, and we often hear them say they love the Lord, and love his cause, and have a great anxiety for the welfare of their neighbors; but do they stop to think that God looks at the heart, and knows every motive that prompts us to action? My dear brethren, in God's name let us look well to our own ways, and be sure that we are not deceiving ourselves in these things. Do you know that the Judge standeth at the door, and the day that cometh will try our works of what sort they are? If you love your money, or this world, remember that the love of God is not in you. Be not deceived. If you allow yourself to be deceived in these things, remember that all is lost.

Now of all the people in this world, we that profess before the world to be looking for the great Life-giver to come, and that very soon, to reward every one as his work shall be, we ought to be the most liberal, and act the most consistently. O Lord, help us to examine our own hearts, and see if they are pure before God, for none but pure hearts will be accepted in that trying day.

A goodly number of our preaching brethren leave their families in close quarters, hardly enough to keep them from being hungry and cold, while they go warning people to flee the wrath to come. They go trusting in God, and praying that their little ones may be cared for. My dear brethren, God's way of taking care of those little ones is by his children whom he has blessed with this world's goods, and if they neglect and refuse to use their Lord's money in the way that he intended they should, what will he say of such when he comes?

If a man really does possess that charity that the apostle says is requisite in order to be saved, that love will open that man's heart, and he will show his faith by his works. James says, "Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works." What good do you suppose it will do us to say we love the Lord, and love his cause, and then refuse to sustain it; and when called upon to give, to hunt around among a roll of bills as big as our arm to find a ten cent shinplaster to give, and then pinch that so close as to tear off one corner of it? Do you suppose if we should treat the cause of our families in that way, that we should love them? Do you not see at once that our profession would be merely a piece of hypocrisy? May the Lord help us to look well to our ways, and not let the devil deceive us and cheat us out of that great reward that all the obedient ones will receive.

"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethen, ye did it not to me," says the Judge. D. COGSWELL.

WHAT WE OWE THE FREEDMEN.

I am an Abolitionist. I was thoroughly converted when in my teens, and have been neither ashamed nor afraid to avow it. It has been my earnest request to my heavenly Father, since I have been looking for "the coming One," that the colored people might be placed in a position where they could hear the glad tidings of speedy deliverance; even though there should be a necessity for special interference on the part of Providence. As when the Lord's chosen were delivered from Egyptian taskmasters, God has heard the prayer of the needy, toiling black race, and the captives are set at liberty, and their feet set in a large place, though it has been accomplished in a manner of which none of us thought—the slaying of our first-born throughout all the land. A long, pitiful wail has been, and yet is, ascending to heaven from mothers, wives, and orphans, bereft of support and of those loved ones who have yielded their heart's blood in the accomplishment of the deliverance of the oppressed. How many can say, in reference to the occupants of poor soldiers' graves, as did the christian mother of the philanthropic Lovejoy, who was shot at his post of duty in Alton, Ill.: "The blood of the atonement has been spilled; the innocent is slain for the guilty." At such cost have the weeping millions been liberated who have been kept as ignorant as the dumb brute from age to age by the iron rule of their white masters, who have purposely endeavored to annihilate all intellectuality in the negro. Mental culture would make his vassals slippery property; thought and reason would be very incompatible with servility; hence the untiring efforts of the master to close every avenue of improvement for the mind from his bond-slave, and keep him ignorant of all the relations of the outside world, save his master's wishes, often enforced by oft-repeated threats, oaths, horrid imprecations, whips, gags, hounds, and death in its most horrid forms. Thus shut out from every avenue of learning; worked like machines from early twilight till dewy eve, these human cattle have drudged from age to age for a most degrading pittance, supplying us with the staple for all our various cotton goods, at a very cheap rate; but we scarcely thought that those who sowed, hoed and picked it were mostly denied even the small recompense of comfortable clothing, even where it was so abundant and cheap.

But such was the northern demand for this staple that the land and slave owning chivalry supposed cotton was king of these States. So cotton was worshiped; and they called like the daughters of the horse-leech, "Give, give," while we at the North, non-producers, have been the consumers, and are to-day deeply in debt to the Freedmen of the South. Now can we not make partial payment enough to clothe some of the half-naked innocents, or give a warm garment for that man or woman who picked cotton to clothe you and yours, unrequited? If you can't do this, because you have no heart to do it, then don't call yourself a Christian. From whence have we received our delicious sugars? almost entirely from slave labor. Our food has been made palatable at a very small expense to us; but the cry of those who have labored for naught has entered the ears of the God of Sabaoth, and he will avenge them. Shall our gold or silver eat as doth a canker?

Again, we as a people believe that the glad tidings of the kingdom should be preached to all; but who shall go to that people who of all classes would be most likely to joyfully receive it? The preacher or teacher must not only be sent, but he must not be muzzled. I know, as my husband has often said since meeting in the colored churches at Louisville and Nashville, last spring, that the earnest devotion of that people ought to put to blush all northern christians; yet the mass scarcely know the first letters of God's will concerning them, or their future. Shall we, who ought to be the light of the world, hide the light of life from so many benighted ones? Rather let us unitedly say to the teacher of the spelling book and Bible, Go, and I will hold up your hands with my money, with food and with raiment for those poor ones.

Many of those who call so piteously on us for aid have been the most faithful soldiers in the terrible struggle for the salvation of our once peaceful nation. They came to the rescue, and, in reality, permitted so many of our kin to stay at home and be at ease. While of the former slave it is truly said,

> "Well hath he fought by fort and wall,
> Midst withering cannonades of ball,
> On parapet, by rampart side,
> Well hath he charged and bravely died.
> Happy in darkness of the night
> He fights where Grant and Sherman fight;
> Steps with the men of Smith and Banks;
> Shoulders his gun in Foster's ranks;
> In fort or rifle-pit awaits,
> Beleaguering the Charleston gates;
> Rides with the troops of Sheridan,
> A stalwart, battle-hardened man;
> With Farragut the Gulf assails,
> With Porter dares the ocean gales."

Shall we not help such, and their families, helpless and poor as many of them are? The winter is upon us, with its icy winds, piercing to the very bones of those whose tattered garments scarce cover their persons, much less preserve them from suffering. May our heads, hearts, and hands be moved with Christ-like pity, and may our christianity prove to be POCKET DEEP. MARY A. SEYMOUR.

TO THEM THAT LOVE GOD.

"For we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—ROM. 8: 28.

How this truth was inwrought afresh upon my soul as I bowed the knee with a sorrow-stricken mother, whose hopes had been dashed in a daughter's fall. This mother loved Jesus. Her daughter, too, had made profession of his love; but, in an unguarded hour, was overcome by temptation, and fell. What a trial of faith, and at the same time its triumph, to bow with this mother in the presence of her family, and the daughter in question, with the fruit of her sin in her arms, and claim this promise—We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.

When that daughter went forward in baptism, how easy for that mother, who had walked alone without the aid of her husband all these years, to believe that all things work together for good; but now how changed the aspect. Yet has the word of God changed? Has it failed? Does not that promise stand out as bold as ever? And does it not as much apply to that mother now, as in the days of her brightest hopes? Does she love the Lord less in this the hour of her affliction? Does she less need the balm that is in Gilead and the physician there? Is it Jesus to forsake in the seventh trouble?

Nay, verily, we felt as there we mingled our tears and prayers. Such sweet promises welled up that seemed to reach even to the fallen. The voice of man is, let her suffer the penalty of the law; the voice of Jesus—let him that is without sin execute that law. Ah! we there felt we could not lift a stone. We could only with them smite upon our breasts and cry, God be merciful to us sinners.

Oh! how the gospel shone on such a scene as this. A salvation that reached to the last! Did that daughter love God? This her fall will work for her good. O! what a power to bring good out of evil—to turn all into gold. The true philosopher's stone is the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Who will not be a christian? Who will not love Jesus? He only has the balm that is in Gilead. He only is the physician there. Beloved fellow-pilgrims, may we have the spirit of Jesus "to bind up the broken-hearted, to comfort all that mourn."

Your sister in this blessed mission,
Hammonton, N. J. E. S. WILLARD.

WORDS OF COUNSEL.

Be moderate in your estimates and desires of worldly good.—It may seem necessary and important to you, but it is not. At best it can serve you but imperfectly, and only for a little while. It is vanity, and may only do you mischief, instead of rendering you profit. It was a christian exhortation which the poet gave when he said,—

> "Lean not on earth; 'twill pierce thee to the heart;
> A broken reed at best, and oft a spear
> On whose sharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires."

If you have position, influence, means, use them wisely for God, and set not your heart on them, nor be proud of them, nor glory in them. And if you are among the less favored in these respects, do not murmur nor complain, but be content with such things as you have. They that hasten to be rich, pierce themselves with many sorrows; and the devotees of pleasure, while they are gay and joyous for a time, soon find, as Solomon found, that all is vanity and vexation of spirit. Wealth is good, and all the proper pleasures of life are good, but they all perish in the using, and fail when our brief race on earth is run. Learn, then, to call them by their right names, and be not captivated by their specious show.

Seek after that which is abiding and precious. The things of this world are vanity; but there is a world of reality and substance. There is that which can fill the soul, and make it glad, even amid privations and sufferings, and satisfy it with enduring happiness. "This is eternal life, to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." With the soul anchored on the Almighty and Immutable, with the heart set to meet his will, with the life solemnly consecrated to his service, we become linked to his eternal Majesty, so as to share somewhat in his imperishable excellencies, and become "partakers of a divine nature," being the sons and heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus, with a reserved inheritance, incorruptible and unfading. Having laid hold upon the refuge set before us in the gospel, we plant ourselves on the immutable things of God, and find strong consolation in the hope of a future of blessedness, high as heaven, changeless as God, and enduring as eternity. And why should any one cheat himself out of that glorious portion for the trifles and vanities of earth? Why should you waste your precious life running after shadows, and let go the bliss of eternal realities? What have you gained by neglect of God and his service and commands? What comfort does it give you as you look forward to death, judgment, and eternity? Lift up your heart, then, and pray that God may turn away your eyes from beholding vanity. Look about you, and see, that the truth of God is really worth your possessing and pursue it, and hold to it at any price.

Fix your mind upon the coming again of the Lord Jesus.—He has said that he will come again. Angels have said that he will come again. The Holy Ghost, in the hearts of prophets and apostles, has given us the repeated assurance that he will come again. There is nothing that can prevent his coming; and everything demands that he should come speedily. All the prophetic dates, at the end of which his advent is fixed, are almost run out. The signs which characterize the world when near its end are manifesting themselves on all sides. The most devout and earnest-hearted in the church, in all lands, are becoming aroused and expectant, with reference to the speedy fulfillment of all that the Scriptures have spoken. Be not indifferent, then, to the solemn subject and the blessed hope. If the indications of the nearness of that day were even far less than they are, our hearts should still be set upon it, and our lives disposed with reference to it, as freighted with all that we may covet or dread, as we are prepared or unprepared. The fewest weeds floating on the sea of time, showing that we are nearing the continent of glory—the smallest flowers, here and there, however few or fragile, heralding the approaching summer of the promised blessedness,—ought to impress us most deeply, and incite to all manner of earnest endeavor, that we may be found waiting and ready when the grand crisis comes. And though no angel from heaven be sent to you, nor any startling token like that which flashed Belshazzar's doom along his banquet-halls, be made to herald to you the Savior's nearness, believe, nevertheless, that his coming is at hand, and that it is now late in the Saturday evening of this world.

Be firm and unyielding in your faith and adherence to Christ, whatever may occur.—By taking fast hold on Jesus, and making him your hope and life, you take hold on what cannot fail you, and find sanctuary amid the changeless verities of God. And if you should be reproached by the world for such oddities, care not for it. If you suffer, let it be as a christian, with meekness and forbearance, that the trial of your faith may be found unto praise, and honor, and glory. And if others mock, and continue to be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and give themselves to vanity, let it be your part to follow the Master, to deny yourself, and to wait for your recompense at the resurrection of the just.—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In our last article we were examining the word "destruction," where it refers to destroying death, and "him that had the power of death, that is the devil," and asked the question, if it meant to preserve death alive, and also the devil, and torment them?

Now we will turn to the book of Job, 31: 3, where Job asks the question, "Is not destruction to the wicked?" Solomon says, in Prov. 29: 1, destruction shall be to the workers of inquity. Isaiah says, 1: 28, "the destruction of the transgressors, and of the sinner, shall be together; and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." Does not the word "consumed" convey the same meaning as the word destroy? Most certainly. Then it cannot mean to preserve them alive, and torment them to all eternity; but it means eternal non-existence, and nothing else. The word destruction is from the Greek word olethros, and signifies ruin, loss of life.

We will now examine the Bible on the word death, as the punishment for sin. We will notice first the apostle's words in Rom. 1: 32,—"Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they who commit such things are worthy of death." In the preceding verses, St. Paul brings to view a catalogue of dreadful crimes, and dreadful characters; but instead of saying they were worthy of endless misery, he says they were "worthy of death." Webster, the great standard of the English language, says death is an extinction of life. In Rom. 5: 21, we read, that, "as sin reigneth unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." Here life and death are put in contrast. If life means to live, or to exist, then death means to die, or to cease to exist.

In Rom. 6: 21, St. Paul asks the question, "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death;" and in the 23d verse of the same chapter he tells us, "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Would it not have been just as easy for St. Paul to have said, "the wages of sin is" eternal life in misery, as to say "is death?" Certainly it would, if it was truth. In Rom. 7: 5,—"For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members, to bring forth fruit unto death." Why not say eternal life in misery, if it be truth?

In Rom. 7: 10, we read, "And the commandment which was ordained to life, and found to be unto death." This, of course, would result in the second, or eternal death of the sinner, after he is raised from the dead to receive his final sentence. But to the saint, who would have to pass through death, it would be a sleep in Jesus, from which he would rise to eternal life. The word "death" is in contrast with life; and death is just as long to the sinner as life is to the saint.

We will now look at Rom. 8: 6,—"To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Here are two perfect opposites, as follows: to follow the influence of a carnal mind, would be to be "dead in trespasses and sins," or spiritual death; and leads to a final, or "second death;" but to follow the influence of a spiritual mind is life and peace; which is to be spiritually alive unto God; or, in other words, is to walk after the Spirit; and, of course, they who are thus alive in the cause of God, and continue so while in this life, will surely reap eternal life when Christ comes.

We are informed in 2 Cor. 2: 16, of the effect of the gospel of Christ on its hearers; viz., of life unto life to them who are saved; and of death unto death to them that perish. Here we have another antithesis formed, of life and death; and also the proof that perish, is synonymous with death.

We will now look at James 1: 15. Here we are informed by the apostle James that "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." This, of course, must be second, or final death, as all saints die the first death.

Dear reader, can you discover any thing, in all these positive declarations of death, as the punishment for sin, that would convey the idea of an endless life of suffering in misery? Certainly not, unless you can bring positive evidence that the sinner has an immortal soul, that leaves the body at death, and lives as a separate entity from the body; but such proof cannot be found between the two lids of the Bible; but we can find plenty of proof that no one is immortal but God.

But let us see if we can find positive proof that the soul dies. How is it? What shall we say of James 5: 20, where we are informed that "he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." What! an immortal, never-dying soul, saved from death? That cannot be, unless it can die. B. PERHAM.

HISTORY OF A TOWEL.

Having told little Georgie one day that the sponge with which his face was washed was part of an animal, he naturally asked:

"Is the towel an animal, too?"

"No, Georgie; the towel is a plant, so is a rose-bush, and corn, and grass. There is not much resemblance between them, you see; still less does the towel resemble either; and I will tell you all the changes the plant passes through before it becomes a towel."

The towel is made from a plant called flax.

Far away—in Asia, on the plains of Persia—this plant grows wild. In most countries of Europe, especially France, England, and Belgium, and in many parts of America, large fields of it are cultivated. It bears a pretty, delicate blue flower, shaped like a little bell; its leaves are small, narrow and pointed; it belongs, in the study of Botany (for flowers in Botany are all divided into classes and orders)—to the fifth class and fifth order. That is, in the center of the flower are five little knobs called stamens, and five other little things called pistils.

This pretty plant, which gives a blue hue to the appearance of the fields when it is in blossom, grows to the height of two or three feet.

But it is of neither the leaves nor flowers that our towels and linen clothes are made; it is of the slender, delicate stem, so frail that it bends before every wind that sweeps over it, like a field of grass.

To understand the structure of this stem, you may take a skein of fine cotton, and extend it on the table, then lay upon it, lengthwise a small stick, like a very small pipe-stem, or a very large knitting-needle, and press the threads so close to it on all sides as to hide it; wash the whole over with gum or glue to keep them all together, and you have a good representation of a stalk of flax.

We will suppose now that flax-seed was planted in the spring.

When it was about two inches high, women and children were employed to creep all over the fields, barefooted, and pull up the weeds from it. Children are preferred, as they trample it down less; however, the little plants soon revive again, and grow up and bear leaves and flowers.

When the leaves turn yellow, and the last blossoms disappear, is the time for harvest. It is then pulled up by the roots. Women and children are employed for this in France; and, after spreading it thinly on the ground from which it was taken, they again go over the field and tie it up in small bunches, which are placed on end, leaning one against the other, to dry. In one week it is dry, and then it is taken to the barn to be stripped of its seed. To do this several ways are used. Sometimes they only beat it with a flat-headed mallet—that is, a huge wooden hammer—then shake the seeds out, for planting next year, and the stalks they lay by themselves.

These stalks are now tied in larger bundles; and what next is to be done to make out of them all these convenient clothes which we have; these soft linen-cambric handkerchiefs, these linen collars, and these very necessary towels? for now they only look like dried sticks.

I will tell you. These stalks—like your imitations of them with a pipe-stem, a skein of cotton, and some gum—consist of precisely three such parts.

And of these three, one part only is valuable—the threads, or fiber, as it is called; and that which is to be done now is to soak these threads loose from the gum, and separate them from the wood center, which is called the bole. This is called retting, or rotting it.

Now, if these bundles of stalks are spread out in a meadow, exposed to the sun, and rain, and dew, or if they are laid in water, either in a creek or a pond, or, better still, in warm water, this will be accomplished. The center-wood, or bole, will decay, the glue will dissolve, and the fiber, or threads, can easily be separated from them, and tied in bundles by themselves. To do this requires a few weeks' time; or, if warm water is used, it takes less time.

Soon now this flax will take the shape of a towel.

These bundles of fiber, after being nicely cleaned, are made straight and smooth with great iron combs, in the same way as you would smooth your hair, or untangle a bunch of yarn. Then they are taken to some great factory, where there are hundreds of wheels, moved by steam and machinery, and where all these little fibers, which are as fine as the finest hairs, will be spun into thread.

A part of it, also, will be spun by the tidy wives and daughters of the flax-farmers. When all the summer work is finished and cold winter comes, they will sit through the long evenings, round the great bright wood fire, with their little spinning-wheels twirling and humming away, making spool after spool of pretty, smooth thread.

One thing only is yet to be done; this thread is to be carried to the weavers, who with their great looms will soon weave it into a variety of useful fabrics; some they will weave in a particular way, with little figures in it, expressly for towels; and behold! Georgie will be provided with a beautiful and necessary towel, which is, as you see, Georgie, part of a plant—the Flax.—Independent.

PLAY FAIR.

Play is the work of children. It is their regular business. Any little labor or study that they do is just so much taken from their play. They play in the sweat of their brow, and often fatigue themselves as much in building a snow-house or snow-man, or damming up a ditch, as their parents would do in a ship-yard or a factory.

Children form very important habits at their plays. Their character comes out. People see what kind of children they are. If they are passionate, you will be sure to see it in the holidays. If they are greedy, they show it in their sports. Liars will always lie on the playground. It is therefore important for boys and girls to play in the right manner.

If you will go where a number of boys are playing marbles or ball, or snowballing, or any game, you will not fail to hear such words as the following: "There now, Tom, play fair."—"It is not your turn."—"O Bill! how can you cheat so?"—"You know it's my play."—"I say, Jim, you are caught out, and you know it."—"No inching."—"Fair play's a jewel."

These are familiar terms. They show that boys have a very keen sense of justice. I do not believe this sense is keener in any than in children. And it is of vast importance that children should be encouraged in these judgments. Honesty in the play-ground is the foundation of honesty in business. If you tell lies about marbles, you will tell lies about money; if you cheat at ball, you will, perhaps, forge in bank; if you are dishonorable in your plays, you will probably be disgraced in your merchandise.

Fair play is the same thing as just play, right play, honest play, true play. Fairness in a game is the same as fairness in a bargain. It makes no difference whether it is marbles or ninepins or money; if you are unfair, you are unjust. Avoid it, then, as you would avoid any filthy, abominable thing on your hands or face. You might wash this off; but how can you wash foul sins off your conscience? Learn to hate a lie or a dishonest action.—Well Spring.

THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

"X. X.," on the fifth commandment, says "it is meant for children. It tells them to honor father and mother." I want to tell you why you should honor father and mother.

1. They love you more than any one else. You are their children, for whom they feel the warmest attachment. They wish you to be happy. All their toil by day and night is for you. And when they ask or command any thing of you, your happiness is bound up in your obedience, because they cannot ask, command, or prohibit anything of you but what is essential to your good. Their love for you makes this positive.

2. They have more knowledge of men and things, have more experience and age, and are, therefore, better prepared to say what is best for you; in other words, what will be most likely to make you happy. So that to their love for you is added their wisdom and experience in directing you in the road to happiness.

3. For these reasons God commands you to obey your parents, and only promises the blessing to the obedient. "Honor thy father and mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Now don't you think God and your parents love you better than any one else? And don't you think they know best what you ought to do? And will you not forever hereafter obey without a murmur? God help you all to do so.—S. S. Ad.

ADVICE TO YOUTH.

Do your duty now this moment, and you will do it every moment.
If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be such that no one will believe him.
Say but little, think much, and do more.
Avoid borrowing and lending.
Learn to say "no" with decision, "yes" with caution.
Never be idle.
If your hands cannot be employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.
Always speak the truth.
Make few promises.
Live up to your engagements.
Keep your own secrets, if you have any.
When you speak to a person, look him in the face.
Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.
Good character is above any thing else.
Never grieve over what you cannot prevent.
You are as accountable for moments of time, as for grains of gold.

BEULAH.

Earthly storms are beating wildly,
And the lightning's lurid glare
Lights the earth from pole to center,
And the thunders rend the air;
Signs of dissolution speedy,
Mark the earth's time-wrinkled brow,
And the christian knows his Master
Soon is coming; even now
He can almost hear the trumpet
Calling him, "My child, come home,
And forever join the chorus
In the Beulah that's to come."

We can hear the bugle sounding,
And the trumpet's call "to arms"
Comes up now from every quarter,
Mingled with most dire alarms;
And the heart of man is fearful,
For the things that are to be,
For the glass is darkly shaded,
That our eyes may never see;
And we cannot hear the music
Ringing through the heavenly dome,
Yet we know 'tis sweetly sounding
In the Beulah that's to come.

We have sought an heavenly country,
And our eyes have longed to see
All the fruits ambrosial clust'ring
Neath the leaves of life's fair tree.
Far as eye can sketch, the landscape
Shall be clothed in living green,
While the myriad host of singers
In their spotless robes are seen;
Singing praises to their Savior,
While in glory they may roam,—
Oh! we long to dwell in Beulah,
In the Beulah that's to come.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE 24TH OF MATTHEW.

NUMBER SIX.

Verse 36th,—"But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. "It is claimed by the best critics of the age that the proper rendering of the text is,—"Of that day and hour maketh known no man; no, not the angels, neither the Son, but my Father only." From which the following conclusion may be drawn: That the day and hour of Christ's coming is no part of the dispensation of the gospel committed to man. Here he does not make it known, or does not publish it. It does not come within the province of angels to make it known, neither was it a part of Christ's own ministry to make it known when he was on the earth.

To me, there is nothing inconsistent in supposing that the Lord Jesus, when he was on the earth, knew the day and hour of his second advent, and in like manner angels might entertain the same knowledge. But Christ and angels did not make it known to the world, neither hath he licensed any of his servants to do so; but, although the day and hour are not to be published to the world, there is nothing in all this that would forbid a prayerful investigation of the prophetic periods, and the probable knowledge of their beginning and end."

Verse 37th,—"But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." I understand by this that the moral condition of the world in the time of the end, will be as it was a hundred and twenty years during which Noah was engaged in building the ark. "For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating,"—not that it is wrong to eat and drink to meet our temporal wants, but they ate to gluttony and drank to drunkenness. They made life a carnival. It was one scene of festivity and carnal gratification. They also married and were given in marriage, to gratify the carnal mind, regardless of the design of the institution as it was originally established by a wise Creator.

The demoralized state of society in the antedeluvian age, is referred to in the sixth chapter of Genesis. "And it came to pass when men began to multiply upon the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose," which implies the practice of polygamy. "They took them wives of all which they chose," or as many as they chose. And it was in reference to this that Noah was found more righteous than any of that generation. Said God, "Him only have I found perfect in his generation"; i. e., he had and desired but one wife, according to the arrangement of the great Creator, who, in the beginning, said it is not good that man should be alone, and made for him an helpmeet. And said our Savior, in his ratification of the marriage institution, "In the beginning God created them male and female. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave unto his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh.

But the antedeluvians, like the present generation, corrupted their ways upon the earth until God could endure their wickedness no longer. Prompted by lust and pride, they cast off all divine restraint. A perfect parallelism may be drawn between the antedeluvians, an age of violence,—lust for gain, sodomy, and the gratification of every vile passion of the human heart, and our own day.

What meaneth this waking up of the mighty men of earth? Why this alarming increase of crime and violence the world over? Why every moral obligation, political and social, ignored, or, if not altogether ignored, so shaped as to give wider range to the selfishness of man? There is something fearfully ominous in all this. It is but the world's preparation for God to arise and shake terribly the earth, and execute his strange work of judgment. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

Verses 40, 41,—"Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left." In these two verses we have illustrated the truthfulness of our Lord's previous testimony, that no man will make known the day and hour of his coming. Hence there will be good and bad in the various associations and avocations of life, when the day and hour of our Lord's coming shall have come. Some in the field, some at the mill, and some locked in the embrace of sleep; when a light more radiant than the sun, penetrating the dark caverns of hades, and a trumpet sound such as until then earth never heard, arousing the tenants of death's charnel-house, and turning the vision of all the living to Him who now to fulfill his ancient promise is seen descending from heaven to earth in power and great glory.

But how diversified the scenes among the children of men. Some with radiant countenances and joyful hearts cry out, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him, and we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation;" while others who have set at naught and pierced him, will call for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. One (the righteous) shall be taken and the other left.

Verse 42,—"Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Here we have again the oft-repeated duty of watchfulness urged upon the church. This is to be her peculiar attitude all the while her Lord shall be away.

1. Carefully inspecting her own conduct and attitude.

2. Looking forward prospectively to the day of coming deliverance and glory.

3. Looking for her Lord now, when certain precursors of the event shall be manifested.

Verse 43,—"But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken up." "Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

From the above it is plain that the readiness of the church enjoined is implied in her watchfulness. The good man of the house would have watched had he known the hour the thief was coming. But you must watch for the coming of your Lord, although you do not know the hour of his coming.

From the 45th verse to the end of the chapter, we have presented two classes of servants in the church, as we approximate the end; viz., the good and the faithful, and the evil. "Who, then, is that faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" "Who, then," when the signs of the advent are seen, is wise to understand them, and faithful to proclaim them to the household of faith?

"Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." How doing? Why, giving meat in due season. What is meat in due season? Proclaiming the signs of the Lord's speedy coming. Some tell us that the signs mentioned in the 24th of Matthew are all to transpire in connection with the Lord's personal coming. If that were so it would neutralize the utility of those signs, as well as destroy them as signs. It is impossible to confound a sign, or the premonition of some coming event, with the event itself. Again, the signs will be the occasion of the faithful servant crying,—My Lord is coming, and that proclamation will constitute the meat in due season to the household of faith.

Verses 47th and 48th,—"Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods." "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming." The good servant is known by his proclamation of the evidences of the Lord's coming, and the evil servant by his opposition to the proclamation, and those who make it.

Verse 49th,—"And shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and eat and drink with the drunken;" i. e., he says hard things against those who are faithful to their work and calling, and join and comingle with the unbelieving rabble of this world, as did the apostate priests of Jeremiah's time. See Jer. 18: 18. "Then said they, come and let us devise against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the wise, nor the word of the Lord from the prophet. Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words." Jeremiah had been telling them that on account of their wickedness and worldly conformity, the administration of the law should pass from the hands of the wise, and the word of the Lord from the prophet, which stirred up the opposing element.

So our Savior teaches it will be, when the time has come for his people, on the strength of the signs of the times, to lift up their heads because their redemption draweth nigh. The faithful one proclaims the near approach of the judgment. The evil servant says the vision is for many days, and he prophesieth of times afar off. He says my Lord delayeth his coming. But how fearful and overwhelming the predicted judgment.

Verses 50th and 51st,—"The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of. And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Cut him asunder, is a form of speech used to represent a terrible punishment that will overtake the hypocrites of the last days, a punishment more severe than that which will be realized by the common unbeliever. His portion with the hypocrites. This must refer to those mentioned in the last part of the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, which portrays the moral condition of things in the Jewish church at the time of the first advent. The last part of the twenty-fourth chapter presents us with a moral miniature of the church in the time of the end.

It was said to the ruling element of the Jewish church at the first advent of our Lord, "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites . . . . ye shall receive greater damnation;" i. e., your punishment will be greater than the common unbeliever, who has not enjoyed common advantages with yourselves. Concerning the evil servants in the church at the time of the second advent, they shall have their portion with the hypocrites. What hypocrites? Evidently those that lived at the first advent, and did not discern the signs of their time, who received greater condemnation. So the evil servant who does not discern the signs of this last time, but is in darkness that that day should overtake him as a thief, shall, like the hypocrites of the previous dispensation, receive the greatest censure and condemnation.

How fearful the responsibility of the minister of Christ whom this Chief Shepherd hath ordained to feed his flock. Dear reader, is this your calling? and if so, are you heralding abroad in thunder tones the coming of that Just One? If not, look well to your ways. The Lord will be here in a little while and call thee to an account for thy stewardship. We cannot treat this subject indifferently without incurring the greatest guilt.

"O! wake thy slumbering virgins,
Send forth the solemn cry,
Let all the saints repeat it,
The Bridegroom draweth nigh.
May all our lamps be burning,
Our loins will girded be,
Each longing heart preparing
With joy to welcome Thee."

THE TRUTH DISCOVERED.

(Concluded.)

B. C. 473. "In the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king," "this house was finished." Ezra 6: 15. But since we find the Jews employed in building before this Darius had any knowledge of their doing so (Ezra 5: 3-17), and that his commandment was not to the Jews to build, but to their enemies, saying,—"Let the work of this house of God alone" (Ezra 6: 7), we have always been perplexed to know what we are to understand by the house being builded "according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia."—Ezra 6: 14. But since we have learned that Darius Hystaspes was living in Babylon, and Artaxerxes in Media, in the year B. C. 488, at which time Cyrus king of Persia gave "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," the difficulty is removed. We now understand that these three kings, being united in the government, that they signed and endorsed that which Cyrus did; and as Darius was second in authority, his name stands next after Cyrus, or before Artaxerxes. When Darius Hystaspes was slain, this Artaxerxes removed his residence to Babylon, at which time he, in the year of jubilee, B. C. 485, caused "the work of the house of God" to cease (Ezra 4: 24); but as soon as Artaxerxes was dead, the Jews again commenced building the temple. Haggai 1: 1.

B. C. 473. Thucydides informs us that Aristagoras having fled "from king Darius," he attempted a settlement "on the river Strymore"; thirty-two years after which, "he was driven away" "by the Athenians." According to Herodotus, this occurred about thirteen years before the death of Darius, the son of Hystaspes (Herod. b. 2, s. 126), whose death is by the Parian Chronicle fixed to B. C. 460; to which, if we add thirteen, we have B. C. 473 for the date of the death of Aristagoras; and if to 473 we add 32, we have B. C. 505, or the 17th of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, for the time at which Aristagoras fled "from king Darius," which is an additional proof of the correctness of our chronology; for it proves that Darius Hystaspes was king of Persia thirty-two years before the death of Aristagoras, who died thirteen years before the death of Darius the son of Hystaspes.

According to Prideaux, Aristagoras died in the 23d year of the reign of Darius the son of Hystaspes, which he places in B. C. 499, to which add thirty-two, and we have B. C. 431 for the time at which Aristagoras first fled "from king Darius"; but this is ten years before the beginning of the reign of the first Darius; hence proves the incorrectness of the so called Ptolemy's Canon.

B. C. 466. In an article on the Parian Chronicle, we observed that it gave B. C. 466 for the date of the battle of Marathon; that is, by following Dr. Hales' method of rectification. This gives B. C. 456 for the time Xerxes invaded Greece; for according to Thucydides it was in the tenth year after the battle of Marathon.

B. C. 460. According to the Parian Chronicle, "Darius dies and Xerxes his son reigns" in B. C. 460. The 35 years also given him ends there. This is one year earlier than the time we gave in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened." But it becomes us to be open to conviction and always ready to exchange error for truth.

B. C. 459. Joiakim succeeded his father Joshua and was "high priest the second time for forty-eight years."

B. C. 457. The time Xerxes invaded Greece is fixed by a total eclipse of the sun, found to have occurred on the 16th of Dec. B. C. 457. According to Pingre's list of eclipses, this wants a few minutes of being total. But since Prof. Hudson has favored us with a list of those eclipses, which were not only calculated by Ptolemy, but also seen and "CAREFULLY OBSERVED" by him, we are enabled to prove, to the satisfaction of all who are willing to examine the matter, that it was not only total at Celenæ, but was a very dark eclipse.

B. C. 456. "The battle of Thermopylæ, and the sea fight by the Greeks at Salamis against the Persians, in which the Greeks were victorious," is fixed to B. C. 456 by the Parian Chronicle.

B. C. 455. The battle of Platæa, which was fought in the second year of the war, is by the Parian Chronicle fixed to B. C. 455.

According to Herodotus, an eclipse of the sun occurred a short time before this battle, and by calculation there was an eclipse of the sun at the isthmus, in Greece, on the 31st of May, B. C. 455. In the "Book of Daniel Opened," we have observed the advocates for Ptolemy's Canon have failed to find either of these eclipses of the sun; and we must conclude that these two eclipses of the sun, with the combined evidence of the Parian Chronicle and the Olympic games, do prove almost to an absolute certainty the time at which Xerxes invaded Greece.

B. C. 439. At the year B. C. 460, we mentioned that the Parian Chronicle gave one year earlier for the beginning of the reign of Xerxes, than we had given in the "Book of Daniel Opened," which raises the end of his reign to B. C. 439, or just forty-nine years from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem; and this seems to be correct, for the following reason: some translate Dan. 9: 25 thus,—"From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem shall be seven weeks, and unto the Messiah the Prince threescore and two weeks." That this is the correct rendering, appears from the division; for the way it stands in king James' translation, the division being destroyed, it amounts to the same as if it read sixty-nine weeks without any division.

The object of the division seems to have been this:—when the kingdom of Babylon was overthrown, Daniel being unable to see anything in the way of the beginning of the pushing of the kingdom of Persia, for the slaughter of his people, was deeply concerned and engaged in prayer for them; at which time the angel Gabriel "being caused to fly swiftly," informed him that there must yet be an interval of forty-nine years before the beginning of that vision, or pushing for the slaughter of his people, which he had seen in the vision; for, after telling Daniel to "consider the vision," he informed him that "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem . . . there shall be seven weeks"; and there is nothing else mentioned for the seven weeks to reach but the beginning of the vision. Some say the forty-nine years are to reach the completion of the wall; and if so, it proves fatal to the theory of those who say so, for they place the going forth of the commandment in the 20th of Artaxerxes, only twelve years before the completion of the wall.

The particular epoch in the kingdom of Persia, to which the seven weeks extend, is given thus:—"There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia, and the fourth shall be far richer than they all; and by his strength, through his riches, he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia."—Dan. 11: 2. From this we learn that the "seven weeks" reach the end of the reign of Xerxes; hence, his son Artaxerxes must be the king in whose reign the pushing begins.

B. C. 437. According to Prideaux, in the second year after the death of Xerxes, his son "Artaxerxes, having drawn together a much stronger army," "overpowered his brother Hystaspes, and utterly overthrew him in a second battle," from which he came in "full possession of the whole empire"; hence, with B. C. 437 begins the reign of Artaxerxes the son of Xerxes. In the document given by Scaliger, he is said to have reigned thirty-three years. It is added, "Nehemiah and Esther in his reign." Times of Daniel, p. 247.

B. C. 426. In the second year of Cyrus, that is B. C. 487, they "laid the foundation of the temple." "But the building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes," who died B. C. 486, at which time Joshua, "in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, . . went up to Assuerus." "In the first year of" Darius Longimanus, "Joshua, the high priest, returned to Jerusalem." He "therefore filled the office of high priest in the first instance for thirty-six years"; that is, during the entire reign of Darius Hystaspes, "until the twelfth year of Assuerus the elder; and Joakim his son, in his absence, eight years," from B. C. 486 to 478. "The same Joshua, when he returned, occupied the pontificate twenty years, until the twentieth year of Longimanus." B. C. 459 Joiakim succeeded him. He was high priest the second time for forty-eight years, until the twelfth year of Artaxerxes Assuerus the Great."

Here we find the husband of Esther called both Artaxerxes and Assuerus, which accounts for his being called Artaxerxes by Nehemiah, and Ahasuerus in the book of Esther. But by the expression, "until the twelfth year of Artaxerxes," we are not to understand that Joakim's forty-eight years end there, but that this was within the limits of the forty-eight years; for it is added, "He wrote the history of Esther, and instituted the Purim, in commemoration"; which could not have been done earlier than the thirteenth of Artaxerxes. From the reference made to "the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia" (Est. 10: 2), it would appear that the book of Esther was not written until many years after the 12th of Artaxerxes; but as the forty-eight years reach fourteen years after, there is room enough; hence an additional proof of the correctness of our chronology.

B. C. 405. With B. C. 405 ends the reign of Artaxerxes. With his reign, according to Josephus, the sacred canon of the Holy Scriptures closed, as no prophet wrote after that time. Therefore, if the second book of Esdras was written by him, it must have been written not later than B. C. 405, and in that book it is said, "My son Jesus shall be revealed with those that be with him, and they that remain shall rejoice within four hundred years" (2 Esdras 7: 28). 400 from 405 will give us B. C. 5 for the year in which Jesus was born in Bethlehem; thus proving the correctness of our chronology.

Says one, "But this is an apocryphal book." To which we reply, had it not been an apocryphal book, we could not have used it here, seeing that we are endeavoring to establish a chronology outside of the Bible. But since this is not regarded as one of God's sacred books, we have as good right to use it here as any other book, which is not regarded as of divine origin. Though we must admit that a portion of the sacred book of Esdras has visible marks of forgery, this, at least, has God's sacred stamp of inspiration (Deut. 18: 22). 1. As to the name "Jesus," by which Christ is called. 2. The time of his birth, which is 400 years. 3. That Christ should die. 4. The resurrection of those that sleep in the earth. But the reason why this book is regarded as apocryphal is, because it is supposed to have been written since the birth of Christ, and if so, this removes the stamp as an inspired work; yet it remains good authority for the purpose for which we have used it; for it will then exhibit what was at that day believed to be the interval of time between the death of Esdras and the birth of Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

Ptolemy's Canon, the foundation on which the received chronology of the world is based, claims astronomy (and, we might add, astronomy only) as its authority. The chronology given in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," in its original form, claimed the word of God, and that only, as the ground of its authority. But finding that men have not confidence enough in the word of God to receive a chronology which claims the Bible only as its authority, we have here given one builded on authorities outside of the Bible.

And now, when we compare this chronology (which is the best authority found outside of the Bible) with our chronology, and find that, with the exception of the death of Darius having occurred one year earlier than we have supposed, the dates are identically the same; we ask, in the name of all that is reasonable, how can a chronology claim better authority than is offered in support of ours?

THE CRISIS OF THE WORLD.

EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—

Dear Brother:—It is alarming to contemplate the reticence of almost all our religious publications upon prophetic subjects, and especially upon those mighty revolutions which are dreadfully imminent. Tumults and changes, dissolutions and confederations are just before us, mighty upheavals and infernal compacts; but the religious press is ominously silent concerning the pregnant and tremendous future. Nay, even the animus and policy of the popular religious journalism is antagonistic to discussions and interpretations of prophetic scripture; at least in which any thing shall be intimated or asserted affirming the impending advent of Jesus. O, sad and unhappy slumber and silence! O, mournful inaction of power! O, ill-ominous prejudice, or unbelief, when the very heavens are darkening with the heavy clouds of woe, and the lightnings are sharpening their fiery arrows to leap and rain upon a mad and distempered world!

But, nevertheless, a duty is imposed on the earnest and faithful few; a duty of the most imperative and urgent magnitude, to sound the alarm of coming judgments. The trumpet of unfearing admonition must be sounded, and in all its loud and vehement intonations must one thing be incessantly proclaimed—"Beware and understand! the crisis of the world has come! If ever there was eloquence in earnestness, let it be illustrated now. If ever there was time or occasion, exigency or necessity, when Zion's faithful watchmen should with one voice and one mind cry aloud and spare not, it is now! The sin-cursed world is ripe for judgment! The forces of wickedness on earth and in the air and everywhere are muttering and conspiring, with subtle and determinate earnestness; and so also now must the powers and forces of righteousness and truth be mustered and prepared, and the signal of alarm must be sounded with courageous and valiant and united energy.

Hark! O men of God, while the Lord God speaks in an alarm-cry of prophetic thunder, "Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger, for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy."

Now, dear brethren who are believers in the quick coming of our Lord Jesus, you who will have part in the first translation of 144,000, you who by faithfulness and consecration will thus escape the fearful judgments that are impending on a careless and ungodly world, and on an unbelieving and slumbering church, and stand before the Son of man on Mount Sion, a special and inevitable duty is yours; a duty of fearless, faithful, and active witnessing.

Beyond question, the right note struck, the right testimony given, is a loud admonition to the world to beware of Napoleon, the Antichrist. I know how generally this doctrine or asseveration may be discredited or even derided by christians and ministers and journalists; but let us open our understandings candidly to apprehend the truth. Let us be willing and anxious to be taught of God, both in his written word and in the import of current events. Let us scrutinize with penetrating sharpness this demon-evolution of the last days—Spiritualism. Let us ponder with thoughtful and solemn attention the progressive development of this diabolical system, through which the angry and malignant hosts of Satan are to operate in subjecting and destroying the earth. This is the medium, and this the avenue, through which the powers of the air, routed from their great airy range in circumjacent space and circumambient air by Michael and his angels, are to communicate the intensity of infernal malice and the utmost of infernal cunning, and endow and inspire, animate and arouse every available human agent, while Napoleon, as the designated earthly head of empire, will command the legion of compacted and apostate earthly powers.

Dear brethren, who look for Jesus to break in pieces the colossal and terrible image of Daniel, do not discard the assurance of the identity of the literal man of sin. Watch! watch! WATCH!! And when that identity can no longer by any possibility be questioned, when his headship of ten kingdoms is so visibly nearing its consummation, when the covenant with the Jews is so certainly approaching and sure to be accomplished, let us, as watchmen and monitors of coming trial, be on the alert, instantly ready for action; ready for every possible emergency, ready to preach, to itinerate, to cry aloud, to diffuse the truth of coming judgments, to run to and fro, to preach the gospel of the kingdom, to do God's will. Let the watchword be "Ready! men of God; ready! ready; for the crisis of the world!"

OUR WORK.

I am one who believes that God calls men to a particular part, or work of the ministry, and furthermore, that every son and daughter whom he receiveth, chasteneth, and scourgeth, has a part of this work to perform. Now for proof of this position, St. Paul says in 1 Cor. 12: 3-13, "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost," or Spirit. Here we see that every member of the body of Christ is taught by God to know the truth. "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." Don't this teach that there are different parts belonging to every member to perform? But let us follow him a little further: "And there are differences of administration, but the same Lord."

Not only different ways of administering his gifts, but in the sixth verse he tells us that God operates differently on persons possessing those different gifts; but in the eleventh verse he tells us that "all these" gifts "worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he [God] will." Hence it is the will of God to have these gifts in the church, in order to portion out to all the different constitutional dispositions of men. This is just as "he will." It is then God's will that he should be so.

But the question is, what are these gifts for? Let Paul answer it. Eph. 4: 11,—"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." The twelfth verse shows what for:—1. "For the perfecting of the saints," is one thing, or the first thing. 2. "For the work of the ministry." 3. "For the edifying of the body of Christ." Now the question comes in, how long are these gifts to continue? St. Paul answers it right here. Verse thirteenth:—"Till we [the church] all come in the unity of the faith." But they are to continue still longer than when they come into unity;—"and of the knowledge of the Son of God:—"unto a perfect man." But more still:—"unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Let me ask the question, has the church attained to these perfections? If not, we are lacking the very means that Jesus Christ ordained for its perfection; and that is the reason of its divisions, and schisms, and subdivisions: it is for the want of more of the apostolic spirit, "continuing instant in prayer," "lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting," wrestling with God in prayer, that he would restore these necessary gifts to the church; that he might perfect it in heart, in life, in the knowledge of the Son of God, making them of one heart, of one mind, so that whatever they do, whether it is manual labor, or whether we eat or drink, that every thing may be done to glorify and honor God.

O for Paul's denying spirit,
For his missionary zeal;
And the perfect love of Jesus,
Every christian's heart to fill.

We want men filled with this holy zeal, who are willing to take their lives in their hands, and lay them down on the cross of Christ; the love of Christ constraining them to go into the highways and hedges to compel them to come in; men who can preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from God out of heaven, then we would soon see sectarianism, and every other ism bow to the Bible; and God would be honored, and his name glorified in the salvation of sinners; but the votaries of religion have taken hold too much of the shadow instead of the substance.

Admitting that God calls some men to open up the prophecies and revelations, which I believe God is doing, let me enforce Paul's exhortation, he that waiteth on his "ministering," let him do that; and "he that exhorteth," let him do that; but be careful that it is done with the ability that God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For one, I feel willing to do what I can to refute the false doctrine that the soul is immortal. I was a tenacious believer in the existence of an immortal soul; but living one winter by myself, where I had nothing to do but to pray, and read the Bible, without the aid of any other books whatever, or even knowing that there was a person in the world that did not believe in the immortality of the soul, that is a professor, I became clearly convinced that it is a false doctrine. The evidence was very clear to my mind. I cannot tell the joy that I felt to think that I had found out the truth.

I am also fully satisfied of the destruction of the wicked; and am willing to help defend the truth on this subject.

Again, I am convinced that nothing but entire holiness can give us a fitness to have a part in the first resurrection; and that there is no way to obtain that fitness, but by seeking for it with all the mind, might and strength, by repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

PAUL'S MATHEMATICS.

Paul was an educated man. It is said that he and Luke were the only well educated men among the apostles. Luke was a graduate of the—(I don't know what) Medical College, and Paul studied law with Gamaliel, L. L. D.

But Paul understood something beside law. He was a good, thorough mathematician.—There are some who have gone through arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and conic sections, who have not as good a mathematical knowledge as Paul had; and yet I do not know as he went further than simple addition. There are some who go through that fundamental rule, but do not know how to perform the examples Paul worked out. They never seem to have found the rule or to have learned to apply it, so as to know on what principles examples are wrought.

Paul gives one of them in an old book, which happily contains a number of rules by which it can be done. He directs us to "ADD" to faith virtue, or, more properly, courage; to courage, temperance; temperance, patience; patience, godliness; to godliness, brotherly kindness; to brotherly kindness, charity.

Now the trouble with some would be to decide whether this were compound or simple addition, and it might be thought that the different things to be added were not of the same denomination; but if we look a moment we shall see that they are. The denomination is Christianity. It is not the Baptist denomination, nor Methodist, nor Adventist, but Christianity; and the different specified terms are like 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., and the sum total is, "no unfruitfulness," and "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." It is a great work, but, thank God! it can be done."

Paul often reckoned. Said he, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us," etc. That was reckoning well. Some good mathematician would doubtless have "reckoned" the other way, and made a large amount of the "suffering," and lost sight of the "glory" entirely. Not so with Paul. He called them "light afflictions," and, strange enough to those not acquainted with his method of working, the "example" brings glory out of it all, as the great sum total of all these sufferings. Better have them than not, then.

He told Christians to reckon themselves dead indeed unto sin. This does not seem to be addition, but an example in compound proportion. It sets men and women to work on an important question, for to get so you can reckon thus requires a great amount "of self-denial, and self-examination, and patient continuance in well-doing;" and the contrast is marked. We may well call it "compound proportion." It is compound, because dead and alive are both compounded, by a strange paradox, in one person; and it is "proportion," because one must be as much dead as alive, and alive as dead. Oh, to be dead, dead! DEAD!! indeed unto sin, and gloriously alive to God, is to be desired above any other. How exalted into the favor of God is one who can thus "reckon." He is prepared to graduate from this course of study to kingdom life.

But Paul's great "sum" is in summing up the "things which he had spoken." It was that we have a high priest who has passed into the heavens, is there to plead, and from thence will come again. Paul was an Adventist; I mean a Bibleite, a Christian. If he had lived down in these days I should have supposed that he had been at work on Bible Chronology, or "summing" up the 1290 and 1335 days; but in his time the "book" was "sealed up"; still he knew that Jesus would come again,—he could arrive at that conclusion, he could get that "answer" to his "problem," if he did not "reckon" time. Thank God, Bible mathematics are for these times, and we can "add" all the Christian graces together, and having them abounding in us, be neither barren nor unfruitful, and we are in the time when the book of Daniel is unsealed, and the Lamb has broken the seven-sealed book. So we can reckon that the Lord is at hand. Let us be faithful.

L. C. MCKINNEY.

☞ Ancient ecclesiastical history relates a beautiful incident, which affords a fine comment on St. Paul's injunction, "Let not the sun go down upon thy wrath." Two Bishops having violently quarreled, one of them sent to the other the following message: "Brother, the sun is going down." Upon receiving this message, the offended Bishop forgot his anger, ran to the house of his Episcopal brother, fell upon his neck, and kissed him.

DAY BOOK,—BUT NO LEDGER.

Business men find it necessary to keep both day-book and ledger, but christians must have but one; viz., a day-book. Although we are redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, and faith is the condition of salvation, yet the christian finds it necessary to keep a day-book, in order that he may test the genuineness of his faith. For if we are true believers in the Son of God, and in the record God has given of his Son (John 5: 10), then are we able and willing to yield perfect obedience to God's great law of Love, as given by the Master in his first and second great commandments. Matt. 22: 36–40. Here then is seen the necessity of a day-book, in the fact that, although perfect obedience is intimately connected with the exercise of a perfect faith in Jesus, and a reliance on the "blood of sprinkling" (Heb. 1: 24), there is also a necessity of self-examination. And this must be done daily. "But let a man examine himself."—11: 28. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not . . . that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates."—2 Cor. 13: 5.

The warfare between the flesh and the Spirit makes a daily examination necessary. Please read Gal. 5: 16–25, where the combatants, the conflict, and victors, are clearly brought to view. I will notice a few of the advantages, and conclude this article.

1. We must admit that it is possible for a child of God to fall into sin. The possibility creates the danger. Now a daily examination lessens the danger.

2. Those who are most faithful in this good work are most susceptible of the quenchings and grievings of the Spirit; therefore they are the first to detect themselves in fault, and do not need the services of the "whisperer," "tale-bearer," "backbiter," etc.

3. How ridiculous these characters, just mentioned, appear in publishing the faults of a christian, when long before it has been confessed at the throne of grace, freely forgiven, and so overruled for his good that he is tenfold stronger to resist temptation than before.

Finally, in view of this subject, how gladly the believer can adopt the language of Wesley:—

"O may the least omission pain
My well-instructed soul;
And drive me to the blood again
That makes the wounded whole."

CHLOE LANKTON.

On the 7th instant, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to Chloe Lankton, of New Hartford, Ct., by her pastor, J. B. Cleaveland. She still lies on her bed day and night, as she has done for more than thirty years, being as unable to stand as to fly. Still is she the victim of excruciating pain, from which there can be no deliverance except by death. But she is patient as ever, and much more cheerful than it would seem she could possibly be in her circumstances. While her divine Master had not where to lay his head, she knows not whence is to come her daily bread. But she meekly prays, and daily her bread is given her, now by some kind almoner at hand, and now by some one far off.

At the last Communion at her house, she said,

"I have many and many a time thought, Now God's people are communed at the Lord's table. How great a privilege! How happy they must be. O that I could join them! And then I have thought again, If I cannot enjoy such privilege, I am glad there are so many who can."

Her present proximity to the village renders it practicable for her, through the kindness of the deacons, to partake of the Lord's Supper, at nearly every Communion had by the church of which she is a member. God bless Chloe Lankton. And her numerous and sympathizing friends say, Amen!

By her pastor, J. B. CLEAVELAND.

DISCUSSION.

We propose to have a discussion with Mr. Johnson, a Universalist preacher, in the Universalist meeting-house, at Canton Mills, Me., commencing Thursday, Feb. 1st.

Question: "Is man immortal?"

MASSENA CENTRE.

Our meetings in Massena Centre, N. Y., began on Lord's day, Jan. 14th, and continued through the week and over the following Lord's day. Massena Centre is nineteen miles from Pottsdam Junction. The latter place is ninety-three miles west of Rouses Point, on the Northern (Ogdensburg) Railway. We go by stage from Pottsdam Junction to Massena, then four miles by private conveyance to Massena Centre. The latter place is about a mile and a half from the river St. Lawrence, and nearly one hundred miles west of Montreal, C. E. The inhabitants are mostly farmers in comfortable circumstances, characterized by kindness, intelligence and hospitality. We enjoyed our visit there very much. We found plenty of good homes. Bro. D. T. Taylor was with us to assist in the meetings. He has preached there a portion of the time for several months, and is highly esteemed for his faithful labors and interesting preaching.

Although the weather a portion of the time was very cold, or stormy, yet a large number were present at every meeting. Some came from four to eight miles during the very cold nights. Our meetings were held in the Baptist meeting-house. From Thursday we held two meetings a day. The Lord was pleased to do a great work for the people in that place. We think we have never seen as much accomplished during the first week in any place where we have ever labored. The first Lord's day evening one rose for prayers, two on Monday evening, several on Tuesday evening, and the number increased till between forty and fifty came forward for prayers at a time. Some were youth, some in middle life, others whose heads were whitened by the frosts of age. It was an interesting sight. Almost every body seemed to be under conviction. About forty were converted or reclaimed from a backslidden state. It was heart-cheering to hear their stirring testimonies in favor of the blessed hope, and the comforts of the christian religion. Many youth were converted and took an active part in the meetings. Parents who had prayed for years for their dear children, and wives who had prayed long for their husbands, saw their prayers most signally answered. It was a scene over which angels must have rejoiced greatly.

Lord's day, Jan. 21st, was bitterly cold and terribly windy; but notwithstanding all this, five happy souls were buried in baptism. It was not decided to have baptism till after the close of the Saturday evening meeting. Had there been due notice given, many others, no doubt, would have been baptized.

In the evening, we celebrated the death and sufferings of our Lord, by coming around the communion table. Sixty or seventy partook with us. Several of other denominations united with us at the sacrament, as they had also done in the exercises of the meetings, sharing in the rich blessings afforded by the Most High. We found no sectarian walls up to prevent the progress of the work of the Lord.

At the close of the communion, we invited those forward for prayers who wished to be christians. Forty came. It was a melting season. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us. This was the last meeting we had the privilege of enjoying with that dear people. We left many in tears, who said most earnestly, "Pray for me."

Bro. Taylor remained to go on with the meetings. We hope to hear from him soon, and learn more about the good work.

WAR CLOUDS.

Again we see war clouds arising, threatening a storm between America and England. There are many restless spirits, who are anxious to get up a quarrel between the countries; and it is also evident that the powers of darkness are at work with untiring zeal to produce as many quarrels as possible.

During the late war of the rebellion, it is claimed that the cruiser Shenandoah, which was employed as a piratical vessel against the northern states, was fitted out for that purpose with the consent of the British government. It is said that part of her crew were rescued from the Alabama, and shielded from the arm of the law, by British intervention, while it was known to the English government, that they were pirates acting for the rebellion.

Mr. Adams, Minister to England, and Earl Clarendon, have been holding an interesting correspondence on this subject; but have come to no satisfactory understanding about the matter. The prospect now is rather threatening. We wait for further developments.

Says the Boston Daily Journal, of Jan. 12:

"We have praised the skill with which Mr. Adams has maintained our side of this discussion. But it is painful to note how little impression has been made upon the British government by his just representations; and we think that every thoughtful reader of the correspondence will close the perusal with the sense that the relations of the two countries on this subject are in a very grave and delicate situation. Through some inexplicable bias on the part of England, we have not been fairly dealt with. The question has as yet made no approach to a settlement, but it goes over to the future, a just subject of anxiety."

THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF LONDON.

Nothwithstanding the great light that has shone upon the "Christian nations" so called, it will be found in the centre of their power, from whence they send forth their missionaries to heathen lands, with large sums of money, tracts and Bibles, that even within a stone's throw, perhaps, of the very place where they hold their great anniversary meetings, to hear reports of missionary labor in foreign lands, are to be found many of the worst heathen in the world. The following statement recently made by Dr. Pusey, of London, illustrates this sad fact:—

"There are places in London, as I have myself seen, where, for generation after generation, the name of Christ has never reached, and their inhabitants had much better have been born in Calcutta than in London, because the charity which sends forth christian missionaries would the rather reach them."

If christians wish to do missionary work, they do not need to go to heathen lands, for they will find plenty of heathen in all great cities, even in the United States, where the gospel sun has shone brighter than upon any other part of the globe. The richest field of labor this generation has seen is now in the South, among the Freedmen and others, who are sending forth the Macedonian cry with great earnestness. Shall we turn a deaf ear to their entreaties? let them grope in darkness, while thousands and millions of dollars are given to send missionaries to distant lands, where they cannot accomplish as much in a year as they can in the southern states in one week? This is the time for action. Let us be alive in the good work.

We think our special work, as a people, is to preach to them the "gospel of the kingdom," rather than to spend our strength in establishing schools to teach them arts and sciences. The government and the various societies, will devote most of their energies to the latter object; hence, the Freedmen will be most in need of faithful gospel preaching and teaching.

We learn from those of our brethren who are prepared to speak from actual observation, that the money we may pay out merely for the education of the Freedmen, will accomplish but little good compared with what it would if used to send out missionaries.

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 5.

Having found out the CAUSE of the spiritual manifestations; that they are the work of demons operating through human agents, or mediums; and that the spirits of our deceased friends have no part nor lot in the matter; we proceed to notice the principal objections to our position, which are urged by those who sustain Spiritualism.

1. Although the Spiritualists admit that many of the spirits are liars and deceivers; yet they claim that all are not bad spirits because some give good advice. This may be true. For instance; the spirits often advise their followers to leave off intoxicating drinks, tobacco, and unhealthy food, and give other good advice. It should be remembered that these are "SEDUCING SPIRITS."—1 Tim. 4: 1. How does a seducer go to work? Does he let his victim know that he is a seducer? Certainly not. How does he escape detection? By kind deeds and words, and good advice. In this way he gains the confidence of the one he would lead to ruin, so that he is followed by his victim, who suspects no evil, because of the "good advice." May not demons do in the same way? Such a course would be in perfect keeping with their character. This is just what constitutes them "seducing spirits."

We will give an example of their work. Many such might be given. We were acquainted with a devoted christian woman in South Boston, who was persuaded to attend a Spiritualist circle in company with several other professors of religion. The spirit requested them to read in the Scriptures, which they did. This led them to believe that a good spirit had come. They were then desired to pray. They had no further doubts but that the spirit of a christian was visiting them, and giving good instruction. Accordingly, they went again and again. When the seducing spirit had fully gained their confidence, so that they believed all he said, he then endeavored to convince them that some portions of the Bible were not reliable. He continued his infidel objections till she, who who was a devoted disciple of Jesus when she first visited the circle, became a medium, and laid her Bible away as of little or no value.

But suppose the seducing spirit should begin with a company of deists, instead of christians, would he say to them read the Bible and pray? Nay, verily. But he would lead them further on in unbelief, till he got them into practical atheism. These spirits never lead their followers to Jesus as their Savior, when they are allowed to finish their work.

2. Again it is objected against our position, that the medium imitates the writing of the deceased friend, therefore it must be his spirit. But a counterfeiter will imitate the writing of any individual he ever saw. Cannot a demon do as much as a man?

3. It is still objected that the voice of the departed friend is perfectly imitated by the medium, consequently it must be his spirit. But theatrical performers will imitate any voice they ever heard. Have demons less power to imitate?

It is the special work of these demons to deceive the human race, and make people believe they are the spirits of our departed friends, in order to lead men away from God and the Bible. If they would tell us who they were at first, no christian would be led to depart from the faith by their false teaching; but if they can by any means lead us to believe that the spirit of a dear mother, father, companion, brother or sister, who died happy in the Lord, has come to visit us; of course we should not fear that they would guide us wrong, when they manifested so much interest in our welfare while living here. This constitutes the deception. They first pretend to be the spirits of dear friends, and to convince us of this they give us good advice, and thus seduce the people by their fair words; and step by step lead their followers away from the road to life eternal into the broad way to destruction. We think there is no surer way to eternal death than to follow the teachings of these "seducing spirits."

DISTRESS OF THE FREEDMEN.

All accounts go to show that there is great suffering among the Freedmen at the South this winter. Their former masters do not care to keep them, and they have not learned yet to help themselves. Their condition is truly a sad one.

A letter from Savannah speaks of the miseries which threaten thousands of poor, homeless negroes unless they betake themselves to some organized system of labor, and adds:—"I am reliably informed by an old resident here, that thirty thousand of the blacks have already died since the close of the war, in this city and surrounding country alone." Similar accounts come from various quarters.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT.

There are various speculations as to what the Fenians purpose to do. All begin to see that they are in sober earnest, and from their boldness, we may conclude they are confident of success. It also appears from their sayings and doings that the hour for action is at hand. We are well satisfied that the whole movement is against every Protestant interest, as well as England. It is like a Boa Constrictor, brought from a foreign land in the winter, getting warm through our kindness; and when fully invigorated, it becomes a terror to all around. It looks like the last rally of the "little horn" described in Daniel's prophecy. He says, "The same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

In the inaugural address to the Fenians, from Col. Roberts, he says:—

"It is criminal to waste time in idle discussion—action must be the order of the day. Our means, energies, the whole of our thoughts must be directed toward the military arm of the Fenian Brotherhood, through which alone can be accomplished the freedom of Ireland. The Brotherhood must make their mark on another field than those on which they have heretofore battled. Every energy must be given to aid the veteran soldier who directs military affairs of the Brotherhood. England must meet privateers on every ocean and Irish foes in every clime."

THE LAST RESORT.

As Napoleon has commenced taking away his troops from Rome, the Pope now begins to see his critical position. He did not believe Napoleon would leave him alone on the "seven hills," but the fact now stares him in the face. But it appears help is promised from a new and strange source.

"There is a tract now circulating in the provinces, with the written approbation of the Archbishop of Tours and the Bishops of Bayonne and Lucon, which holds out the prospect of the temporal power being shortly aided by a legion which was wanting to Gen. Lamoriciere at Castelfidardo. It says: "The Holy Virgin has appeared to a nun of surpassing sanctity, and said to her—'The predictions of La Salette are about to be accomplished; recommend many prayers to appease the wrath of God.' The nun answered—'You are all powerful; you ask God to protect his church; what credit have I?' The Holy Virgin replied—'God will grant his help in answer to prayers addressed to me, and the more numerous they are the greater will be the aid. I will come with legions of angels, and I will save the church.'"

The position of Rome grows more critical every week now. All eyes are being turned to see what shall transpire in that noted city, represented by the woman on the scarlet-colored beast, in the seventeenth chapter of Revelation. We may expect the martyrs will soon rise from the dead to witness her burning.

MINISTERIAL ADVICE.

The following advice is from an essay on "recreation," read before the "Boston Special Science Association," at Chickering's Hall, in Boston. It comes from a minister. The report of the essay says, when speaking of the writer's position, "He was now in favor of an arrangement in all schools whereby the pupils could take occasional excursions into the country, attend dances, operas, oratorios and dramatic performances, and that no evil, but much good would result therefrom if the exercise of these liberties was under wise management."

Would the good old preachers, who lived fifty years ago, have given such advice relative to the youth of our land? We think the enemy of all righteousness would say amen to such advice.

CRIMINAL ITEMS.

Columns of news might be made out weekly from the reported cases of crime, similar to the following:—

"The New York Express reports a trial in that city where four girls, sisters, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-two, were witnesses. They are all inmates of one house of ill-fame in that city. Their father is an orthodox clergyman."

The more intelligent, amiable, beautiful, and lovely the young lady may be, the greater her danger from the vile snares of the seducer. How true it is that "seducers" are growing "worse and worse." But few are wise enough to escape all their snares, when they undertake to accomplish the ruin of the innocent fair.

Here is another sample of the daring wickedness of these last days:—

"The Chicago papers recount a terrible tale of robbery and murder. A stranger took two pretty waiter girls and two men who forced their acquaintance upon him to ride one evening. The hackman drove to a vacant lot, and there the men robbed their victim, and placing his head under the wheels, drove the carriage over his neck. They then sent the girls home and threw the body into the river, where it was found by the police. The girls revealed the crime, and the murderers and hackman were arrested. The murdered man had not been identified."

"THE DAY AND THE HOUR."

Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, editor of the "Prophetic Times," has just issued a very interesting tract on knowing "the day and the hour" of the Lord's coming. It is the best thing we ever saw on that subject. Every one ought to read it. If the reader has any friends or neighbors, who think we can know nothing about the coming of the Lord, he will find this tract a most excellent thing to put into their hands.

Price 15 [illegible] postage paid. For sale at this office.

"THE PHILOSOPHY OF HOLINESS."

We have just received a sermon on "the Philosophy of Holiness," preached by S. H. Platt, at the Messiah Campmeeting, Sept. 1st, 1865. It is decidedly the best thing we have ever seen on the doctrine of holiness. We think every one who wishes to be a christian should have the work and read it often. Price $10 per hundred. Single copies, 15 cents. For sale at this office, and by the author, at West Winsted, Ct.

"THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE."

We have received an interesting work from Philadelphia, entitled "The days in which we live, the coming trial, comprehending the substance of LOUIS NAPOLEON prophetically considered."

The author endeavors to show that "the end of all things is at hand." It is remarkable to see how fast men are now rising up from the churches to cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Though they differ in some minor points, all seem agreed to preach the immediate coming of Christ. This is the burden of their message. We are rejoiced to find them so bold in their important work. It is no time for cowards. Our enemies are numerous, strong, and daringly brave. Let us meet them with the drawn sword of the Spirit, and never retreat.

The above work can be had by addressing "Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa." Price 50 cts.; in cloth, 37 cts. in paper.

"THE CRISIS OF THE WORLD."—In another column will be found an article headed, "The Crisis of the World." It is from a Baptist minister. We are rejoiced to learn that there are many in the churches who begin to see that we are almost to the end of the present dispensation, and are ready to sound the alarm to a guilty world and a sleeping church. This Baptist brother is ready to go and proclaim the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming. May the Lord stir up many more to follow his example.

REPORT.

Whereas, in the Report of the Maine Advent Conference, held in Belgrade Sept. last, it was stated that Eld. Jesse Partridge was unworthy the confidence of the ministry as a christian minister; a Council was therefore called by him, held at Poland, Jan. 11, 1866, consisting of the following brethren, to consider the matter: H. B. Sevey, of Vienna; L. L. Howard, Rome; W. H. Mitchell, Kennebunk; J. S. Brooks, Portland; Geo. Humphrey, Yarmouth, and T. M. Storer, Brunswick. By vote of council, Brn. B. S. Emery of Kennebunk, J. A. Libby, John Megguier, and John Allen, of Poland, were added.

Eld. P.'s case was then investigated, and it was found that difficulties existing between him and Bro. Megguire had been satisfactorily settled, and that said Eld. P. was in fellowship with the church in Poland where he resided.

The difficulties existing between Eld. P. and Mr. Stockman, which was one great cause of withdrawing fellowship, was then brought up, Mr. Stockman being present. The council decided that Eld. P. was indebted to said Stockman, but that there was no intentional wrong between either party. This indebtedness Mr. Stockman generously and freely forgave, and the matter was then and there satisfactorily settled. We here give Mr. Stockman's statement:—

"I hereby certify that the difficulties between me and Eld. Jesse Partridge are satisfactorily settled. J. W. STOCKMAN."

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Since the Pilgrim Fund for our Sunday School has been filled up, we have received various sums for the school and for other poor ones among whom we labor. I have not been requested to publish these donations in the Crisis, and do not know about the feelings of all who have sent these benefits. Some prefer to have their names withheld, therefore I give the record of the sum only. I do not know that the others desire anything more than that.

On Jan. 1st we received from Bro. J. M. S. of Philadelphia $5.00. Since then, Bro. and Sr. R. of the same city $12.00; Sr. —— 50c; Bro. B. of Philadelphia $10.00; a lady of P. $1.00; church in Salem, Mass., about $3.00; Sr. O. and little son of Danvers $6.00; Bro. P. of Newark $10.00; brethren and sisters in Hinesburgh, Vt., $4.00. To all these brethren and sisters we feel grateful, and above all to our heavenly Father, who has led them to give of their substance.

We use this money to pay the rent of our hall, in which our Sunday school meets; to pay blind Susan's rent, a woman who was led to Christ a year ago from the vilest sink of iniquity in the city; to help other worthy poor people to pay their rents; to buy shoes for the poor little bare-footed boys and girls; to buy food for the hungry, and medicine for the sick; and to purchase other articles needed by the poor. Hundreds of families are visited by us, and we try to do our duty to them in the fear of the Lord. We have to witness sad scenes; and are longing for Christ to come and put an end to sin, sickness, sorrow, poverty and death. We could fill columns of the Crisis with facts that our readers could scarcely credit; and yet no pen is adequate to describe fully the scenes we witness. Those who have visited the field with us have been astonished. They could hardly credit their senses.

I have given myself to the work, trusting wholly in the Lord for means to carry it on successfully. I thank all who have assisted us. May grace, mercy and peace abide with you all. Amen. In behalf of the mission, your affectionate brother in Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

THE FREEDMEN.

To whom it may concern:—I notice quite an interest is being felt in the cause of the Freedmen. My suggestions may be of no importance, yet I am disposed to make a few to those thinking of coming here to benefit the poor and the ignorant.

The South is truly a great field for christian labor, and judicious efforts in behalf of the poor, both blacks and whites, must produce good and gratifying results. For sixteen months I have been laboring among the people in the South, and have formed some idea of their condition in three States, viz., Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida. I have conversed with men of almost all classes;—with those who have owned slaves, and with those who have not, yet would if they could. I have talked with poor whites who did, and with others who did not sympathize with the idea of its being right to own property in man. I have also had very good opportunity to talk with men of color,—with some who have been slaves and some who have not. And I discover that an opinion or prejudice prevails here among the greater part of the whites, that it is impossible to teach the colored people much beyond to read and write and labor under a "boss." Yet my observation has given me unmistakable proof that men of mixed blood (and most colored people are) have ability to learn not much, if any, inferior to the whites. I have seen excellent mechanics, mill builders, blacksmiths, boot and shoe makers, carpenters, masons, and some others among the men of color, and have been told of excellent tailors, watchmakers, etc., of much ingenuity and ability, in other kinds of business. But to say all are of this description, would be as untrue as to say that all men at the North are as intellectual and as well organized in the brain region as was Daniel Webster.

Those who need instruction here, in letters and religion, are not all of one color. I am disposed to believe that the ignorance and superstition of the poor whites are as great as that of the blacks, if not greater. And those who come and tarry long will see it.

You may expect to find such a state of things as is described in the first chapter of Romans; and it will not be strange if time is required to get all right. You will need, for a while, more primers and spelling-books, than other kinds. It will not be necessary to bring many symbolic charts, diagrams, etc., at present. It will be time enough to bring those when the ignorant are educated so that they will appreciate and understand them. In teaching the freedmen, teachers will find the need of using many monosyllables, the plainest, shortest, simplest words. Such words as Chronology, scientific, Platonic, and incomprehensible, should be used sparingly. A fact or two will illustrate the ignorance of some of the poor whites. A woman, speaking of the soldiers from Maine, said,—"Maine must be a large town, for several regiments have come from that town."

I doubt not, most every one hereabouts has heard the profane use of the name of our Savior—Christ. But I am quite positive that some have never heard of his death, and the object of it. Truly here is work to be done. It is to be feared the whites will yet be in the rear of the class they despise, and I think it is not improbable that educated blacks may yet be employed to instruct the children of some whites.

Let no man suppose all the work to be done is in cities and large villages. Tens of thousands are far from a city. Some have need of education, and all need the blessing of a preached gospel.

To do the work of an evangelist here, will require as great an effort as in the wilds of Maine, in the extreme northeastern quarter. It is true, not much snow will be there, but it is possible some equally disagreeable hindrance may at times be met with. Don't think of coming here to be carried to the kingdom "on flowery beds of ease," nor of "lying down upon roses here below,"—if you do you will be disappointed. The climate will not be northern. The mode of living may not be. The desire to see home, friends, brethren, etc., may sometimes obtain place in the mind, and to stay and "endure," will require a certain, and a positively certain assurance that "it is the will of the Lord."

For the World's Crisis.

HOW MUCH SHALL I GIVE?

Shall it be one tenth? and if so, how shall I decide the amount? This may seem a very simple question, but there are many different answers given. Ask Bro. O. what he calls one tenth of what he receives? He says, "I earn by hard labor about four hundred dollars a year. To provide for myself and family it costs me a little more than all I earn. So I have nothing to give." Put the same question to Bro. P., who is in about the same circumstances; he says, "I earn about four hundred dollars a year. I manage by strict economy to save fifty dollars of this, besides providing for my family. I give one tenth of this, which is five dollars." Another says that his whole income is not more than three hundred dollars a year. But he lays by three dollars every month as a free-will offering to the LORD. This amounts to thirty-six dollars a year. And as you proceed to question one after another, you soon find the answers somewhat complex, though the question is quite simple.

Now let us take a sensible view of the subject. There are some who will not give much, however able they may be. Let such go on in their chosen way to the judgment. To those who have a heart to give, we would now address a few words. We trust you do not feel any poorer for what you have given. However much or little you have done, we have nothing now to say about that. Your own conscience and your God must judge the past. Some are more able now to give than they ever were before. Remember, as your power increases your duty increases. Some are just coming into possession of an estate. Some friend or relative has died, and either by his will, or in course of law, part of his estate becomes yours. Now what will you do? Will you first try to buy all that you can possibly think of for your selfish desires? And then if anything is left you intend to give a little to the Lord! Is this the way of duty? Pray over this. Ask your Master what he would have you do; and then don't be afraid of doing too much for HIM. There is no other place so safe as the bank of Heaven. Take all the stock there you possibly can. No other bank has a safe that will be found fire-proof in that day when the "elements shall melt with fervent heat."

Now be honest, be earnest, be self-denying, and act in FAITH. So shall the "blessing of the Lord, that maketh rich," be your portion for ever. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

MISSION IN SWITZERLAND.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the mercy of God we have lived to see the close of another year, and have commenced a new epoch of time. I believe there will be much accomplished during this year—that the last message of mercy will be preached with a loud voice, not only in America, but also here in Europe, and that its close will witness some important changes. May the Almighty grant us strength and wisdom to perform well our part in his extensive vineyard, that through our feeble instrumentality many may rejoice in the day of the Lord Jesus.

I have much to encourage me in my labors here. God is blessing me abundantly in preaching his truth. Several young men, of excellent capacity, have recently become interested in the great truths which pertain to the coming and kingdom of Christ, and desire to devote themselves to the work of spreading them abroad.

According to my expectation when I wrote my last report, I lectured at Vuitebœuf, at the head of Jura, in a saloon that was offered me in a hotel. At its close I was invited to go a little distance and speak again, the same evening, to a few persons who were anxious to hear more, which I did. The next day I received an invitation to lecture at Vugelles, a half hour's walk from Vuitebœuf, which I accepted. A large room in a private house was open for my lectures, which was well filled with hearers, who listened attentively while I talked of the signs which indicate the coming of the Lord is near. At the close of the meeting a gentleman arose and proposed the appointment of a committee to ask the use of the National Temple for a course of lectures; which proposition was approved, and a committee appointed, who reported the next evening that the minister of the church and the Syndic of the village refused the use of church and school-house. I therefore continued to lecture in the private house mentioned, and for two weeks went on foot, an hour and a half's walk, every evening, spoke an hour and a half, and returned home the same evening.

We are trying to discharge our duty faithfully, by preaching, writing, and conversation with many who call upon us to ask the reasons of our faith and hope. I am making an effort to publish a Prophetic Chart, to be published in different European languages, which, when completed, will aid much in spreading the light on the speedy coming of Christ. The figures are nearly ready, and mostly paid for; we are waiting for means to buy cloth; when favored to have it, we shall issue several hundreds at once. We had hoped to have them ready by this time, so that we could commence in earnest to lecture with their help, but it has not been possible. We hope before this reaches you to send a copy in French to each of the European monarchs, in the name of Christians in America and England who have aided us in establishing this Mission.

The members of the little Advent church in Italy have done all in their power to assist in this work. They are few in numbers, and not rich, but their hearts are warm. I am greatly cheered and encouraged by numerous letters which I receive from them, and by their earnest invitation to return to them if possible, and if not to send some one to preach to them the same truths I preached while with them.

Dear brethren, pray for us, that we may be aided in our work by much wisdom from above, and use well our opportunities for usefulness. I close by wishing you all much prosperity and happiness during this year on which we have just entered. May you all receive an hundred fold for all you have done to open the eyes of the blind, and for your christian charity and kindness.

In much love, your brother in Christ,

M. B. Czechowski.

A CONVENTION.

Editor of the World's Crisis:—Dear Brother —In this age of World's Conventions, is it not incumbent on believers in the near coming of Jesus to appoint a time and place for a general conference? Does not the urgency of impending events, and the magnitude of the crisis, dictate and demand a convention of Adventists in the United States, to meet at some central point, like Philadelphia? When congresses and confederations are so frequent, should not Jesus' watchmen meet to confer in reference to the duties and issues of the time? How becoming and important that the year 1866 should be marked amid all other incessant activities, by the activity of Adventists! A prophetic year of such singular significance, a year of such probable consummations and changes, a pivot-year, a crisis-year, a year of commotions, should be improved by the consecrated and coalescing host of the friends of the King and kingdom, in studying to secure unity, and to promote energy in the great work of preparation for the trials and issues of this momentous era. Already so near is the revelation of Jesus in glory, that no time should be lost in doing whatever would promote the diffusion of the truth, the increase of sympathy, and mutual and thorough co-operation.

Yours truly, C. Colegrove.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. Jackman.

Brethren and Sisters:—The Lord has been blessing us abundantly in this place, through the labors of Bro. S., in calling sinners to repentance and reclaiming the backslidden in heart; also comforting the saints with the hope of speedy redemption. Bro. S. was with us over two Sundays, and preached fifteen discourses, each full of Bible truths. About forty commenced anew to serve God; thirty of whom had never before witnessed for Jesus. The greater part of them are really engaged in the work, and although the allurements of Satan are strong, the Spirit of God is stronger, and I trust some will be gathered into His kingdom at last.

We have no Advent preaching here, save when the Lord puts it into the hearts of his servants to come this way. God has blest the efforts put forth for the past year beyond our expectations. Just at this time, when the people were really awakened and interested, we regretted exceedingly the departure of Bro. S.; yet we knew very well he needed rest, both of body and mind. I often consider how hard it must be for our Advent preachers to leave their homes, their wives, their families, to go among strangers, unbelievers, and those who scoff at the doctrines they promulgate, and labor day and evening with scarcely a "God bless you" to cheer them on their way, or to encourage them in their prayerful efforts.

How very little genuine sympathy goes out for them, from the hearts of those who should uphold these servants of Christ, in their labors for the salvation of perishing humanity! I feel that our ministers in the Advent cause are more especially destitute of sympathy, and the feeling of "God speed you," than any other class of preachers in the world at large.

Preachers in our nominal church are, as a general thing, cared for in more ways than one. They are petted and caressed, and above all, they are cheered with the thought that they have the sympathies of their parishioners; sympathies which not only enlarge the preacher's heart, but his wallet. Ministers cannot live entirely upon words of sympathy; though, in fact, these go far in helping them to live, while many are destitute of this even —but they must have sympathy that has the "ring to it," as a brother remarked in a time when gold and silver were in free circulation. Allow me to relate the circumstance: A good pastor settled among sympathetic (?) people, lost his property by fire. His townspeople, parishioners, friends and neighbors cried with one voice, "Too bad! I pity him." All went to the pastor with words of sympathy; each striving to be first in words of love and condolence. Lastly, one of his flock, who was not a "particular star" among them, came up to his pastor and said: "My tongue will not express my sympathy, but my hand will;" and he gave him a handful of gold and silver.

The pastors eyes filled with tears as he said: "God bless you! your sympathy has the ring to it." Now I feel sure our ministers need the sympathy that has the "ring to it;" and if we haven't gold or silver, let "greenbacks" do instead. If they have not the ring in themselves, they have a quality to cause any minister's heart to jingle, I think. I appeal to the preaching brotherhood. Have not your hearts and wallets grown lean for want of this kind of sympathy?

Perhaps preachers generally are ungrateful, (they ought to be thankful for a little), and when they go into a place and labor day after day, evening after evening, and when ready to depart, the people (brethren especially) all say, "God bless you," "I hope the Lord will reward you," etc., why, it must be very ungrateful in them not to be satisfied with these good wishes! But when we consider the matter a little, the lamentable fact presents itself that ministers must eat, drink, sleep, and have something to wear, just as well as we; and it takes something besides "thank you" to pay for these things.

Brethren and sisters, do you realize this as you should? Try and think that ministers have necessities to meet as well as we. They give us spiritual food, and shall we not help them to temporal blessings? When preachers come to your place greet them warmly, cordially, and when they go away give them something to carry in their pockets as well as in their hearts. Don't think I have any special claims upon ministers more than you, for I assure you I am not a minister's wife, neither am I a relative of any preacher in the Advent cause, but simply their and your sister in Christ, Sophia Jackman.

Woodstock, N. H.

From P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—The last time I wrote for the Crisis, I had returned home from quite a revival interest in Murray, sick with the asthma. I got better in about two weeks.

We commenced our meetings again, and, notwithstanding there were desperate efforts to keep all away, yet our house was full to overflowing every night, and the work of God went on until about thirty started to be christians. Among the number was one deist, who had commenced writing a work on deism. Now he is an humble, praying, devoted christian, doing all in his power to post himself in the knowledge of the Bible, and serve the Lord as faithfully as he has the devil. And what do you think convinced him of the truth of the Bible? It was hearing the simple exposition of the second chapter of Daniel, relating to the image. He had read history a good deal, but not much Bible. As soon as he saw the Bible true, then he saw Christ, and then himself a sinner; then he "fell on that stone and was broken."

I baptized ten, and a number more will be ready when a convenient time comes. Thus is raised up another church, which is looking for the speedy coming of the Savior to be their King. Glory to God in the highest, for the power of his truth in converting the hardest of sinners, when applied by the Holy Ghost to the heart.

And you, my brother, to whom is committed this glorious gospel of the kingdom, if you do not see people converted under your preaching, beware that there is not too much self to gratify, some darling theory to maintain that God cannot bless. Is not "the gospel the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth?" Then away with that unbelief that says "the time is about past to save sinners, that you can only comfort the church." I should not take that position for the world; it is a dangerous theory, and indicates a backslidden condition of heart. If you harbor such long, the devil will have another error, still worse, if possible, for you to believe. O go to work in the name of the Lord. Consecrate yourself anew to God. Get down humbly to the foot of the cross, then the Lord can use you to his glory.

"Watchman, what of the night?"

Yours in hope, P. A. Smith.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

Dearly beloved Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—It is with great pain and distress that I seat myself to drop a few lines to the scattered flock of God. While looking at the state of things in the world, my heart is made sad. The signs of the times are sufficient to convince any candid person that the Lord is about to come in all his glory, with all his holy angels, to gather his dear saints to himself, give them their reward, and destroy all those who destroy or corrupt the earth. I see, by searching the papers and the foreign news, that the time has about come for Babylon to go down, to rise no more for ever. Who is in readiness for that day to come? Dear Brn. and Srs., I hope I shall be ready, and you also; that there will not one of the dear saints be left behind.

The time of Daniel's trouble is at hand. How I long for that day, when I shall see Jesus and be made like him. Bless the Lord, O my soul. I know that I love Jesus and he loves me. Praise his dear name.

How glad we should be to see some of the dear saints of the Lord come and turn in for the night, as the angels turned in at evening with Lot and tarried all night with him. It is only now and then we have an opportunity of seeing any one of the dear saints, but the good Lord is with us. My dear brethren and sisters, don't forget to send up your prayers to the living God, that he will raise me up to health again, so that I may do some little good before Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven to take his waiting bride to himself. Time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. The time of saving souls is about over,—so it looks to me. Dear brethren, trust in the living God, and do all the good you can a little longer, and you will be discharged from the war. Your brother, looking for Jesus.

Goffstown, N. H. B. P. Manning.

From Bro. G. W. Stetson.

Bro. Grant:—I have learned since my arrival here that some will not come to hear the gospel from my lips because they have understood that I hold and teach the "non-resurrection of the wicked." This erroneous idea has prevailed from my having been associated with Bro. Wendell during my ministerial labors in Ohio. For the benefit of all parties concerned, therefore, it will be proper to say, by way of explanation, that there are two Wendells in the field,—as once there were two Richmonds,—Jonas and Rufus; the first of Edenboro, Pa., and uncle of Rufus, at present connected with the Herald of Life, in New York, which is the organ that advocates the non-resurrection view. Now, without any reference to the truth or error of the doctrine in question, permit me to say that both these Wendells bear the reputation of being christian gentlemen, and are said to be irreproachable in life; but it was with Jonas that I was "co-worker" and "true yoke fellow" in the gospel.

I believe and teach "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Paul, Acts 24: 15. "That the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—Christ, Jno. 5: 28. If you would know what more I believe, please throw your whole bundle of prejudice overboard, and come and hear for yourself, when you may possibly learn that I believe "the gospel,"—all things written in the law and the prophets," and hope and pray that you may be brought in the mercy of God to believe them, too.

Geo. W. Stetson.

Coopersville, N. Y.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Bro. Grant:—I wish you a happy New Year in the Lord. May the richest of Heaven's blessings rest down upon you. May your work and labor of love be signally owned of God to the good of many precious souls. And may all the Advent ministers of Christ throughout the world, both male and female, be blessed of God in very deed. May this year be the happiest one you ever experienced. "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Go forth, then, in the name of your divine Lord and Master, weeping, "bearing precious seed," and you shall return rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you. O be faithful, till you all arrive at home.

To the "little flock," let me "wish you a happy New Year." Time is short. What we do for God and his precious cause must be done quickly. Christ left the cross and went to glory, that you might take it and follow after him. Follow after holiness; without it no man can see the Lord in peace. If you would please the Lord, be much in his company. Christ is able to help you in every emergency; and is as willing as he is able. Remember that God has his eye always upon your heart. Your tongue cannot deceive him. Be careful not to deceive yourselves. Dear Brn. and Srs., what are you doing for God? against Satan? for the cause of Christ? in opposition to sin? Is there not much for us to do, in order to meet the Lord in peace?

To the poor sinner out of Christ, we "wish you a happy New Year." O repent of sin, and give your hearts to the Lord; then you will be really happy. P. Tandy.

Obituaries.

Boutell. Fell asleep in Jesus, in the city of Salem, Mass., on the morning of Jan. 17th, Hannah C. Boutell, wife of Elder Luther Boutell, aged fifty-nine years, ten months.

Our beloved sister had been gradually failing for the last two years. The loss of her eldest daughter was severely felt by this loving and affectionate mother. In addition to this, the sudden and unexpected death of their only remaining daughter, Sarah, seemed to mingle our late sister's cup with an intensity of grief, and in her enfeebled state of health proved a shock from which she seemed gradually to grow weaker, until, as she had expressed to her husband, "If it could be the will of my heavenly Father, I should love to sleep and not awake until Jesus comes." The first desire of her heart was granted, and beyond doubt the second soon will be.

The affectionate and sympathizing heart is at rest, the fitful scenes of mortality are forever o'er. The beloved wife, mother and sister, now sleeps under the glorious assurance of the fulfillment of the promise made certain to the heirs of eternal life, by the resurrection of our triumphant Living Head,—because "I live, ye shall live also."—Amen.

The services at the residence of our brother were attended by the writer, after which the deceased was borne away to the place of graves by her afflicted family, to Groton, Mass., to be laid by the side of the dear ones for whom her fond heart had so often pulsated with an emotion of which the tender heart of a mother alone is susceptible.

Thus the tendrils of fond hearts are being riven, and thus it will be until the last enemy, Death, is destroyed.

"Saint after saint on earth
Has lived, and loved, and died;
And as they left us, one by one,
We laid them side by side.
We laid them down to sleep,
But not in hope forlorn;
We laid them in the silent grave,
Till morn of life shall dawn."

O come, Life Giver, come. Amen.

S. S. Brewer.

Bancroft. Died at Warehousepoint, Ct., Dec. 18th, 1865, of bilious pneumonia, Bro. Bissell Bancroft, aged fifty-four years and six months.

Bro. Bancroft professed religion about forty years ago, and joined the M. E. church, in which he was an active member, and was superintendent a number of years. He embraced the Advent doctrine in '42, under the preaching of Bro. Collins. The coming of Christ to establish his kingdom, and the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and the change of the living, have been the themes upon which he loved to dwell. For some time past, he had seemed very anxious for the salvation of sinners, and had invited me to go with him to new places to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom near at hand. But cruel death has conquered him, and we have had to give him up. We deeply feel his loss, when we remember his zeal for the cause, and behold his vacant seat in the house of God. One pillar has fallen in our little band. The sudden death of our brother is felt by us all, and especially by the dear family to which he belonged. He was a kind and affectionate husband and parent. May the Lord sustain them in this affliction.

Bro. B.'s house was the pilgrim's home while he lived. Brethren who have been partakers of his hospitality, remember the afflicted in your prayers. Bro. B. was sick but a few days, and died without a struggle, in hope of everlasting life when Jesus comes. We endeavored to comfort the friends with words from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

J. B. Cotter.

Fisk. Died at his father's residence in Epsom, N. H., Jan. 17th, 1866, of typhoid fever and congestion of the lungs, Francis Leroy, oldest son of Varnum and Dolly Fisk, formerly of Deerfield, N. H., aged thirty-one years.

May the good Lord bless the afflicted friends, and hasten the time when death shall be swallowed up in victory.

"In that bright world no tears will flow;
Death ne'er can enter there;
For all who gain that heavenly land
Will be as angels are."

C. S. Emerson.

Merrill. Died in Hartford, Me., Dec. 3d, 1865, Freddie Merrill, aged nine years.

Also, Dec. 14th, Ida Mahala, aged seven years, of diphtheria, both children of Harriet J. and L. D. Merrill.

The parents feel deeply their heavy stroke of affliction. May it be sanctified to them for their everlasting good, and they realize if good they will see their fond ones again where death cannot come.

E. M. Haggett.

Sanderson. Died in West Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., Jan. 8th, 1866, Bro. Stallman Sanderson, aged sixty-four years, six months and two days.

Bro. Sanderson died in faith and sleeps in Jesus. He was converted about ten years ago, and took a prominent place among the children of God. In labors of love he was ever ready to bear a part, and in the social meeting he was prompt to tell of his love for Jesus. He was one of the "lights of the world," both by word and example. A widow and several children, together with the church, mourn his loss.

His funeral sermon was preached by Eld. P. A. Smith, under whose labors he was converted. Text, 2 Tim. 4: 6, 7. F. Burr.

Gresty. Died Nov. 17th, 1865, Margaret Gresty, aged eighteen years.

Also, Nov. 18th, Joseph Gresty, aged five years, daughter and son of Bro. and Sr. Gresty.

Thus the hearts of our brother and sister have again been stricken, having buried one three months before. Affection weeps, but faith and hope forbid the tear. Br. and Sr. Willard being from at home at the time, the M. E. minister officiated, and made a few remarks from,—"Call upon me in the day of trouble," etc. Our hearts were comforted in those words. Sarah Harrold.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Jan. 11th, Queenstown 12th.

It was reported that twenty-one armed Fenians had landed at Sligo and were immediately arrested.

It was reported that the Spanish insurgents under Gen. Prim had defeated the government column under Gen. Concha; but official dispatches represent the insurgents to be discouraged and retreating. The latest advices report no change in the situation.

Madrid was under martial law, but remained tranquil. Martial law was also proclaimed at Newcastello. Considerable excitement was reported at Barcelona, and crowds were dispersed by the military.

Official returns of the cattle disease for the week ending Dec. 30, show a large increase of fresh cases. In the previous week the number was 6236, and in the last week of December, 7693. The number in Yorkshire was 1456, and in Scotland, 1975.

The Pope received the congratulation of the French army at Rome on the 1st inst. He returned thanks, and said it it would probably be the last time he could bestow his blessings upon them. He feared the enemies of the church would go to Rome after the departure of the French troops.

The Times anticipates that by next January the Emperor Napoleon will have withdrawn all the troops from Mexico and from Rome.

Gales on the English Coast.—The latest news by the foreign steamers report a succession of heavy gales off the English coast, which have been very destructive to life and property. The telegraph dispatches furnish a long list of marine disasters, some of which are accompanied by a sad loss of life. The underwriters in New York will suffer heavily by these casualties to American shipping, most of the vessels wrecked being largely insured in that city.

The weather on the Atlantic this season has been of unusual severity according to the experience of the mariners arriving from sea, nearly all of whom report having encountered terrific gales and storms during the past two months. Some anxiety is felt for the safety of the British steamer Palestine, a freight transport in the Cunard line, which left Liverpool Dec. 23 for Boston, just four weeks ago. She may have been disabled in her machinery and put back for repairs.—Boston Journal.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Jan. 29. The steamer South America, from Rio Janeiro Jan. 2, Bahia 7th, Pernambuco 10th, Para 16th, and St. Thomas 23d, arrived.

Rio Janeiro advices report the Allies within fifty miles of the Paraguayan's position on the north side of the upper Parana, and expected to force the passage of the river, assisted by the fleet. The iron-clad Tonawanda with several vessels, reinforced the fleet, and troops are constantly arriving to join the Brazilian army. Great efforts were making by the Allies to pour an overwhelming force into Paraguay during the month of January.

The Cholera at Guadaloupe.—The telegraph has announced that cholera has broken out at Guadaloupe with great fatality. Extraordinary precautions have been adopted to prevent its spread to the neighboring islands. The mail steamers will neither receive from nor land passengers at Guadaloupe. The mail bags are brought near the ship in a shore boat and are met by a boat from the steamer with the doctor, who fumigates them thoroughly, and they undergo the same process on reaching the ship. The boats that come for the letters are obliged to keep to leeward, and bags are thrown on board them. The manner in which the disease was introduced is thus stated by the Barbadoes West Indian:

"The sickness was introduced into Guadaloupe and broke out at Point-a-Petre, soon after the arrival of a vessel from Marseilles, on board of which, during the voyage, two persons died of cholera. The captain told the pilot of the circumstance, who neglected to warn the authorities. The clothes of the deceased were sent on shore to be washed, and the washerwoman and her whole family died immediately. On account of the suddenness of the deaths, and there existing no suspicion of cholera or other infectious disease, many persons went to see her and her family, took the disease and died likewise. The authorities becoming alarmed, made inquiry into the circumstances, and, tracing them back to the vessel, arrested the pilot who brought her in and threw him into prison, where he remained awaiting trial for negligence of his duty. They further ordered that the houses of all who had died should be burned with their clothes and furniture.

At last accounts the deaths averaged 131 per day. The doctors in Gaudaloupe are, it seems, divided in opinion concerning the plague, some denying that it is cholera. But if it is not cholera, says a Bermuda paper, it is a plague more intractable and more deadly. If it is cholera, its character is more virulent and malignant than usual.—Boston Journal.

Fenian Designs.—It would appear from the public speeches of the leaders of the seceding, or Roberts, branch of the Fenian Brotherhood that, inferentially at least, they have some design on Canada. According to a report of a meeting at Newark, N. J., on Tuesday evening, this is made apparent. The account says:

"Gen. Sweeney spoke first, and in a brief and pithy speech, which is said to have sounded like the ring of a rifle—short, sharp and decisive—the veteran soldier outlined the policy of his movement, and said that as 'the Canadian invasion' had been so much taken to task by certain men, it might turn out that they would be the most enthusiastic cheerers in case the military Fenians should sound the tocsin and capture a few hostages for the gallant men who are now in bondage.

When the General hinted that it would not be a bad thing to give her Majesty's Governor General and Mr. D'Arcy McGee a taste of the treatment meted to Clarke, Luby and O'Donovan Rossa, the whole audience rose to their feet and cheered again and again for the success of the movement and in appreciation of the stern determination of the 'veteran hero Sweeny and his armless sleeve.'

President Roberts said that under Sweeny Fenianism was certain to mark its name in history and avoid being jotted down as a vapid and finally evaporated institution. It would not do to let the great strength now available fritter away uselessly or in a Quixotic manner. Let the Brotherhood now sustain the soldier, give him the muskets, and in ninety days he will give them hostages for their helpless brothers now in Dartmoor hulks."—Boston Journal.

☞ The New York Citizen, edited by Miles O'Reilly, asserts that before ten weeks there will be—somewhere—an Irish republic existing on the face of the earth, with a flag, an army, a port of entry and exit, a navy of privateers, and the tacit encouragement both of France and the United States in the prosecution of belligerent acts against Great Britain.

☞ Napoleon has recently caused a silver statue of his uncle to be placed in the Napoleon saloon of the Louvre at Paris.

☞ The Moniteur de la Flotte, or French Marine Reporter, gives a table showing the great increase of shipwrecks on the coast of France, during the last four or five years.

☞ A rumored proposal to cede to England the Island of St. Domingo was creating some comment in Bermuda.

☞ It was stated in the Fulton street meeting on Wednesday that Idaho Territory, of 50,000 souls, had not in it one minister of the gospel.

Notices.

THE CHRISTIAN.

If the Lord will, the first number of this paper will be issued about the last of January, and specimens will be sent, with or without price, to all who may order them.

TERMS.

1. It will be sent for 60 cents per volume, of 12 numbers, to any address in the United States or British Provinces.

2. Ten copies will be sent for $5. To the Provinces, the price will be $6 for ten copies.

3. Persons ordering ten or more copies for free distribution in Missions, Hospitals, Sunday schools, among Freedmen, and in similar localities, can have ten copies for $4.

The Lord's poor shall have The Christian free, so long as we can send it.

WHEN ORDERED IN ADVANCE,

Copies of any single number will be sent out at cost of paper and printing, no charge being made for the type-setting, editing, and similar expenses. They will be sent by mail, 100 copies for $3, post-paid, and by express, 100 copies for $2.50.

Who will order 1000 copies of the first number for $25? Who will order 400 copies for $10? Who will order 33 copies for $1? Who will order 10 copies for 30 cents? Who will order 5 copies, or more, for nothing? All shall be supplied who send. Those who choose to may send stamps to prepay postage. But do not delay sending, as when once the printing is done, and the edition scattered, no more can be had at any price. This rate affords about forty pages of tract matter for one cent.

☞ In writing be careful not to send defaced, mutilated or uncurrent fractional currency. Postage stamps are always useful and acceptable.

Please to direct all letters, orders, and remittances to

H. L. Hastings, Scriptural Tract Repository, 19 Lindall St., Boston.

Jan. 4th, 1866.

ALONE WITH JESUS.

Alone with Jesus! Leave me here,
Without a wish, without a fear;
My pulse is weak, and faint my breath,
But is he not the Lord of death?
'Tis all the same when he is nigh,
If I shall live, or if I die.

Alone with Jesus! Oh, how sweet,
In health to worship at his feet!
But sweeter far when, day by day,
We droop and pine and waste away,
To feel his arm around us close,
And in his bosom find repose.

Alone with Jesus! How secure;
Vile in myself, in him how pure;
The tempests howl, the waters beat,
They harm me not in my retreat;
Night deepens—'mid its gloom and chill
He draws me nearer to him still!

Alone with Jesus! What alarms
The infant in his mother's arms?
Before me death and judgment rise;
I turn my head and close my eyes—
There's naught for me to fear or do,
I know that he will bear me through.

Alone with Jesus! Earth grows dim;
I even see my friends through him;
Time, space—all things below, above,
Reveal to me one life, one love!—
That one in whom all glories shine,
All beauties meet—that one is mine!

For the World's Crisis.

PAUL'S "DESIRE."

Bro. Grant:—Something over a year ago I offered to public criticism a new translation of Phil. 1: 21–23, in the Millennial Harbinger and Gospel Banner, hoping to draw some one out in defense of King James' translation, as we have it in the common version; but as no one has ever yet attempted to point out the incorrectness of the translation, I again beg to submit an analysis of those three verses, hoping that some of the champions of orthodoxy will either point out the inaccuracy of my tranlation, or else forever hold their peace about Paul's desire to depart; for I boldly and fearlessly assert that Paul never gave expression to any such idea as departing anywhere at death or before it, by translation or otherwise.

I shall now, in order to substantiate this assertion, give first an interlineary and literal rendering of the Greek, supplying the ellipses and adopting the marginal readings, which is obviously the most correct, and then give my reasons for the various alterations I shall make in the translation of the whole, with such other remarks as may seem necessary.

Phil. 1: 21–23.

21. Emoi gar to zeen
To me for the circumstance of to live
cheeston kai to apothanein
an advantage, and the circumstance of to die Kerdos gain.
22. Ei de to Zeen en
If but the circumstance of, to live in Sarki, touto moi Karpos flesh this to me the fruit
Ergou, Kai ti aireesomai of labor then what to choose ou gnorizo
not I know.
23. Sunechomai de ek ton
I am closely occupied but out from the duo teen epithumian echon two the earnest desire having Eis to analusai Kai for the time to be released and or redeemed
Sun Christo Einai pollo mallon with Christ to be very much indeed
Kreisson
better.

Divested of the idiom reads thus: "For, to me, the circumstance of living is desirable, and that of dying gain. But if the mere fact of living in flesh be the fruit of my labor, then indeed I know not which I should choose. But, apart from these two, I am intently occupied with that earnest desire which I possess for the time to be redeemed, which indeed is much more preferable."

More preferable than what? Why, of course, either living in mortal flesh, or resting in hades.

It would seem by the reading of the common version that King James' translators were intent upon nothing but making it appear that Paul had an intense desire to go where our Lord had positively declared he could not go, and where the law of types absolutely forbid any man to think of going, dead or alive; and to imagine that Paul was so deplorably ignorant of the significancy of the type of high priesthood entering into the holy of holies alone, is most preposterous. Yet so determined were they to convey that idea, they have not hesitated simply to make nonsense of the previous verse (22), but have absolutely given a false translation of verse 23d, in the rendering of at least three very important words, viz., Sunechomia, ek, and Analusai. The first signifies to be held with, to be deeply occupied with, etc.; from Sun and Echo, to have or to hold; ek, out from, aside from, away from, out of, separate from, etc.; and analusia from the root "luo," to loose, release, redeem, ransom; and "ana," back again; the idea is simply to be released from bondage or captivity, and brought back again, and will apply equally to such as shall be delivered from the bondage of mortal flesh in the transformation of the living saints at the Lord's coming, and those who shall be redeemed from the hand of the grave in the resurrection of the just. Both classes are alike released from the bondage of corruption. And this, I need not say, was most emphatically Paul's only hope of ever being with Christ. It was for this hope that he was bound with a chain, without which, he has every taught, there could be no salvation, no reward, and no possibility of being with Christ.

This time, or day of redemption, is precisely the same as the one referred to as Paul's earnest expectation and hope in Romans 8: 19–25; Phil. 1: 20, and 3: 11. Now any one at all conversant with Paul's rendering, must be well aware that he uniformly associates the gathering together unto him with Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the just, their glorification, and establishment of the kingdom; and the idea that Paul was so very ignorant as to suppose that he could enter into the holy of holies, where Christ now is, officiating as the Great Antitype, is the very climax of folly. Paul never gave expression to any such monstrous idea; and I hereby challenge the world of critics to point out any inaccuracy in the above rendering.

I am prepared to enter into a critical and philological examination of the original, with any one who is competent to the undertaking; and I think I can satisfy every candid mind that the translation I have given is not only strictly correct, but the only one that can be given in accordance with the faith and hope of the apostle, uniformly expressed in all his writings. I have no hope or expectation that the mass will accept this translation, were it ever so clearly demonstrated to be correct; but I write this chiefly to disabuse the minds of those who, rejecting the idea that Paul desired to die, imagine that he had a desire for translation, and to enter bodily into the presence of Christ during the period of his mediatorship as High Priest over the household of faith, a thought utterly at variance with type and antitype, and one, consequently, that Paul could never for a moment have entertained. Yours waiting for redemption,

W. H. Hacking.

P. S. I had intended to have given the why and wherefore of the several alterations I make, but find it would be likely to occupy too much space. I therefore reserve that for another article, if no one shall in the mean time dispute the translation. W. H. H.

THE EAGLES.

The great parousia is near, very near. The eagles are about to be taken up, because the times are fulfilled, and the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Living, as we do, under the sixth (yearday) vial, the next event is: "Behold I come as a thief: blessed is he that watcheth." All the general indications are fulfilled, and the various prophetic periods, though not precisely definable, are nearly run out. Their foreshadowing, minor fulfillment in years, is just about to be succeeded by the far more tremendous and solemn anti-typical fulfillment in literal days. The whole world is ripe for the approaching changes; human iniquity is fast culminating, and the long suffering of God about to expire in the predicted fearful judgments. Of all the signs the most unmistakable is the political state of the Jewish people, in such strange and startling contrast with their oppressed condition during seventeen centuries of unceasing calamities.

How solemn the thought that the removal of the eagles will probably happen in the present generation, and may, even now, take place at any moment! What a privilege to be living in such a time, and what a weight of responsibility too!

But the world and the great body of the church "know not." Noah has not yet entered into the ark, and in the present time of prosperity the warning he gives falls unheeded. Even if in itself true, the great event cannot it is argued, take place now. But it is worthy of particular notice that the existence of profound peace, and of a hitherto unequalled prosperity, both in this country and in Europe, would be no counter-indication of the nearness of the parousia, but ought rather to lead prophetic students to expect it. For is it not written: "When they shall say 'peace and safety,' then sudden destruction cometh upon them?" And how much more the gracious deliverance and removal of those who are watching for the "day-star" to arise, amid the gloom of still prevailing night? Do we not read: "As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth?" Observe the parallel in Noah's case. Everything held its accustomed course. Society worked smoothly. Business was in full whirl—"until the day that Noah entered into the ark." They "knew not!" How full of meaning are these words! What utter unconsciousness! What entire absence in the daily round of anything indicating an overwhelming, and, above all, a miraculous catastroshe! "They knew not!"

Midnight is the hour. As yet unbroken silence reigns. But at the midnight hour the sublime transmutation and translation steal upon the astonished church—burst in upon the unready virgins. The warning all have heard.

But now the world is sleeping
In slumber most profound;
But few the watch are keeping,
Though fast to judgment bound.

Oh what an awaking will then be in the church, and how clear an apprehension of millenarian truth, of the solemn predictions of judgments, and of the glorious promises of the hastening reign! It is safe to say that at that time a very clear line will soon be drawn in the churches between mere outward profession and a living experience; and that, in a very short time the advent will be the constant theme of the pulpit, and the coming of Jesus the ardent hope of all believers as the sole possible deliverance from the thickening clouds of terrific persecution and tremendous judgments. With what a new light will the sacred Scriptures shine, so that even the simple shall understand! How wearily will the remaining hours drag! And those who, like Thomas, at first still remain incredulous, or linger, like Lot's wife, not having faith nor insight enough, even yet, to sacrifice all earthly prospects, and flee to the appointed place of refuge in the "wilderness," will be left, like those unbelieving Egyptians of old, to encounter, unprotected, the furious buffetings of the storm of hail and fire, mingled with blood.

Only one grand issue will then be made between the disciples of Jesus and the followers of Antichrist, viz., whether Jesus, as the Anointed King, will be just about to appear visibly in the heavens, with great power and glory. At that time nothing else will be spoken of in the church. And as for the ungodly, so infatuated will they be that, when gathered together for the great Idumean battle, it will even then be true of them that they "knew not."

The Holy Scriptures contain within themselves the key to their own interpretation. "The Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." "Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not see his days?" "Evil men understand all things." "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall know no evil thing; and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment." "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you (unexpectedly) as a thief." Is the time of the parousia an exception?

A recent writer has well said: We need not be in darkness as to that day if we will only watch. "If, therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Rev. 3: 3. "And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through." Mark 12: 39. Is not this good evidence that the time may, yea, that it will, be known to the watching, waiting, believing ones? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Luke 17: 26. It was so with Noah in regard to the flood; the definite time was revealed to him. "And the Lord said, 'My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.' Gen. 6: 3. But, as the time was about expiring, God made a further revelation to him. And, having found him faithful, and obedient to the instructions already given to him, "The Lord said unto Noah, 'Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous (faith is counted for righteousness) before me in this generation. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth.'" Gen. 7: 1, 4.

And is not the event for which we are looking of as much consequence to the world now as was the flood to the antediluvians? Is it not vastly more so? Are not the events to transpire at the second coming of our Lord in glory and majesty of infinitely more importance? And shall those who, like Noah, believe God's word, and "do according to all that the Lord commanded him," be left in darkness, for that day to overtake them as a thief? No, surely not. "If therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Certainly this implies that if we do watch, as it is our duty to do, in obedience to the commands of Jesus, we shall know the time, even as Noah did. When the second flood shall overwhelm the second apostasy, all indeed will not be destroyed, but all must pass through the Great Tribulation, except those who are in the ark, who shall have the words addressed to them, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast; for, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isaiah 26: 20, 21. Noah, in reality, did not pass through the flood; he was not in it, he was above it. The ungodly world lay below him in the deep, while he looked down in safety on the tumultuous waters. Noah is the type of the elect, who shall be "counted worthy to escape all those things that are coming upon the earth, and to stand before the Son of man (Luke 21: 36,) and who shall be saved from the day of the Lord."

Seven days elapsed between the entering of Noah and the commencement of the flood; or, at least, the exact period of the flood became known on the seventh day previously, and the moving of the great train began. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Let thoughtful minds ponder this, and also weigh the meaning of the two "wave-loaves." ...

We already see strange things—such as the girdling of the earth with the telegraph, and the completion of the Suez Canal—long ridiculed as visionary. We shall see stranger. We lately heard of a proposed convention of Jews at Paris, under the patronage of the Rothschilds, to arrange matters for the colonization of the Holy Land. Is this mere rumor, or is, indeed, the "set time" of a truth arrived? Ps. 102: 13. Daniel understood by books. Let those who, like Mary, and the men of the Baptist's time, are "pondering and musing in their hearts" whether "Napoleon," or "another," is he that, in another sense, shall come, imitate Daniel, in confession and supplication; and who can tell but the Lord will be entreated, and will "send forth" to give them also, "skill and understanding." The time had come. The Jewish musers were right. The man had come, too; but John was not he. Yet very soon John pointed him out amid the crowd on the banks of Jordan. And there were some Nathaniels, who believed and were promised the sight of "greater things." Amen! even so! Come Lord Jesus!—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE TIMES OF REFRESHING;"

OR,

THE AGE OF THE ALL-ABOUNDING BLESSING.

The times of the promise were essential to open the way for the appearing of "the seed"; but whatever light and blessing accompanied "the promise," it was of course not confounded with the seed; nor were Isaac or Isaiah, Samuel or Solomon, or any of its typical personages (who were essential to the maintaining of "the promise"), the appointed agency of Almighty God to "bless the nations." No, no. The age of promise extended on and on, through all typical persons and things, to Christ the "Seed." So much is plain. "The promise" reaches from Abraham to Christ.

Then, the like enlargement obtains as to the "Seed," which shall administer the foretold fulness of blessing to the nations. All who are "in Christ"—bearing his name, and espoused as his bride—are owned as "joint heirs, and a joint body, and joint partakers of his promise in Christ" (Eph. 3: 6, Macknight) "through the gospel."

Jesus was divinely "begotten by the Holy Ghost," but the saints are "begotten by the immortal seed—the word of God." 1 Pet. 1: 3, 23. All such, "in Christ" as head, will form "one body" (sus-soma, a joint body), and are "members in particular." 1 Cor. 12: 27. They will come into their blessed and immortal communion "at the resurrection of the just," and "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. 19: 6–7; Heb. 11: 35. "Those that are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." They are the elect vessels of divine mercy—the chosen channels of God's good will to man. They "shall be made princes in all the earth." Ps. 45: 3–16. "Be kings and priests; reigning with Christ on the earth one thousand years." Rev. 5: 10; 20: 4–6; Rom. 8: 17–25; Dan. 7: 18, 27. Thence on "forever and ever."

The times of giving life again (Acts 3: 19–21), the "times of restitution," seem the same as the time of blessing in the covenant of promise. This was the gospel preached to Abraham, and preached by Paul; and is yet being preached to prepare the "vessels of mercy, which He had afore prepared unto glory." It is the glory of the kingdom—the glory of "the grace to be given us" at the coming and coronation of King Immanuel and his enthroned Bride—the Church—the ministry of blessing.

The profound facts that underlie and run parallel with the gospel promise to Abraham, need only to be stated to carry conviction, we think, to every well instructed mind. The promise did embrace Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, with his brethren, and their peculiar posterity through many successive generations, for about two thousand years.

"The seed," specified as the source or means of blessing to the "all nations" named in the covenant, does comprehend Christ and his body—the Church—"the fulness of Him who filleth all in all," and our age may be denominated "the times of the seed." The times of their being called and "afore-prepared" to act the part assigned in blessing the nations.

Then "the times of re-freshing," of re-giving life, of re-stitution," must, of course, be commensurate with their honored and heavenly calling; by whom "all the nations of the earth shall be blessed."

Brethren beloved, you who wish so much to do good in honor of the holy name you bear, would it be unlike God, or unworthy of Jesus and his long-suffering saints, "to give them the kingdom"? especially "to appoint unto them the kingdom," for the purpose of blessing "all the nations of the earth"? Would it be a calamity to give them the power to return good for evil, like Jesus? To "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers," and act openly all over this sin-stricken world as the almoners of God's "good will" to men? No, no.

All objections to the most enlarged apprehension of the promise, the seed, and "the times" of the all abounding blessing, are founded in mistake. They are like all objections to Christ's coming kingdom.

J. B. Cook.

A REVIVAL OF THE WORK OF GOD.

A friend, who has recently returned from a visit to Great Britain and Ireland, confirms the accounts which reach us from time to time of the signal blessing with which the Lord is crowning the labors of numerous evangelists, whom he has been pleased to call from almost every variety of social position. Brownlow North and Richard Weaver, mentioned in a former number of The Witness, are instances of men who have attracted notice. But there are hundreds whose names are never heard by us, who are preaching in the open air, in theatres, halls, school-houses, dwelling-houses, and barns, throughout the cities, villages, and rural districts. Not a few of them have been officers in the army or navy, some of whom have left the service for conscience' sake, and have sacrificed the best prospects of worldly advancement, to give themselves wholly to evangelical labors. Many of them have been called from the humblest places in life, without any of those qualifications which men might regard as essential to success. An eye-witness says: "I have seen assembled thousands hanging on the lips of persons who literally could not utter a sentence of good grammar." He who bears this testimony does not undervalue education or mental culture; and still less does he fail to own the divine institution of the christian ministry. He further testifies, from his observation of this great work, that "where those recently converted confined themselves to a simple, earnest, heart-felt statement of what God had done for their souls, or fervent appeals to the heart and conscience, they were heard with interest and profit; but directly they approached to any thing like exposition or sermonizing, their statements were crude, profitless, and often intolerable."

These laborers in the gospel belong to no one denomination more than another. They have no imposing organization, and no formal concert of action; yet they plainly show that they are led by the self-same Spirit, and all speak the same things. The great burden of their testimony is "Jesus only." They exalt the Lord our righteousness, preach a free, full, and everlasting salvation in his name, and exhibit unbounded confidence in the word which they preach. The eye-witness already quoted, speaking of those who were converted by this instrumentality, says: "None of them seemed to have the least doubt on their minds as to their own present personal salvation. Not that they had much intelligence as to the value of the sacrifice of Christ, which is the alone ground of peace; but they had confidence in himself, and in the power of his blood to put away sin. Their confession substantially may be summed up in these beautiful words: 'He loved me, and gave himself for me.'"

We have spoken of men evidently called of the Spirit to the work of an evangelist. But it will not for a moment be supposed that in such a state of things the multitude of believers are standing by as idle spectators of the work of evangelists, pastors, or teachers. Nothing is more remarkable than the earnestness and constancy with which christians improve the opportunities of every-day intercourse to warn and entreat men. And many christian men and women redeem time from ordinary avocations, to engage in efforts to carry the tidings of salvation to the outcast and hitherto neglected population of the larger cities. The labors of Bible readers, and their success, are already well known to most of our readers. . . .

It is to be feared that it is wofully common, among those who bear the christian name, to meet daily with friends and acquaintances, nay, with the members of their own families, and talk with them of a thousand trifles, without saying a word of the guilt under which they lie, and the wrath to which they are hastening; nor of the Savior, whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and whose love invites them to pardon, peace, and everlasting salvation. We should be deeply disappointed if the result of this should be an attempt to silence conscience by a cold, formal, task-work testimony. Rather may it provoke a heart-searching inquiry into the causes of their strange reluctance to bear witness for Christ. Perhaps they have been attempting to do what the Lord says they cannot do—"Serve God and mammon"—and this has withdrawn the heart from fellowship with Christ. Worthless, indeed, would be a testimony on the lips of such a man, while his whole life contradicted it.

Beloved friends, the prevailing vice and ungodliness speak loudly to many hearts; and there seems to be a general conviction that something must be done, and a general inquiry as to what can be done. The work seems so great, that we are disposed to think that men must concert some great plan, and contrive some imposing machinery; and every man is disposed to wait until it is all arranged. Have you not learned that this is not God's way? Are you not looking to the failure of others, when you ought to be confessing your own? Are you not looking around, when you ought to be looking up for help? The great revival of which the evangelical labors alluded to are the results, so far as it can be traced to human instrumentality, originated in the prayers of a man in humble life, in a rural district, where there seemed scarcely a trace of vital godliness. Awakened by the Spirit of God to a sense of his guilt, he continued for two years in a state of intense mental anguish, endeavoring to establish his own righteousness. At length he learned from the lips of a christian lady the emancipating tidings of a full, free, present, personal, and perfect salvation, through the one offering of Jesus Christ on the cross. Rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free, he was touched by a view of the low state of the professing church, of souls perishing unwarned and unentreated; of the dishonor done to the name of the Lord he loved. He soon found one or two of kindred spirit. They united in fervent prayer to God for a revival of his work. They prayed, and God heard. And this was the source of a stream of blessing which has flowed on, deepening and widening as it flowed, and thousands have been refreshed.

Do not wait for others. Do not wait till the mass of professing christians move, or till some great plan is concerted and brought into action. Look to yourself in your estrangement, deadness, and worldly conformity. Seek restoration of your own soul to unhindered fellowship with Christ. You will find at least another with whom you can lay hold on the promise that "if two of you shall agree upon earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." It is not that you are called to do some great thing, but it is your privilege, under a God-honoring conviction that we can do nothing, to ask that God would do a great work, leaving the time and the means and the manner in his hands. Ask in faith, and he will show you that he is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. In all this, do not attempt in any way to dictate to the Spirit of God, or to prescribe the channel through which the blessing shall come. Man's bustling self-importance must not be permitted to intrude. Follow where the Spirit of God leads. Remember that he is sovereign in his choice of means and instruments, and will do his mighty work in such a way that God shall have all the praise. No flesh shall glory in his presence.—The Witness.

BE IN EARNEST.

Be in earnest! What thou doest,
What thou plannest or pursuest,
Plan, pursue, and do with spirit,
Never care, though you inherit
Glory dimmer than thy brother's—
Power weaker than another's—
Use thy power, use it rightly,
And in faith, nor prize it lightly;
And where'er thy power thou turnest,
Be in earnest.

Be in earnest in thy duty,
Minding that thy brightest beauty
Is a heart that seeks God's glory
In man's welfare; learn the story
Of the men whose being tended
To this object—who suspended
Life, yea, everything to gain it;
Yearn as they did to attain it;
When thou yearnest, while thou learnest,
Be in earnest.

For the World's Crisis

THERE IS NO HEAVEN ABOVE FOR THE SAINTS.

Some may be startled at this assertion, but it is truly so. No heaven above for the saints of God. "By the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established." After a thorough investigation of the Scriptures, we shall ascertain that the popular theory of the saints' heaven is not contained therein. But the word of God contains not a single promise of the saints ever inheriting heaven. Furthermore, the word of God plainly contradicts the sentiment. Now for the proof.

John 3: 13,—"And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, which is in heaven." John 13: 33,—"Ye shall seek me; and as I said to the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come, so now I say unto you" (my disciples). What language could be more conclusive? Acts 2: 33,—"For David is not ascended into heaven." But you may say, Peter only meant that Paul's body had not gone to heaven. Why did he not say so, then, and not leave any to doubt? Heb. 11: 12,—"These all died in the faith, not having received the promises." O, how plain! 1 Tim. 6: 16,—"Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see" (in heaven above). Yet we are taught that good men are continually going to heaven (at death).

Then the question arises, where are Enoch and Elijah? God has not informed us where they are; he has told us where they are not. They are not in the heavens where God resides. So we are obliged to conclude that the righteous cannot be recompensed in heaven. Then what does the inspired Word tell us concerning this matter? Prov. 11: 31,—"Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." When does the Savior say they will be recompensed in the earth? Hear him:—"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 14. "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Ps. 37: 2. Verse 29,—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and shall dwell therein forever."

Listen to Daniel 7: 27,—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—Matt. 25: 46.

We will now refer the reader to Matt. 3: 12, where the figure of the wheat and chaff proves to us that the righteous are gathered into a safe place; but the wicked, who are compared to chaff, are burned "up ... with unquenchable fire." Now do you think the Holy Spirit, or the dear Savior, would deceive us by the use of language which positively shows the utter destruction of the wicked, by the figure of chaff; and mean at the same time to have us understand that the wicked are preserved alive in hell to all eternity? St. Luke, in the 3rd chapter and 17th verse, records the same figure; and St. Paul brings forward a similar figure in Heb. 6: 8, where it plainly shows the final destruction of the wicked; when he says, "that which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned." We would not take dry thorns and briars and cast them into the flames of fire and brimstone to preserve them whole! No indeed. And if any one should attribute such folly to us, we should feel as though we were insulted. Let us not accuse the Supreme Being of casting the wicked into the flames of fire and brimstone to preserve them alive to all eternity.

Now let us look at Ps. 21: 9, where the Psalmist says, "the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." If the fire devours them, does it mean to preserve them alive in the fire to all eternity? and the tares of the field, which are by our Savior declared to be "the children of the wicked one." (Please read Matt. 13: 30, 40, 42, 50.) Our blessed Lord informs us, in the above Scripture, that "as therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world." This does not look like preserving the wicked alive to all eternity, in order to torment them. You would not put tares, and briars, and thorns, into the fire to keep them from being destroyed, would you?

We will now see if we can find the proof in the holy Book that the wicked and their wickedness shall come to an end. St. Paul, in Phil. 3: 19, and verse previous, speaks of "the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction." In Ps. 59: 13, "Consume them in wrath, consume them that they may not be." And Ps. 104: 35, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." In Isa. 1: 28, "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." 31st verse, "And the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them." Here is the unquenchable fire, but does it make the law immortal? We think it does not.

In Mark 9: 43, we have brought to view the undying worm and the unquenchable fire. Let us try to understand the real meaning of this sublime figure of our lovely Redeemer; and let us throw aside old tradition, and understand the figure as it is recorded in many places in the Bible. As there are many well-meaning persons who refer to this particular expression—"unquenchable fire,"—we would here ask the reader a question: Would you throw a lot of chaff, or dry thorns, or briars, into a large fire, so large that men could not extinguish the flames, and then call the briars, and thorns, and chaff immortal? And supposing the Lord should command us to kindle a fire in our fields, and say it shall not be quenched, but be kept burning constantly; and at the same time command us to throw the wicked of our vicinity into it; would it make those wicked persons immortal? Would it make any thing immortal that was thrown into it? No indeed. You know it would not. But you know that the fire would destroy them, so far as concerns their present being or persons; and there would be nothing left but ashes.

What could be our Savior's meaning in the passage referred to? Could he intend to have us understand that an immortal soul must have a hand cut off, or a foot cut off, or an eye plucked out, and enter heaven with one hand, and one foot, and one eye? We know that our Savior did not mean to teach such an absurdity as that. But if our Savior wanted to convey to us the doctrine of endless misery, and immortal-soulism, why did he tell us of the body losing a hand, or foot, or an eye?

"This is for your health."—Paul.

CAUSE OF THE CIRCULATION OF THE BLOOD.

This question has a scientific and mechanical interest, aside from its medical importance. Since the discovery of the fact of circulation by Harvey in 1620, the world, with rare exceptions, has received his idea of the cause of that circulation as the true idea. The brilliancy of the discovery led men to accept the anomalies and impossibilities of his theory of its cause. Notwithstanding that Bonelli estimated the power exerted to drive the blood at 180,000 lbs., or equal to a six horse power engine, men accepted the theory for years. Though the tender heart of youth is more easily torn than the gizzard of a fowl, and is only an inch thick, though its valves are folds of membrane, and kept in place by threads about the strength of No. 20 cotton, physicians and philosophers found no difficulty in recognizing its exertion of a power, under which inch bolts fly, cylinder rods crack, or mills are driven, till it was asserted by Sir Charles Bell, and others, that a power of fifty lbs. was sufficient to propel the blood. Then no difficulty was seen in the heart's exertion of such a power as a majority of persons could not exert with their arms, till it had moved five hundred thousand tons of blood in a lifetime, and that, too, without a moment's pause, or a single act or even sign of use or wear. Truly we must be wonderfully made, if such be the case.

On the theory that the heart drives the blood, what possible explanation can there be of the fact that the arteries, into which the blood is supposed to be "driven," are found empty after death? Why does circulation stop the instant suffocation takes place? Why does the introduction of carbonic acid gas into the lungs instantly stop the heart's beating? It imposes no material obstacle to circulation. With what other inconceivable quality shall we endow the heart to account for the blood being taken up from the digestive organs and put into the general circulation? These questions find no answer under the Harveyian theory, except such as cycles and epicycles in the Pythagorean theory of astronomy afforded to the insuperable objections of opposing facts.

Are we asked for a better theory? We will briefly allude to one newer, at least. It has been in process of development for twenty years. Its author, and for some time chief advocate, was the talented Mrs. Emma Willard, of Troy. The theory proposes the lungs and their action in respiration as the chief agent of the circulation of the blood. The heart and its valvular action is reduced to the office of a regulator of that circulation, a measurer of the proper quantity of blood to be admitted into the lungs at once. It must be confessed that she adduces many important confirmations of her theory. Respiration brings oxygen and carbon in contact; fire is the result. The blood is heated, expansion follows, the structure prevents the blood from flowing back to the heart, hence it must go forward, and a slight impulse of the heart sends on more for the same operation. There lies the new-born infant; does its life begin in heart-beats? Do we shake it like a stopped watch to set its heart in motion? No. Its first action is to breathe. If it does not this of itself, we attempt at this point, and not at the heart, to start life and circulation. We do the same with drowned or suffocated persons, and for the same reason. Hence the lungs are the primum mobile of circulation. This theory answers all the above questions, put in vain to the Harveyian theory.

Dr. Cartwright, of New Orleans, in 1851 made some experiments on a crocodile. It was first killed, till neither fire nor knife could cause any sign of pain. The lungs were then violently inflated. Mark the result. The blood began to move in the lungs, ran in streams into the heart. That organ began to quiver, then to pulsate by force of outward circumstances, till life returned and the animal grew dangerous in his rage and defied restraint. In slaughtering animals, if respiration be stopped, very little hemorrhage takes place; but let respiration drive the blood, and the animal becomes bloodless.

These are some of the more popular and easily understood confirmations of the theory. It was thoroughly discussed in various medical journals about 1854, and obtained a wide endorsement of eminent physiologists. An account of one of the most interesting experiments is given in the Boston Medical Journal, of September, 1852. It is there stated that Dr. Ely restored his infant son from death by cholera by continued inflation of the lungs. All discussion of this new theory has been discarded in popular works on physiology to a great extent. We should, however, except the work of Prof. Draper, of New York. This eminent scientist has done more than any other man to advance, prove, and properly limit the new theory.

Any theory, whether true or false, which shall tend to exalt in the estimation of men the function of the lungs, might almost be welcomed without fear of evil consequences. To nourish this organ is to nourish the whole body—to give leaping life to vital currents, and a flashing brilliancy and power to mind. When we perceive the real value of this organ and jointly provide the purest air for its support, we well nigh purchase exemption from disease and take a longer lease of life.—Zion's Herald.

TWELVE STANDING RULES

FOR ESTABLISHING AND PERPETUATING HEALTH.

1. Faith in God, and a good conscience.
2. Temperance in all things.
3. Diligence and cheerfulness in an honorable avocation.
4. Avoid late hours—retire to rest early, rise early, or as soon as rested, wash, and seek the fresh morning air.
5. Dress warm in winter and in damp weather; dress cool in summer when the weather is hot; and scorning unwholesome fashions, cultivate comfort everywhere.
6. When unwell, rest, with fasting and prayer, leaving drugs and stimulants to the impatient and unwary. Touch not; taste not; handle not!
7. If very sick, and you know not the cause, or remedy, call for a physician that will not administer poisonous medicine. Choose for your medical counselor a true and conscientious Hygenist.
8. Bathe the whole body at least twice a week in summer, and once a week in winter. Little children should be bathed once a day through the year. Don't neglect the bathing.
8. Choose a plain diet, consisting mostly of fruit and farinaceous food; use very little of hot drinks or hot bread, and never eat that which is crude, or indigestible.
10. Leave utterly untouched, tobacco, opium, and all alcoholic liquors.
11. Sleep warm, but never on feathers. Ventilate your sleeping-rooms the year round.
12. Ventilate well, according to the season, every apartment of your dwelling, from the garret to the cellar, keeping your premises clear of all noxious or infectious substances, thus securing a pure atmosphere to be breathed by all the members of your family.

The above rules, observed in connection with zeal and perseverance in doing good, will insure a healthful, peaceful, happy life, and a composed, serene, and triumphant end.

HOW TO PREVENT BAD SMELLS.

Dirty persons—those who never wash—always smell badly. Some can be "smelled" a mile off, or less; it is a misfortune and a source of great annoyance to the refined and sensitive. It may be more prominent with some than with others, but it is the result of a neglect of personal cleanliness. This peculiar odor emanating from the feet, is always the result of uncleanliness, which daily washings would entirely remove.

A specific odor escapes every one, and is peculiar to individuals; the dog knows it, and by it follows his master through any crowd of human beings, and never makes a mistake. A man's organ of smell is not thus acutely developed; still there are persons whose peculiar penetrating odor is readily recognized. This does not come directly from the "sweat" of the person, as no such odor issues from the hands, but from the arm-pits and other parts kept covered with clothing, so that the air cannot penetrate. The sweat remaining in contact with the skin, undergoes a chemical change, and it is this which disengages the peculiar disagreeable odor. This chemical formation is a kind of fetid fat, which, from the feet, is absorbed into the pores of the leather, and there it is detained, with fresh additions daily, for weeks and months, with increasing rancidity, as the smell of any old boot or shoe will demonstrate.

All the old clothes worn during the day, being saturated with animal exhalations from the body, should be removed and allowed to air through the night—the skin well rubbed with a wet or dry towel, and a clean night dress of cotton or flannel, as the comfort of the person may dictate, should be worn.

This course, we are sure, will be followed at least by all those who have an ambition to be and feel as sweet and clean as a dew-drop on the rose of summer." "Cleanlines is next to godliness."

Good Air.—In a very cold room, without a draught or ventilation, carbonic acid, being generated by the sleeper, becomes heavy, and falls to the floor; this gas has no nourishment for the lungs, and to breathe it is to die. In summer it goes to the ceiling, in winter to the floor; hence it is more important that a sleeping room should have a very gentle current of air in winter than summer.

ALONE WITH JESUS.

Alone with Jesus! Leave me here,
Without a wish, without a fear;
My pulse is weak, and faint my breath,
But is he not the Lord of death?
'Tis all the same when he is nigh,
If I shall live, or if I die.

Alone with Jesus! Oh, how sweet,
In health to worship at his feet!
But sweeter far when, day by day,
We droop and pine and waste away,
To feel his arm around us close,
And in his bosom find repose.

Alone with Jesus! How secure;
Vile in myself, in him how pure;
The tempests howl, the waters beat,
They harm me not in my retreat;
Night deepens—'mid its gloom and chill
He draws me nearer to him still!

Alone with Jesus! What alarms
The infant in his mother's arms?
Before me death and judgment rise;
I turn my head and close my eyes—
There's naught for me to fear or do,
I know that he will bear me through.

Alone with Jesus! Earth grows dim;
I even see my friends through him;
Time, space—all things below, above,
Reveal to me one life, one love!—
That one in whom all glories shine,
All beauties meet—that one is mine!

PAUL'S "DESIRE."

Bro. Grant:—Something over a year ago I offered to public criticism a new translation of Phil. 1: 21–23, in the Millennial Harbinger and Gospel Banner, hoping to draw some one out in defense of King James' translation, as we have it in the common version; but as no one has ever yet attempted to point out the incorrectness of the translation, I again beg to submit an analysis of those three verses, hoping that some of the champions of orthodoxy will either point out the inaccuracy of my tranlation, or else forever hold their peace about Paul's desire to depart; for I boldly and fearlessly assert that Paul never gave expression to any such idea as departing anywhere at death or before it, by translation or otherwise.

I shall now, in order to substantiate this assertion, give first an interlineary and literal rendering of the Greek, supplying the ellipses and adopting the marginal readings, which is obviously the most correct, and then give my reasons for the various alterations I shall make in the translation of the whole, with such other remarks as may seem necessary.

PHIL. 1: 21–23.

21. Emoi gar to zeen
To me for the circumstance of to live
cheeston kai to apothanein

better.

Divested of the idiom reads thus: "For, to me, the circumstance of living is desirable, and that of dying gain. But if the mere fact of living in flesh be the fruit of my labor, then indeed I know not which I should choose. But, apart from these two, I am intently occupied with that earnest desire which I possess for the time to be redeemed, which indeed is much more preferable."

More preferable than what? Why, of course, either living in mortal flesh, or resting in hades.

It would seem by the reading of the common version that King James' translators were intent upon nothing but making it appear that Paul had an intense desire to go where our Lord had positively declared he could not go, and where the law of types absolutely forbid any man to think of going, dead or alive; and to imagine that Paul was so deplorably ignorant of the significancy of the type of high priesthood entering into the holy of holies alone, is most preposterous. Yet so determined were they to convey that idea, they have not hesitated simply to make nonsense of the previous verse (22), but have absolutely given a false translation of verse 23d, in the rendering of at least three very important words, viz., Sunechomia, ek, and Analusai. The first signifies to be held with, to be deeply occupied with, etc.; from Sun and Echo, to have or to hold; ek, out from, aside from, away from, out of, separate from, etc.; and analusia from the root "LUO," to loose, release, redeem, ransom; and "ana," back again; the idea is simply to be released from bondage or captivity, and brought back again, and will apply equally to such as shall be delivered from the bondage of mortal flesh in the transformation of the living saints at the Lord's coming, and those who shall be redeemed from the hand of the grave in the resurrection of the just. Both classes are alike released from the bondage of corruption. And this, I need not say, was most emphatically Paul's only hope of ever being with Christ. It was for this hope that he was bound with a chain, without which, he has every taught, there could be no salvation, no reward, and no possibility of being with Christ.

This time, or day of redemption, is precisely the same as the one referred to as Paul's earnest expectation and hope in Romans 8: 19–25; Phil. 1: 20, and 3: 11. Now any one at all conversant with Paul's rendering, must be well aware that he uniformly associates the gathering together unto him with Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the just, their glorification, and establishment of the kingdom; and the idea that Paul was so very ignorant as to suppose that he could enter into the holy of holies, where Christ now is, officiating as the Great Antitype, is the very climax of folly. Paul never gave expression to any such monstrous idea; and I hereby challenge the world of critics to point out any inaccuracy in the above rendering.

I am prepared to enter into a critical and philological examination of the original, with any one who is competent to the undertaking; and I think I can satisfy every candid mind that the translation I have given is not only strictly correct, but the only one that can be given in accordance with the faith and hope of the apostle, uniformly expressed in all his writings. I have no hope or expectation that the mass will accept this translation, were it ever so clearly demonstrated to be correct; but I write this chiefly to disabuse the minds of those who, rejecting the idea that Paul desired to die, imagine that he had a desire for translation, and to enter bodily into the presence of Christ during the period of his mediatorship as High Priest over the household of faith, a thought utterly at variance with type and antitype, and one, consequently, that Paul could never for a moment have entertained. Yours waiting for redemption,

W. H. Hacking.

P. S. I had intended to have given the why and wherefore of the several alterations I make, but find it would be likely to occupy too much space. I therefore reserve that for another article, if no one shall in the mean time dispute the translation. W. H. H.

THE EAGLES.

The great parousia is near, very near. The eagles are about to be taken up, because the times are fulfilled, and the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Living, as we do, under the sixth (yearday) vial, the next event is: "Behold I come as a thief: blessed is he that watcheth." All the general indications are fulfilled, and the various prophetic periods, though not precisely definable, are nearly run out. Their foreshadowing, minor fulfillment in years, is just about to be succeeded by the far more tremendous and solemn anti-typical fulfillment in literal days. The whole world is ripe for the approaching changes; human iniquity is fast culminating, and the long suffering of God about to expire in the predicted fearful judgments. Of all the signs the most unmistakable is the political state of the Jewish people, in such strange and startling contrast with their oppressed condition during seventeen centuries of unceasing calamities.

How solemn the thought that the removal of the eagles will probably happen in the present generation, and may, even now, take place at any moment! What a privilege to be living in such a time, and what a weight of responsibility too!

But the world and the great body of the church "know not." Noah has not yet entered into the ark, and in the present time of prosperity the warning he gives falls unheeded. Even if in itself true, the great event cannot it is argued, take place now. But it is worthy of particular notice that the existence of profound peace, and of a hitherto unequalled prosperity, both in this country and in Europe, would be no counter-indication of the nearness of the parousia, but ought rather to lead prophetic students to expect it. For is it not written: "When they shall say 'peace and safety,' then sudden destruction cometh upon them?" And how much more the gracious deliverance and removal of those who are watching for the "day-star" to arise, amid the gloom of still prevailing night? Do we not read: "As a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth?" Observe the parallel in Noah's case. Everything held its accustomed course. Society worked smoothly. Business was in full whirl—"until the day that Noah entered into the ark." They "knew not!" How full of meaning are these words! What utter unconsciousness! What entire absence in the daily round of anything indicating an overwhelming, and, above all, a miraculous catastrohe! "They knew not!"

Midnight is the hour. As yet unbroken silence reigns. But at the midnight hour the sublime transmutation and translation steal upon the astonished church—burst in upon the unready virgins. The warning all have heard.

But now the world is sleeping
In slumber most profound;
But few the watch are keeping,
Though fast to judgment bound.

Oh what an awaking will then be in the church, and how clear an apprehension of millenarian truth, of the solemn predictions of judgments, and of the glorious promises of the hastening reign! It is safe to say that at that time a very clear line will soon be drawn in the churches between mere outward profession and a living experience; and that, in a very short time the advent will be the constant theme of the pulpit, and the coming of Jesus the ardent hope of all believers as the sole possible deliverance from the thickening clouds of terrific persecution and tremendous judgments. With what a new light will the sacred Scriptures shine, so that even the simple shall understand! How wearily will the remaining hours drag! And those who, like Thomas, at first still remain incredulous, or linger, like Lot's wife, not having faith nor insight enough, even yet, to sacrifice all earthly prospects, and flee to the appointed place of refuge in the "wilderness," will be left, like those unbelieving Egyptians of old, to encounter, unprotected, the furious buffetings of the storm of hail and fire, mingled with blood.

Only one grand issue will then be made between the disciples of Jesus and the followers of Antichrist, viz., whether Jesus, as the Anointed King, will be just about to appear visibly in the heavens, with great power and glory. At that time nothing else will be spoken of in the church. And as for the ungodly, so infatuated will they be that, when gathered together for the great Idumean battle, it will even then be true of them that they "knew not."

The Holy Scriptures contain within themselves the key to their own interpretation. "The Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." "Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not see his days?" "Evil men understand all things." "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall know no evil thing; and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment." "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you (unexpectedly) as a thief." Is the time of the parousia an exception?

A recent writer has well said: We need not be in darkness as to that day if we will only watch. "If, therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Rev. 3: 3. "And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through." Mark 12: 39. Is not this good evidence that the time may, yea, that it will, be known to the watching, waiting, believing ones? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Luke 17: 26. It was so with Noah in regard to the flood; the definite time was revealed to him. "And the Lord said, 'My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.'" Gen. 6: 3. But, as the time was about expiring, God made a farther revelation to him. And, having found him faithful, and obedient to the instructions already given to him, "The Lord said unto Noah, 'Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous (faith is counted for righteousness) before me in this generation. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth.'" Gen. 7: 1, 4.

And is not the event for which we are looking of as much consequence to the world now as was the flood to the antediluvians? Is it not vastly more so? Are not the events to transpire at the second coming of our Lord in glory and majesty of infinitely more importance? And shall those who, like Noah, believe God's word, and "do according to all that the Lord commanded him," be left in darkness, for that day to overtake them as a thief? No, surely not. "If therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Certainly this implies that if we do watch, as it is our duty to do, in obedience to the commands of Jesus, we shall know the time, even as Noah did. When the second flood shall overwhelm the second apostasy, all indeed will not be destroyed, but all must pass through the Great Tribulation, except those who are in the ark, who shall have the words addressed to them, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast; for, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isaiah 26: 20, 21. Noah, in reality, did not pass through the flood; he was not in it, he was above it. The ungodly world lay below him in the deep, while he looked down in safety on the tumultuous waters. Noah is the type of the elect, who shall be "counted worthy to escape all those things that are coming upon the earth, and to stand before the Son of man (Luke 21: 36,) and who shall be saved from the day of the Lord."

Seven days elapsed between the entering of Noah and the commencement of the flood; or, at least, the exact period of the flood became known on the seventh day previously, and the moving of the great train began. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Let thoughtful minds ponder this, and also weigh the meaning of the two "wave-loaves." . . .

We already see strange things—such as the girdling of the earth with the telegraph, and the completion of the Suez Canal—long ridiculed as visionary. We shall see stranger. We lately heard of a proposed convention of Jews at Paris, under the patronage of the Rothschilds, to arrange matters for the colonization of the Holy Land. Is this mere rumor, or is, indeed, the "set time" of a truth arrived? Ps. 102: 13. Daniel understood by books. Let those who, like Mary, and the men of the Baptist's time, are "pondering and musing in their hearts" whether "Napoleon," or "another," is he that, in another sense, shall come, imitate Daniel, in confession and supplication; and who can tell but the Lord will be entreated, and will "send forth" to give them also, "skill and understanding." The time had come. The Jewish musers were right. The man had come, too; but John was not he. Yet very soon John pointed him out amid the crowd on the banks of Jordan. And there were some Nathaniels, who believed and were promised the sight of "greater things." Amen! even so! Come Lord Jesus!—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE TIMES OF REFRESHING;"

OR,

THE AGE OF THE ALL-ABOUNDING BLESSING.

The times of the promise were essential to open the way for the appearing of "the seed"; but whatever light and blessing accompanied "the promise," it was of course not confounded with the seed; nor were Isaac or Isaiah, Samuel or Solomon, or any of its typical personages (who were essential to the maintaining of "the promise"), the appointed agency of Almighty God to "bless the nations." No, no. The age of promise extended on and on, through all typical persons and things, to Christ the "Seed." So much is plain. "The promise" reaches from Abraham to Christ.

Then, the like enlargement obtains as to the "Seed," which shall administer the foretold fulness of blessing to the nations. All who are "in Christ"—bearing his name, and espoused as his bride—are owned as "joint heirs, and a joint body, and joint partakers of his promise in Christ" (Eph. 3: 6, Macknight) "through the gospel."

Jesus was divinely "begotten by the Holy Ghost," but the saints are "begotten by the immortal seed—the word of God." 1 Pet. 1: 3, 23. All such, "in Christ" as head, will form "one body" (sus-soma, a joint body), and are "members in particular." 1 Cor. 12: 27. They will come into their blessed and immortal communion "at the resurrection of the just," and "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. 19: 6–7; Heb. 11: 35. "Those that are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." They are the elect vessels of divine mercy—the chosen channels of God's good will to man. They "shall be made princes in all the earth." Ps. 45: 3–16. "Be kings and priests; reigning with Christ on the earth one thousand years." Rev. 5: 10; 20: 4–6; Rom. 8: 17–25; Dan. 7: 18, 27. Thence on "forever and ever."

The times of giving life again (Acts 3: 19–21), the "times of restitution," seem the same as the time of blessing in the covenant of promise. This was the gospel preached to Abraham, and preached by Paul; and is yet being preached to prepare the "vessels of mercy, which He had afore prepared unto glory." It is the glory of the kingdom—the glory of "the grace to be given us" at the coming and coronation of King Immanuel and his enthroned Bride—the Church—the ministry of blessing.

The profound facts that underlie and run parallel with the gospel promise to Abraham, need only to be stated to carry conviction, we think, to every well instructed mind. The promise did embrace Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, with his brethren, and their peculiar posterity through many successive generations, for about two thousand years.

"The seed," specified as the source or means of blessing to the "all nations" named in the covenant, does comprehend Christ and his body—the Church—"the fulness of Him who filleth all in all," and our age may be denominated "the times of the seed." The times of their being called and "afore-prepared" to act the part assigned in blessing the nations.

Then "the times of re-freshing," of re-giving life, of re-stitution," must, of course, be commensurate with their honored and heavenly calling; by whom "all the nations of the earth shall be blessed."

Brethren beloved, you who wish so much to do good in honor of the holy name you bear, would it be unlike God, or unworthy of Jesus and his long-suffering saints, "to give them the kingdom"? especially "to appoint unto them the kingdom," for the purpose of blessing "all the nations of the earth"? Would it be a calamity to give them the power to return good for evil, like Jesus? To "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers," and act openly all over this sin-stricken world as the almoners of God's "good will" to men? No, no.

All objections to the most enlarged apprehension of the promise, the seed, and "the times" of the all abounding blessing, are founded in mistake. They are like all objections to Christ's coming kingdom.

A REVIVAL OF THE WORK OF GOD.

A friend, who has recently returned from a visit to Great Britain and Ireland, confirms the accounts which reach us from time to time of the signal blessing with which the Lord is crowning the labors of numerous evangelists, whom he has been pleased to call from almost every variety of social position. Brownlow North and Richard Weaver, mentioned in a former number of The Witness, are instances of men who have attracted notice. But there are hundreds whose names are never heard by us, who are preaching in the open air, in theatres, halls, school-houses, dwelling-houses, and barns, throughout the cities, villages, and rural districts. Not a few of them have been officers in the army or navy, some of whom have left the service for conscience' sake, and have sacrificed the best prospects of worldly advancement, to give themselves wholly to evangelical labors. Many of them have been called from the humblest places in life, without any of those qualifications which men might regard as essential to success. An eyewitness says: "I have seen assembled thousands hanging on the lips of persons who literally could not utter a sentence of good grammar." He who bears this testimony does not undervalue education or mental culture; and still less does he fail to own the divine institution of the christian ministry. He further testifies, from his observation of this great work, that "where those recently converted confined themselves to a simple, earnest, heart-felt statement of what God had done for their souls, or fervent appeals to the heart and conscience, they were heard with interest and profit; but directly they approached to any thing like exposition or sermonizing, their statements were crude, profitless, and often intolerable."

These laborers in the gospel belong to no one denomination more than another. They have no imposing organization, and no formal concert of action; yet they plainly show that they are led by the self-same Spirit, and all speak the same things. The great burden of their testimony is "Jesus only." They exalt the Lord our righteousness, preach a free, full, and everlasting salvation in his name, and exhibit unbounded confidence in the word which they preach. The eye-witness already quoted, speaking of those who were converted by this instrumentality, says: "None of them seemed to have the least doubt on their minds as to their own present personal salvation. Not that they had much intelligence as to the value of the sacrifice of Christ, which is the alone ground of peace; but they had confidence in himself, and in the power of his blood to put away sin. Their confession substantially may be summed up in these beautiful words: 'He loved me, and gave himself for me.'"

We have spoken of men evidently called of the Spirit to the work of an evangelist. But it will not for a moment be supposed that in such a state of things the multitude of believers are standing by as idle spectators of the work of evangelists, pastors, or teachers. Nothing is more remarkable than the earnestness and constancy with which christians improve the opportunities of every-day intercourse to warn and entreat men. And many christian men and women redeem time from ordinary avocations, to engage in efforts to carry the tidings of salvation to the outcast and hitherto neglected population of the larger cities. The labors of Bible readers, and their success, are already well known to most of our readers. . . .

It is to be feared that it is wofully common, among those who bear the christian name, to meet daily with friends and acquaintances, nay, with the members of their own families, and talk with them of a thousand trifles, without saying a word of the guilt under which they lie, and the wrath to which they are hastening; nor of the Savior, whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and whose love invites them to pardon, peace, and everlasting salvation. We should be deeply disappointed if the result of this should be an attempt to silence conscience by a cold, formal, task-work testimony. Rather may it provoke a heart-searching inquiry into the causes of their strange reluctance to bear witness for Christ. Perhaps they have been attempting to do what the Lord says they cannot do—"Serve God and mammon"—and this has withdrawn the heart from fellowship with Christ. Worthless, indeed, would be a testimony on the lips of such a man, while his whole life contradicted it.

Beloved friends, the prevailing vice and ungodliness speak loudly to many hearts; and there seems to be a general conviction that something must be done, and a general inquiry as to what can be done. The work seems so great, that we are disposed to think that men must concert some great plan, and contrive some imposing machinery; and every man is disposed to wait until it is all arranged. Have you not learned that this is not God's way? Are you not looking to the failure of others, when you ought to be confessing your own? Are you not looking around, when you ought to be looking up for help? The great revival of which the evangelical labors alluded to are the results, so far as it can be traced to human instrumentality, originated in the prayers of a man in humble life, in a rural district, where there seemed scarcely a trace of vital godliness. Awakened by the Spirit of God to a sense of his guilt, he continued for two years in a state of intense mental anguish, endeavoring to establish his own righteousness. At length he learned from the lips of a christian lady the emancipating tidings of a full, free, present, personal, and perfect salvation, through the one offering of Jesus Christ on the cross. Rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free, he was touched by a view of the low state of the professing church, of souls perishing unwarned and unentreated; of the dishonor done to the name of the Lord he loved. He soon found one or two of kindred spirit. They united in fervent prayer to God for a revival of his work. They prayed, and God heard. And this was the source of a stream of blessing which has flowed on, deepening and widening as it flowed, and thousands have been refreshed.

Do not wait for others. Do not wait till the mass of professing christians move, or till some great plan is concerted and brought into action. Look to yourself in your estrangement, deadness, and worldly conformity. Seek restoration of your own soul to unhindered fellowship with Christ. You will find at least another with whom you can lay hold on the promise that "if two of you shall agree upon earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." It is not that you are called to do some great thing, but it is your privilege, under a God-honoring conviction that we can do nothing, to ask that God would do a great work, leaving the time and the means and the manner in his hands. Ask in faith, and he will show you that he is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. In all this, do not attempt in any way to dictate to the Spirit of God, or to prescribe the channel through which the blessing shall come. Man's bustling self-importance must not be permitted to intrude. Follow where the Spirit of God leads. Remember that he is sovereign in his choice of means and instruments, and will do his mighty work in such a way that God shall have all the praise. No flesh shall glory in his presence.—The Witness.

BE IN EARNEST.

Be in earnest! What thou doest,
What thou plannest or pursuest,
Plan, pursue, and do with spirit,
Never care, though you inherit
Glory dimmer than thy brother's—
Power weaker than another's—
Use thy power, use it rightly,
And in faith, nor prise it lightly;
And where'er thy power thou turnest,
Be in earnest.

Be in earnest in thy duty,
Minding that thy brightest beauty
Is a heart that seeks God's glory
In man's welfare; learn the story
Of the men whose being tended
To this object—who suspended
Life, yea, everything to gain it;
Yearn as they did to attain it;
When thou yearnest, while thou learnest,
Be in earnest.

For the World's Crisis

THERE IS NO HEAVEN ABOVE FOR THE SAINTS.

Some may be startled at this assertion, but it is truly so. No heaven above for the saints of God. "By the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established." After a thorough investigation of the Scriptures, we shall ascertain that the popular theory of the saints' heaven is not contained therein. But the word of God contains not a single promise of the saints ever inheriting heaven. Furthermore, the word of God plainly contradicts the sentiment. Now for the proof.

John 3: 13,—"And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, which is in heaven." John 13: 33,—"Ye shall seek me; and as I said to the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come, so now I say unto you" (my disciples). What language could be more conclusive? Acts 2: 33,—"For David is not ascended into heaven." But you may say, Peter only meant that Paul's body had not gone to heaven. Why did he not say so, then, and not leave any to doubt? Heb. 11: 12,—"These all died in the faith, not having received the promises." O, how plain! 1 Tim. 6: 16,—"Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see" (in heaven above). Yet we are taught that good men are continually going to heaven (at death).

Then the question arises, where are Enoch and Elijah? God has not informed us where they are; he has told us where they are not. They are not in the heavens where God resides. So we are obliged to conclude that the righteous cannot be recompensed in heaven. Then what does the inspired Word tell us concerning this matter? Prov. 11: 31,—"Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." When does the Savior say they will be recompensed in the earth? Hear him:—"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 14. "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Ps. 37: 2. Verse 29,—"The righteous shall inherit the land, and shall dwell therein forever."

Listen to Daniel 7: 27,—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—Matt. 25: 46.

We will now refer the reader to Matt. 3: 12, where the figure of the wheat and chaff proves to us that the righteous are gathered into a safe place; but the wicked, who are compared to chaff, are burned "up . . . with unquenchable fire." Now do you think the Holy Spirit, or the dear Savior, would deceive us by the use of language which positively shows the utter destruction of the wicked, by the figure of chaff; and mean at the same time to have us understand that the wicked are preserved alive in hell to all eternity? St. Luke, in the 3rd chapter and 17th verse, records the same figure; and St. Paul brings forward a similar figure in Heb. 6: 8, where it plainly shows the final destruction of the wicked; when he says, "that which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned." We would not take dry thorns and briars and cast them into the flames of fire and brimstone to preserve them whole! No indeed. And if any one should attribute such folly to us, we should feel as though we were insulted. Let us not accuse the Supreme Being of casting the wicked into the flames of fire and brimstone to preserve them alive to all eternity.

Now let us look at Ps. 21: 9, where the Psalmist says, "the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them." If the fire devours them, does it mean to preserve them alive in the fire to all eternity? and the tares of the field, which are by our Savior declared to be "the children of the wicked one." (Please read Matt. 13: 30, 40, 42, 50.) Our blessed Lord informs us, in the above Scripture, that "as therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world." This does not look like preserving the wicked alive to all eternity, in order to torment them. You would not put tares, and briars, and thorns, into the fire to keep them from being destroyed, would you?

We will now see if we can find the proof in the holy Book that the wicked and their wickedness shall come to an end. St. Paul, in Phil. 3: 19, and verse previous, speaks of "the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction." In Ps. 59: 13, "Consume them in wrath, consume them that they may not be." And Ps. 104: 35, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." In Isa. 1: 28, "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." 31st verse, "And the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them." Here is the unquenchable fire, but does it make the law immortal? We think it does not.

In Mark 9: 43, we have brought to view the undying worm and the unquenchable fire. Let us try to understand the real meaning of this sublime figure of our lovely Redeemer; and let us throw aside old tradition, and understand the figure as it is recorded in many places in the Bible. As there are many well-meaning persons who refer to this particular expression—"unquenchable fire,"—we would here ask the reader a question: Would you throw a lot of chaff, or dry thorns, or briars, into a large fire, so large that men could not extinguish the flames, and then call the briars, and thorns, and chaff immortal? And supposing the Lord should command us to kindle a fire in our fields, and say it shall not be quenched, but be kept burning constantly; and at the same time command us to throw the wicked of our vicinity into it; would it make those wicked persons immortal? Would it make any thing immortal that was thrown into it? No indeed. You know it would not. But you know that the fire would destroy them, so far as concerns their present being or persons; and there would be nothing left but ashes.

What could be our Savior's meaning in the passage referred to? Could he intend to have us understand that an immortal soul must have a hand cut off, or a foot cut off, or an eye plucked out, and enter heaven with one hand, and one foot, and one eye? We know that our Savior did not mean to teach such an absurdity as that. But if our Savior wanted to convey to us the doctrine of endless misery, and immortal-soulism, why did he tell us of the body losing a hand, or foot, or an eye?

"This is for your health."—Paul.

CAUSE OF THE CIRCULATION OF THE BLOOD.

This question has a scientific and mechanical interest, aside from its medical importance. Since the discovery of the fact of circulation by Harvey in 1620, the world, with rare exceptions, has received his idea of the cause of that circulation as the true idea. The brilliancy of the discovery led men to accept the anomalies and impossibilities of his theory of its cause. Notwithstanding that Bonelli estimated the power exerted to drive the blood at 180,000 lbs., or equal to a six horse power engine, men accepted the theory for years. Though the tender heart of youth is more easily torn than the gizzard of a fowl, and is only an inch thick, though its valves are folds of membrane, and kept in place by threads about the strength of No. 20 cotton, physicians and philosophers found no difficulty in recognizing its exertion of a power, under which inch bolts fly, cylinder rods crack, or mills are driven, till it was asserted by Sir Charles Bell, and others, that a power of fifty lbs. was sufficient to propel the blood. Then no difficulty was seen in the heart's exertion of such a power as a majority of persons could not exert with their arms, till it had moved five hundred thousand tons of blood in a lifetime, and that, too, without a moment's pause, or a single act or even sign of use or wear. Truly we must be wonderfully made, if such be the case.

On the theory that the heart drives the blood, what possible explanation can there be of the fact that the arteries, into which the blood is supposed to be "driven," are found empty after death? Why does circulation stop the instant suffocation takes place? Why does the introduction of carbonic acid gas into the lungs instantly stop the heart's beating? It imposes no material obstacle to circulation. With what other inconceivable quality shall we endow the heart to account for the blood being taken up from the digestive organs and put into the general circulation? These questions find no answer under the Harveyian theory, except such as cycles and epicycles in the Pythagorean theory of astronomy afforded to the insuperable objections of opposing facts.

Are we asked for a better theory? We will briefly allude to one newer, at least. It has been in process of development for twenty years. Its author, and for some time chief advocate, was the talented Mrs. Emma Willard, of Troy. The theory proposes the lungs and their action in respiration as the chief agent of the circulation of the blood. The heart and its valvular action is reduced to the office of a regulator of that circulation, a measurer of the proper quantity of blood to be admitted into the lungs at once. It must be confessed that she adduces many important confirmations of her theory. Respiration brings oxygen and carbon in contact; fire is the result. The blood is heated, expansion follows, the structure prevents the blood from flowing back to the heart, hence it must go forward, and a slight impulse of the heart sends on more for the same operation. There lies the new-born infant; does its life begin in heart-beats? Do we shake it like a stopped watch to set its heart in motion? No. Its first action is to breathe. If it does not this of itself, we attempt at this point, and not at the heart, to start life and circulation. We do the same with drowned or suffocated persons, and for the same reason. Hence the lungs are the primum mobile of circulation. This theory answers all the above questions, put in vain to the Harveyian theory.

Dr. Cartwright, of New Orleans, in 1851 made some experiments on a crocodile. It was first killed, till neither fire nor knife could cause any sign of pain. The lungs were then violently inflated. Mark the result. The blood began to move in the lungs, ran in streams into the heart. That organ began to quiver, then to pulsate by force of outward circumstances, till life returned and the animal grew dangerous in his rage and defied restraint. In slaughtering animals, if respiration be stopped, very little hemorrhage takes place; but let respiration drive the blood, and the animal becomes bloodless.

These are some of the more popular and easily understood confirmations of the theory. It was thoroughly discussed in various medical journals about 1854, and obtained a wide endorsement of eminent physiologists. An account of one of the most interesting experiments is given in the Boston Medical Journal, of September, 1852. It is there stated that Dr. Ely restored his infant son from death by cholera by continued inflation of the lungs. All discussion of this new theory has been discarded in popular works on physiology to a great extent. We should, however, except the work of Prof. Draper, of New York. This eminent scientist has done more than any other man to advance, prove, and properly limit the new theory.

Any theory, whether true or false, which shall tend to exalt in the estimation of men the function of the lungs, might almost be welcomed without fear of evil consequences. To nourish this organ is to nourish the whole body—to give leaping life to vital currents, and a flashing brilliancy and power to mind. When we perceive the real value of this organ and jointly provide the purest air for its support, we well nigh purchase exemption from disease and take a longer lease of life.—Zion's Herald.

TWELVE STANDING RULES

FOR ESTABLISHING AND PERPETUATING HEALTH.

1. Faith in God, and a good conscience.
2. Temperance in all things.
3. Diligence and cheerfulness in an honorable avocation.
4. Avoid late hours—retire to rest early, rise early, or as soon as rested, wash, and seek the fresh morning air.
5. Dress warm in winter and in damp weather; dress cool in summer when the weather is hot; and scorning unwholesome fashions, cultivate comfort everywhere.
6. When unwell, rest, with fasting and prayer, leaving drugs and stimulants to the impatient and unwary. Touch not; taste not; handle not!
7. If very sick, and you know not the cause, or remedy, call for a physician that will not administer poisonous medicine. Choose for your medical counselor a true and conscientious Hygenist.
8. Bathe the whole body at least twice a week in summer, and once a week in winter. Little children should be bathed once a day through the year. Don't neglect the bathing.
8. Choose a plain diet, consisting mostly of fruit and farinaceous food; use very little of hot drinks or hot bread, and never eat that which is crude, or indigestible.
10. Leave utterly untouched, tobacco, opium, and all alcoholic liquors.
11. Sleep warm, but never on feathers. Ventilate your sleeping-rooms the year round.
12. Ventilate well, according to the season, every apartment of your dwelling, from the garret to the cellar, keeping your premises clear of all noxious or infectious substances, thus securing a pure atmosphere to be breathed by all the members of your family.

The above rules, observed in connection with zeal and perseverance in doing good, will insure a healthful, peaceful, happy life, and a composed, serene, and triumphant end.

HOW TO PREVENT BAD SMELLS.

Dirty persons—those who never wash—always smell badly. Some can be "smelled" a mile off, or less; it is a misfortune and a source of great annoyance to the refined and sensitive. It may be more prominent with some than with others, but it is the result of a neglect of personal cleanliness. This peculiar odor emanating from the feet, is always the result of uncleanliness, which daily washings would entirely remove.

A specific odor escapes every one, and is peculiar to individuals; the dog knows it, and by it follows his master through any crowd of human beings, and never makes a mistake. A man's organ of smell is not thus acutely developed; still there are persons whose peculiar penetrating odor is readily recognized. This does not come directly from the "sweat" of the person, as no such odor issues from the hands, but from the arm-pits and other parts kept covered with clothing, so that the air cannot penetrate. The sweat remaining in contact with the skin, undergoes a chemical change, and it is this which disengages the peculiar disagreeable odor. This chemical formation is a kind of fetid fat, which, from the feet, is absorbed into the pores of the leather, and there it is detained, with fresh additions daily, for weeks and months, with increasing rancidity, as the smell of any old boot or shoe will demonstrate.

All the old clothes worn during the day, being saturated with animal exhalations from the body, should be removed and allowed to air through the night—the skin well rubbed with a wet or dry towel, and a clean night dress of cotton or flannel, as the comfort of the person may dictate, should be worn.

This course, we are sure, will be followed at least by all those who have an ambition to be and feel as sweet and clean as a dew-drop on the rose of summer." "Cleanlines is next to godliness."

Good Air.—In a very cold room, without a draught or ventilation, carbonic acid, being generated by the sleeper, becomes heavy, and falls to the floor; this gas has no nourishment for the lungs, and to breathe it is to die. In summer it goes to the ceiling, in winter to the floor; hence it is more important that a sleeping room should have a very gentle current of air in winter than summer.

"I AM CHIEF!"

Charge no other man with guilt,
I alone his blood have spilt;
Every crime against the Lamb
Charge on me. Lo! here I am,
Self-convicted, self-confessed,
Chief, alone, discharge the rest.

Olivet, 'twas I that slept;
Slept when watch-hour should be kept;
I alone, 'twas not the three.
Spare me, O Gethsemane,
Though thy sod with blood, like sweat,
For my wicked sloth was wet

Who 'gainst Peter bringeth blame?
Enter there another name;
He but thrice I stood beside,
And a thousand times denied;
His sin washed in bitter tears,
Mine persisted in for years.

Sayest thou,—doubting what I am,—
Judas sold the Paschal Lamb?
Yes! for silver; but they bought
Jesus Christ of me for nought.
'Tis no Jew his life assails;
'Tis no Roman drives the nails!

These are sins, not spikes; and those,
Those are crimes, not thorns! His woes
Mine iniquities. That spear
In my heart was forged! And here
Pilate, Herod, both were born,
Cross and spike, and spear and thorn.

Shamed, I own them every one,
That black cloud that vails the sun,—
(Vails the Father, too, in wrath),—
From my soul its blackness hath.
Leaves my soul to light and bliss;
All have gone from mine to his.

Joy, peace, righteousness divine,
All have come from his to mine;
Him in my stead, me in his,
God accepts. The sonship is Mine; and he—oh! past belief,—
He, not I, appears the chief.

AWAITING THE LORD.

BRO. GRANT:—I have ever viewed our Savior's discourse contained in the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew as a sure word of prophecy, designed to guide his pilgrim church in her progress towards the rest that remains for the children of God, until he should come and receive all those that are his, and give them the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. I have read with much interest the articles from different brethren on this subject, together with that written by Bro. Ross, which lately appeared in the Crisis. They are all good, but I think the last named takes a broader view, and presents in a clearer manner the fulfillment of the words of our Master concerning the false teachers that should come in his name and deceive many.

When we view the history of the church of Christ from his day until now, we see a great system of iniquity and false doctrine keeping equal pace with, and at times seeming to overshadow by her worldly grandeur and ostentation, the peaceful religion of the followers of the Lord Jesus, and for a long period of years did not scruple to lay violent hands upon the saints of God, and kill them; so that the prophet describes her in awful grandeur as "drunken with the blood of saints, and filled with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Of her followers it was said, "Thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived." How much ought we to prize the word of God, which tells us of these things, and that he has given an understanding heart and put it in our power to escape all the cunning devices of false teachers which its sacred pages so faithfully portray. It was from this old sorceress that the most or all false doctrines come, which so impede and cripple the efforts of the children of God while trying to warn a wicked world and proud and slothful church of the coming judgment.

I sometimes think that the return of the Jews from their Babylonish captivity was a fit type of the modern church when, at the Reformation, God broke the chains of her captivity, and put his word in her hand and sent her forth to bless the world. The pious Nehemiah tells us in his efforts to reestablish the worship of God after the manner of his forefathers, of the little assistance he received from his brethren. They had become so besotted and indifferent to their holy religion, they opposed the labors of those who sought to reinstate them in the favor of God. They had lost their ark of the covenant, the golden altar, the candlestick, the cherubim and vail, with many other sacred things received of God by the hand of Moses; also their beautiful language, so that their children spake one half in the Jews' language, and one half the language of the heathen; and, what makes it more surprising, the people were willing to have it so, and opposed reform.

In the case of the Protestant church at her separation from the Romish ecclesiastical power, she brought with her many rites and traditions there learned, which she holds with such unyielding tenacity; and many of the teachings of this day are as highly seasoned with the leaven of that mother of iniquity, or more, than the word of the living God.

The Adventists as a body have made some advancement in breaking away from some of the teachings of the old sorceress; but their councils are so divided, their strength is spent upon questions of little or no importance, compared with a preparation for the great day of God Almighty. O! my brethren, we appear to be but half awake concerning the great subject we so much profess to love.

Our great Teacher tells us of the signs in the sun, moon and stars, and assures us that that generation should not pass until all these things should be fulfilled; that his word should be more enduring than heaven or earth; that the day and hour no one but the Father knew; that the world and church would be as in the days of Noah, when he swept them from the earth for their wickedness, all engaged in worldly pursuits, and knew not until their destruction came. He then bids us watch, for we know not at what hour our Lord doth come, but cautions us to be ready, "for in such an hour as ye think not" our Lord will come.

He then tells us of the two classes of servants; one feeding the household with "meat in due season"; the other saying in his heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and misusing his fellow servants, and associating himself with the enemies of his Master. Then at that time comes the last and great sign to this generation, taught by the similitude of ten virgins, who took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom Five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. The foolish took their lamps, but took no oil with them. But the wise took oil in their vessels, with their lamps. That while the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made. "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

We all know the sequel. The wise were accepted and entered in to the marriage; the foolish were rejected. The remainder of the discourse tells us how our Lord will deal with us. He expects fruits of righteousness where he has given talents and ability to perform; that he rewards faithfulness, and will punish those who have used their talents to further their worldly pursuits to the neglect of their Master's interests He then gives us a scene of the judgment day and the introduction of his people into his everlasting kingdom, and the destruction of the wicked.

Now, my dear brethren, I consider the foregoing parable a sign of the coming of the Master, as much and as of equal importance as those of the sun, moon and stars; and if so, where are we? Can we shut our eyes to the movements of a people called "Adventists"? Do not their actions for the past twenty years and more fill the picture as drawn by the Savior? and if so, how can we avoid the solemn conclusion that, notwithstanding all our professions, one half of our number will be rejected when the Master comes? My soul, is it so, that for the last many years we have been professing to warn the world we have not believed the important truths we taught? Let us look at these things and renew our covenant vows with God, and with greater zeal and patience finish our allotted labor.

To me it seems that this day is this scripture fulfilled in our ears. I cannot for a moment think this movement, together with the signs given, which have been seen, are "but a reed shaken by the wind." Some tell us we localize and bring the things to too small a point. Perhaps so. But how was the preaching at the first advent? John the Baptist preached in the wilderness of Judea for perhaps three years; and if he visited the land occupied by that whole nation, it would not cover as much as that called New England. But the proclamation of the soon coming of Christ has been preached by hundreds, if not thousands, throughout the professed Christian world, since it first awoke the attention of the church and world like the blast of a trumpet more than twenty years ago.

I have been induced to write these few lines to my dear friends and fellow christians who are looking for the speedy coming of our Lord, and hope you will bear with me. To me these things are real things. To the world and cold professors I have no apology to make. When I was at our campmeeting at Wilbraham last summer, I with you all was highly pleased with the spirit and love manifested by all I saw. But still these thoughts would come into my mind, that we as a people were those mentioned in the parable by our Savior, and it made me solemn. What I have now written is in consequence of thoughts suggested to my mind, and which have followed me until this time; and while I exhort you to greater diligence, I would not forget myself. It is with shame I confess I have not made that progress in the divine life it was my duty and privilege to attain. It is more than thirty years since God for Christ's sake forgave me my sins—a time I shall never forget; and it is twenty-eight years next March since I first heard and embraced the doctrine of the blessed hope, which is as real and vivid in my memory as my conversion. I have no doubt of either. God has greatly blessed me, so that I can say, "I lack no good thing," except more of that blessed Spirit which animated my Master, and has also all those who are his.

Our blessed Book tells us that "whosoever hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure." I confess when I look at the standard I feel self-condemned that I fall so far short of its requirements; but I am not discouraged. I know that God has done great things for me. I expect in view of past mercies that I can do all things through Christ assisting me.

I read of one of God's witnesses in Scotland, the faithful Rutherford, who, when contemplating the coming of Christ and the eternal weight of glory he would then receive, gave utterance to his feelings in language something like this: "I feel like a little child whose holiday clothes have been prepared, and is anxiously awaiting the coming morning when he may be arrayed in them." May God give us more of his blessed Spirit to wean our affections from this world, and fix them on heavenly and divine things.

Your brother, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes, WM. NICHOLS.

SANCTIFICATION.

There is much written on the subject of sanctification, or holiness; and there seems to be also a vagueness of idea with many as to what it is, or how attained. Now it seems to me that this vagueness or confusion of idea is entirely unnecessary. If we would study the word of God on this subject, I think we should see as plainly what he means, in regard to this, as any other simple truth. When we once apply with saving faith to Him whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and hear him saying to us, "Thy sins are all forgiven thee, go, and sin no more," what more can we have?

If in the blood of Christ there is full and complete redemption, are we not then pardoned, justified, saved? I cannot see that God has promised us anything more than this, except the Holy Spirit which "all who believe on him shall receive," to "lead them into all truth," and to assist them to "go on to perfection."

Paul tells us, in Rom. 5: 1, that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God"; then says, in Heb. 6: 1, "Leaving the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection." Peter tells us how we are to do so, in 1 Pet. first chapter,—"Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity," etc. "For if ye do these things ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be administered to you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Paul also in Phil. 3: 12 says, "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, but I follow after"; and goes on to say in the 14th verse,—"Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Now it appears to me, from the foregoing and many other passages which might be mentioned, that, instead of trying to bring ourselves into a state of "conviction," as it is often expressed, to enable us to seek and pray for this blessing, it should be our business to see that we carefully follow the rules laid down, and with the help of that Holy Spirit which is promised, add to our faith (which is the first starting-point) all these things which are required, and thus "bring forth the fruits of the Spirit," and grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ"; and thus be "sanctified through the truth," in what appears to be the only scriptural way, through faith and obedience to Him who says, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

May the Spirit of Him who "worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure," lead us into all truth, that we may thus "perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord."

OUR WORK.

For twenty-five years past we have proclaimed the judgment near, and if there has ever been any truth in the proclamation, it is still true; in other words, if we have ever had any good foundation for our expectation, that foundation is still good; if we have not been deluded and humbugged from the first, our position is still correct, with the additional consideration that we are a quarter of a century nearer that scene now than we were then; and besides this, the fulfillment of prophecy in the church and world, since this proc-proclamation began, furnishes us with additional proof of the correctness of our position. If there has ever been any truth in this announcement of Jesus' speedy coming, it is certainly still true; if it is not true now, we have been enveloped in delusion from the first, and the sooner we give up the whole matter as a grand deception, the better for us all; but if it has been true, and still is true that the coming of the Lord is an impending event, we as a people are not occupying the position we should. We have a work to do; and what is that work? It is not to put our light under a bushel. It is not to lie down and slumber. It is not to be faint-hearted and dilatory. But what is our duty in view of our nearness to the judgment day?

1st. It is to sound the alarm. If we really see the sword of vengeance coming, God will not hold us guiltless if we omit to give the warning. This is our emphatic duty. God demands it at our hands. We owe it to our fellow mortals. We cannot be excused. We must do this very work. Ministers and laymen alike are called upon to do it. And it must be performed with feeling hearts too. What! we remain indifferent with the evidence staring us in the face that "the great and notable day of the Lord" is just upon us? Heaven forbid! Our hearts should be all on fire with heavenly zeal and solemn devotion. Then we shall be prepared to give the warning in an effectual manner. What if the multitudes scoffingly cry, Where is the promise of his coming?" God says, "Sound the alarm." What if the proclamation is not a popular one? God says, "Sound the alarm"; and we must do it whether men will hear or not.

2nd. Our work is to gather souls into the fold of Christ before the storm of divine wrath shall fall upon a guilty world. We as a people have hitherto been remiss in this great work. If there is a people on earth who ought to deeply feel for perishing men, and weep over poor sinners, it is that class of people who see the judgment but a step before them. And yet much time has been spent, and is being spent, in giving undue prominence and attention to questions that do not serve to lead men into the fold of Christ. Should we not give special attention to questions of first importance, instead of casting them into obscurity for the sake of giving prominence to questions that have no tendency to lead men to Christ? Let every truth have its place, but let not certain truths that are not calculated to lead men to repentance so absorb our minds, and attract our attention, that we shall wholly or partially lose sight of the great work of saving men. Let our great work be to give "meat in due season" to the household of faith, and to save sinners. Can we be inactive so near the end? Let us act as though we believed what we profess. WM. SHELDON.

LOVE REPAID WITH HATRED—HATRED ANSWERED BY LOVE.

When we congratulate ourselves on the outward peace and the immunity from persecution which the church enjoys in our day, it may be well to inquire whether it is altogether an occasion of congratulation, or whether it be not partly our shame that the world finds so little that is offensive to it, in the position which we occupy and the course which we pursue. It may be that we are losing a blessing; for the Lord said: "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." And it may be that we are bringing woe upon ourselves according to his warning: "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you; for so did their fathers unto the prophets." To how many professing christians, rejoicing that the days of persecution are past, might it be said, "You give the world no occasion to persecute you, or to say an unkind word of you, except to ridicule your profession as a mockery. Your life, which cannot be distinguished from that of respectable men of the world, lifts up no practical testimony against the evil of the world. Who ever heard your voice lifted up as a witness for Christ, or against sin? Who was ever disturbed by your warnings or entreaties? Why should you be persecuted?"

Yet it is not necessarily from the church's unfaithfulness that persecution ceases. There is one who can say even to these raging waves, "Peace, be still!" and there may be a lull in the storm such as that which is recorded in Acts 9: 31,—"Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." Blessed breathing-time for a suffering church! and most blessed the results of it! It is easy to determine whether our rest is of that character and with these results.

Of one thing we may be assured—to whatever our peace is to be ascribed, the world has not changed from its hatred of Christ; and it is as true as ever it was, that the carnal mind is enmity against God. The Lord has warned us that the world which hated him must hate his, because they are his, and because that which it hated in him is reproduced in them and is re-enacted by them. Now is there enough of Christ about us to excite that hatred? Are we fairly representing him here, occupying his place, and doing his work, following up his mission of love? Do not flatter yourselves that you have conquered the world's hatred by your love or your benevolence, or by any excellence of character which compels respect and gratitude. For His was a life of purity amidst pollution, of love in the face of hatred, of rich mercy to those who showed him no mercy. There was no sorrow for which he had not sympathy, no affliction for which he had not feeling. Meek. gentle, lowly, and loving, he stooped to the lowest in intelligence, that he might communicate divine truth—to the vilest sinner, that he might bring salvation. He called around him the poor, the guilty, the despised, and the broken-hearted. He spurned the kingdom which Satan offered to ambition; but he never turned away from a penitent, however great his sin, nor from a suppliant, however great his need. In short, he sacrificed every thing but truth to save his enemies, and did not withhold from us his precious life itself. But all this, instead of conciliating the world, provoked its hatred, until he was executed, with ignominy, as the worst of criminals—a blasphemer of God, and an enemy of mankind; while malignity left nothing undone that could aggravate his sufferings, when he was bearing the curse due to human guilt.

Such is the world, of whose favor the church sometimes seems to boast, and such is Christ with whom we claim to be one. May we not well ask if the world sees any thing of Christ in us? Are we prosecuting his work? He came into the world to save sinners, and what a reception sinners gave to the Savior! Is the same mind in us that was also in Christ Jesus? Is our love a stream from the infinite fountain of his? We indeed have no glory to relinquish, and no blessedness to forego, in order to reach the perishing; for we were by nature children of wrath, even as others; and the grace which now makes us to differ also makes us debtors to all men, freely to give what we have freely received. How humbly should we stoop to the fallen, when we remember where his grace found us; and how patiently should we bear with the perverse, when we remember how Incarnate Love has borne with us!

We may blush to speak of any sacrifices which we can make in comparison with his renunciation of the glory which he had with the Father before the world was. How little, at the worst, can we now suffer who have no condemnation to fear and no wrath to endure, since he has exhausted the curse! If he was made a curse for us, how joyfully may we suffer the loss of all things in seeking the profit of many that they may be saved! Evidently, he did not design that we should consult our own safety by attempts to conciliate the world; else why did he call his disciples to confess him at all hazards? There is no age in which the church would not have been safe if it would have been silent. The world would never have disturbed it, if it would have left the world to perish undisturbed in sin. But if we have the mind of Christ, and walk in fellowship with him, we can accept of ease and safety on no such terms. If we are walking with him, following his footsteps, our path through life will be traced by genial love and cordial sympathy, which would dry every tear but the tear of penitence and tenderness, and which would lighten every care, which, waiting for no applause, and expecting no return, unchilled by ingratitude, and unalienated by hatred, moves on, warmed by the smile of God, to bless them that curse us, and to do good to them that despitefully use us and persecute us. But in all this, the grand object of which we will never lose sight, is the salvation of sinners. In the prosecution of this object, we will be watchful of opportunities, and find them everywhere like Him who surprised "Samaria's erring daughter" at Jacob's well with his gracious words; who found Matthew at the receipt of customs, and called him; who spoke pardon to the penitent at the supper-table of the Pharisee; and who, when he hung on the cross, spoke the word of eternal life to a thief and murderer.

My brother, is this a description of your course of life, and if not, are you flattering yourself that you are walking in fellowship with Jesus? If it is, you are no stranger to the scoff and the sneer, the reviling, calumny, and misrepresentation which reveal the very hatred which cried, "Crucify him! crucify him!" though its malevolence may now be restrained from open violence. "If ye were of the world, the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." I would address those especially whom the Lord has graciously enlightened regarding our standing in Christ, and regarding our heavenly calling, and regarding the end of all things. Are you making it all apparent? Does the world see that you are chosen out of it? A brother writes to you: "I candidly confess to you, my friend, that I very much fear we are not making a right use of all the grace, the light, the knowledge which our God has graciously imparted to us. I fear we are not faithfully and diligently trading with our talents, or occupying till the Master return. It often occurs to me, that people with far less knowledge, far less profession, are far more practical, more fruitful in good works, more honored in the conversion of precious souls, more generally used of God, How is this? Are we sufficiently self-emptied, sufficiently prayerful, sufficiently single-eyed?" The Holy Spirit counsels and charges you: "Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." 2 John 8.—The Witness.

For the World's Crisis.

THEY DON'T DO IT—THEY WONT DO IT.

Here lies the difficulty, the mischief, the ruin! They don't preach against the crying sins of the day; they keep back part of the price, shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Not one minister or editor in fifty speaks out defiantly, boldly, pointedly, unflinchingly, against the sins of the church—"the iniquity which God knoweth," specifying the evils one by one. They don't do it; the little foxes that destroy the vines are not so much as named. Where is there a watchman on Zion's top that pours in the liquid flame of God's singingly, brings it down sledge-hammer like against idolatry in dress, the gay, costly and fashionable adornments, the evils of tobacco and strong drink, the wine-bibbers, tobacco-chewers, smokers and snuffers, against those who oppress the hireling in his wages, and open not their lips for the dumb, "those in bonds as bound with them," against novel-publishers, novel sellers, and novel-readers, the lusts of the eye, the pride of life?

When and where do we hear these dark abominations, and many others which the Lord hates, decried against them, as the apostles and prophets did, and as every true, honest, faithful servant of God should do? The preaching at the present day is more of a generalizing character, a mere abstraction; reproving sins in the mass. There is very little specifying, minutely laying the finger on the spot of the leprosy, as Nathan to David,—"THOU ART THE MAN!" Practical duties, moreover, are not duly enforced, dwelt upon; the duties of family prayer, closet prayer, the daily, prayerful reading of God's word, family discipline, the training of children from early infancy exclusively for God, on Bible principles, of being temperate in all things.

The doctrine of purity, the inner life, entire consecratedness, the presenting the body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service, is held in reserve. What is the result of this healing slightly; this neglecting to "cry aloud and spare not"; this crying "peace, peace," when there is no peace? The result of this omission is, great looseness in the house of God, the family circle, in training for glory eternal; family altars are crushed, shivered to atoms; the Holy Bible is dusted over, the closet abandoned, the passions and appetites are indulged to excess, God's bounties are lavished on lust, oppression is winked at, the poor neglected and despised, backslidings are grievous and perpetual: God and his cause are thus greatly dishonored, brought into disrepute; the enemies of truth are led to blaspheme, live as they list, rush on to perdition, stumble over these ungodly, worldly-minded, selfish church-members into hell! "If the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot by men." Beloved, are not these solemn facts? Turn also to Jeremiah, chap. 7, and hear what the Lord saith.

"Would there were help within our walls!
O, let the promised Spirit come again,
Before whom every barrier falls,
And ere the night once more shine forth as then!
O rend the heavens and make thy presence felt;
The chains that bind us, at thy touch would melt!"

D. F. NEWTON, Author of Home Thrusts.

ELIJAH YET TO COME.

Some think that the words, "I will send Elijah the prophet before the coming of that great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4: 5), was fulfilled in the advent of John the Baptist; and that all we are to understand by the promise of Elijah preceding the second advent is merely the spirit of preparation being infused everywhere previous to that event. But this does not seem to me to exhaust the words of Scripture. For instance, our Lord says: "Truly Elijah must first come, and restore all things."—Matt. 17: 11. But then he adds, "Elijah is come already." The two things seem inconsistent; but it does appear to me from various reasons that Elijah will personally precede Christ who comes to reign, just as John preceded Christ who came to suffer. Recollect that Elijah needs no resurrection from the dead; he never saw death; he was translated; and why translated, unless for some sublime mission similar to that which is here indicated? Let us mark well our Lord's words. He says: "Truly Elijah shall first come and restore all things." But if John the Baptist was Elijah, can it be said of John that he restored all things? He did not restore anything at all; he preached repentance. Then if you say, How do you explain the other passage, viz: "Elijah is come already"? I explain it by referring to the corresponding passage in Luke 1: 17, where it was said of John the Baptist, "He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah. Our Lord says of John the Baptist that "he came and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise also shall the Son of man suffer of them." What does he here say? He says John the Baptist came, and they killed him; but that cannot be said of Elijah; he never was killed; he was translated; he is in glory; and if he had come to the earth in the person of John the Baptist, he could not have been killed. But certain parties appealed to John himself. They came to him and said, "Art thou Messiah? He said, no. Art thou Elijah? And he said, I am not Elijah."

Well, John the Baptist surely knew who he was, and yet he denied that he was Elijah who was to come and restore all things. The passage, "This is Elijah that ought to come," the French translators have given us the true meaning of: "C'est l' Elie qui devait venir." This is THAT Elijah who ought to come NOW, at this moment; is John the Baptist; he is come in the spirit and power of Elijah; but Elijah personally is yet to come and precede my glorious advent to triumph and reign. It does seem highly probable that before our Lord comes, Elijah, who is living in the body, who never died, and is not, therefore, to be raised from the dead, will herald the return of the Prince of Peace; just as a suffering Baptist came to precede a suffering Christ, so a glorified Elijah will come to precede a glorified and triumphant Christ. At least I cannot explain these passages in any other way. —Dr. Cummings.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN DRESS.

BY REV. R. V. LAWRENCE.

The present extravagance of the women of this country, in dress and adornment, is, perhaps, beyond all precedent. The most costly material, with the utmost conceivable superfluity of ornaments, and a style that requires the greatest possible number of yards, is the demand for every article of female attire. This is true not only of those without, but of the female members of the church, save here and there an honorable exception. How women—intelligent women—who profess to be Bible christians, can indulge in such extravagance in dress, is more than I can understand.

Is the Bible more emphatic in condemning lying or adultery than it is in condemning a a costly or ornate style of dress? Hear the voice of God: "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array: But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." 1 Tim. 2: 9, 10. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing of gold, and putting on of apparel." 1 Pet. 3: 3. How can any one make the present style of female attire in the church square with these plain passages of the word of God? Can the present fashions be called "modest apparel?" I saw a woman passing down Fourth street, Philadelphia, whose dress was so extravagant in volume, color, tinsel, and number of adornments, that men and women turned and looked after her as she passed up the street. Do modest women dress so as to attract attention in that way? Do modest christian women carry the present gig-top bonnets with their almost innumerable flowers, bits of tinsel, and streamers of ribbons, on their heads to attract the attention of the multitude?

"Costly array!" What do you think of bonnets for women in the middle class of society costing from twenty to sixty dollars, to say nothing of the one hundred or five hundred dollar bonnets of the upper-tendom? Do you believe it possible for a woman to wear, with God's approval, even in these days of high-priced material, so much as a twenty dollar bonnet, when there are so many suffering want at our very door, and hundreds of millions are dying in foreign lands without the knowledge of Jesus, just because money is wanted to send the gospel to them?

It was stated in to-day's papers, that but little money has thus far been collected in New York and Brooklyn for the relief of the starving thousands in the South. What wonder, when a woman's bonnet must cost twenty to sixty dollars, with every other article of dress and furniture correspondingly expensive? Who can give money when self commences with embroidery and extra stitching at the toes and thence lays on the most elaborate adornment upon every square inch to the crown of the head, and a half-a-foot or so above it?

Do you think that a sanctified soul can live under such bonnets as thousands of Methodist women put on their heads? And what about taste? There is much said now about refinement and taste, and it seems as though the taste of the present age must modify the word of God so as to approbate the present style of dress. Have any of the pretenders to taste consulted standard works on this subject? What says Lord Kames, who, I presume, must be admitted to be pretty good authority? He says (on page 114, Elements of Criticism), "Profuse ornament in painting, gardening, or architecture, as well as in dress or in language, shows a mean and corrupted taste." What, according to this standard, becomes of the claims of taste and refinement of those who follow the silly fashions sent us from heartless, licentious Paris? Do not the women know that a beautiful women is, when "unadorned, adorned the most?" Do not they know that no tinsel, or gaudy artificial flower, or flashing gem, can add to the native beauty of a really beautiful woman? And do they not know that a plain face is, when surrounded and mounted by fine flowers and other adornments, made downright ugly by the contrast? Extravagance in dress and adornments make plain features very conspicuous. Will not those who would be christian women dress plainly, modestly, and only so costly as the wants of God's cause will allow? Will you not, sisters, remember that the money you have is borrowed—it is the Lord's—and that is it not fit to dress extravagantly on borrowed money?

Will you not remember that "good works" are the most beautiful ornaments you can put on? And will you not remember that "gig-top" bonnets, with the rest of the senseless trappings from Paris, will be sadly out of fashion in that Great Day when Christ shall receive his ready bride, and that those who follow such fashions now, will hardly be thought of the right quality to go in to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb? The angels are to be masters of ceremonies there, and "white robes" only will be admitted. Dress finely every day, yet not in the Parisian, but in the heavenly, style.—Earnest Christian.

DEATH.

Death reigns. Four deaths in this little place the past week! But how trying to the patience of Adventists to listen to the funeral services of so-called orthodox preachers. Almost the first expression I heard was—"Oh God, help these mourners that they may not look upon death as an enemy, but a friend, for Christ hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Was there ever one mourning the loss of a dear friend who could adopt such a sentiment? Is not such a doctrine an insult to our humanity, to say nothing of our christianisy? Death a friend? No, never. Who wants to see him? Who wants him to enter his dwelling and take whom he pleases? None, certainly. Then why call him a friend when God calls him an enemy?

But is not the idea consistent with orthodoxy, for that claims that death introduces us to glory? But does not the sentiment virtually ignore the coming of Christ, any professions to the contrary notwithstanding? For if death introduces us to glory, then Christ does not, and is not that the main object of his coming? Does it not also ignore the judgment, for what need of one if all are to be rewarded at death? Is it to be supposed that God has made a mistake in sending by death some to heaven who do not belong there? and so is a judgment necessary that the mistake may be rectified? But on such an hypothesis what other reason for a judgment can be assigned? O how trying such false teachings are when we cannot get at the ears of the people to correct them!

One preacher said "The second death is one that never dies, or in other words endless life," and another, "In everlasting death one is always dying but never dead." Could anything be more absurd? And how trying to be obliged to listen, when we have no opportunity to get at the ears of the people to correct such falsehoods! This last preacher remarked that "everlasting death is not annihilation, for we have that within us which teaches us the contrary, and because the sinner cannot bear the thought of annihilation but desires immortality, and besides the Bible teaches that man is immortal."

What sound logic, that man is immortal because he desires to be! On that ground where is the poor man, for all desire to be rich? Where is the wretched man, for all desire to be happy? And none can be lost, for all desire to be saved!

O that men had ears to hear the simple unadulterated truth, and would not hew out to themselves cisterns which can hold no water and embrace doctrines which cannot stand the test of truth. D. D. CHAFFEE.

WORDS OF CHEER.

SPECIMENS OF LETTERS RECEIVED.

Bro. Herron:—There is no Advent church here, and I thought we could not obtain any subscribers for the "Pilgrim;" but the two (January) numbers you sent me set me thinking, and I suggested to my wife to try. So she canvassed a little and got seven, with a prospect of more. . . . . Enclosed find $4.00. Send me ten Young Pilgrims for one year to this place. Give Mrs. T. the credit for this club. The paper is splendid. All like it. Yours,

Rouses Point, N. Y. Daniel T. Taylor.

Bro. Herron:—The hundred copies which you send to the Dorcas Mission Sunday School here, are doing good. Our children are delighted with the paper, and they have quite a jubilee over it when it comes. We put a copy twice a month into each family of children connected with our school. The Lord help and cheer you in the editorship of the "Pilgrim," is the prayer of your affectionate brother in Christ, F. H. Burbank.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Bro. Herron:—I send you more subscribers, and expect another lot soon. The Young Pilgrim is now what it was when you first edited it. It is food for the young lambs. We will do all we can to extend its circulation. A Happy New Year to all the young pilgrims, and a happier one soon in the coming Kingdom. A. McDonald.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Bro. Herron:—Our Advent brethren here are about to organize a Sunday school, and I shall endeavor to get up a club to take the Young Pilgrim, which I consider the best Sunday school paper published. Respectfully, Sarah A. Coburn.

Haverhill, Mass.

THE MINIMUM CHRISTIAN.

The minimum christian! And who is he? The christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible. The christian who intends to get all of the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom. The christian who aims to have as little religion as he can without lacking it altogether.

The minimum goes to church in the morning, and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is sleepy, or has headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in prayer and praise. He applies the truth very sensibly sometimes to himself, oftener to his neighbors.

The minimum christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath School he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business arrangements are so pressing during the week, that he needs Sabbath as a day of rest,—nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty, that he must beg to be excused; still, he will do it if he must. He is in favor of visiting the poor; but he has no time to take part in those labors of love. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions, and gives his "mite." He thinks there are "too many appeals," but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it—at all events he aims at it.

The minimum christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, perhaps the theatre and card playing, large fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He can't see the harm in this, or that, or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but a man may be a christian, and dance, or go to the opera. He knows several excellent people who do. Why should not he?

In short, the minimum christian knows that he cannot serve God and mammon—he would if he could—but he will come just as near to doing so as he can. He will give to himself and the world all that he may, and to God as little as he can, and yet not lose his soul. He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the people of the world, that it is hard to say on which side of it he actually is found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware lest you find at last that in trying to get to heaven with as little religion as possible, you have missed it altogether—lest, without gaining the whole world you lose your own soul. The true child of God does not say, "How little"—but, "How much may I do for my God?" They thus judge, that if one died for all, he died that they which live, should no more live for themselves, but for him who died for them. Leaving the things that are behind, they reach forth toward those that are before, ever exclaiming, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?"

Reader, are you a minimum christian? There is reason to fear that such are no christians at all. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

IMPROVE THE OPPORTUNITY.

He "that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4: 17.

The time has come when all who love Jesus should be very active in his vineyard, because the minds of the people are quite waked up to the state of things in the world. They are satisfied that important events are at hand; and many are nearly convinced that the Lord is really coming; consequently they are anxious to hear and read on the subject. It has been many years since we have seen such willingness to listen to expositions of the prophecies, as we find at this time. This, of course, is not true of the masses; but of those who have not rejected the Bible, and wish to be the true followers of Christ. Many in the various churches are now looking into these things, and anxiously calling for "more light." Shall those who have it put it under a bushel? Will the Master say "well done" to such? Every one who can proclaim this last stirring message should now go forth and lift up his voice like a trumpet, to warn the people to prepare for the coming of the Lord.

But all cannot preach the gospel. What can such do? Many are anxious to do something for the Lord, who has done so much for them. One very effective way of doing good is by circulating tracts. With small means, a great work may be accomplished in this way. There is an earnest call for them from all quarters. Let us sow liberally, and we shall have a bountiful harvest. The reaping time is at hand. Let us all help sow the seed. The fields are all ready. Do not sow sparingly. The slothful servant has no promise of a reward. Only the laborers receive wages. "Lift, or die."

MEXICO.

Mexican affairs, as connected with the United States, are assuming an interesting attitude. Napoleon is not willing to let go his hold on Mexico, and the American people are quite unwilling that he should have any controlling influence on this continent. We think Napoleon will have his own way about the matter, as he does in other parts of the world. He is on the rising tide, and every breeze seems to blow in his favor. He knows well how to turn every thing to his own advantage. His cunning in managing political affairs is so much in advance of all other rulers and statesmen, that he is sure to win his point every time. He has a definite plan in view, which others are only playing at random.

The people of the United States are quite unwilling that Napoleon should have anything to do with Mexico. A correspondent says:—

"A St. Thomas letter states that it was reported that Secretary Seward told Santa Anna that the Monroe Doctrine would be enforced, and on no account would the United States permit an empire in Mexico."

Napoleon makes many promises, but he keeps no more than he thinks will advance his own interests. He does not feel inclined to let go of this continent, and will not release his grasp in Mexico, unless it be to take a stronger hold somewhere else.

We think he has not given up his idea of a union with the Southern States. He would not unite with the South and sustain slavery, because it would make him unpopular. Facts are given to show that he purposed to have aided the South on condition that slavery was abolished; but the war was terminated so suddenly, he did not get an opportunity to consummate his plans. Now there is some probability that he will unite with the Southern States, as soon as they have ratified the abolition of slavery. Then the Fenians will be his helpers against England and America. This work is evidently on the programme of Napoleon.

We wait with much interest for the opening scenes that must soon transpire. We find the minds of the people are much agitated on these things. They are expecting great events soon; but know not what is coming. They neglect the study of the prophecy; consequently must walk in darkness. We may expect more light soon. Let all watch.

"RAFFLING AT CHURCH FAIRS."

It has come to pass that even our secular papers, that make no pretensions to christianity, are astonished at the gambling which is introduced into churches at their fairs. We heard a magistrate say, a few days since, "I used to stop all the raffling and gambling in the place till the churches introduced it; since then I have done nothing about it."

An interesting case of this church "gambling" has recently occurred in East Weymouth, Mass. A fair was proposed in the Congregational church in that place; but Mr. James P. Lane, the pastor, was opposed to all raffling for the purpose of raising money, and expressed himself so both in private and public. But it appears that his church disregarded his feelings and exhortations, and did as most other churches do at present on such occasions. This has resulted in his dismission. The following is a portion of the report of the council appointed to examine the case:—

"It appears that a fair was held in the house of worship of the Congregational church at East Weymouth, on the evenings of the twelfth and thirteenth of December last. That for several weeks previous to the fair, the pastor had expressed his decided preference that no attempt should be made to raise money for religious purposes by lotteries or other games of chance. He opposed these games not simply in the discharge of his official duty, but from an intelligent conviction of their evil nature and consequences. This opposition was repeatedly expressed in private, stated and vindicated at one of the regular weekly meetings of the church, and also in a sermon on the Sabbath.

Notwithstanding this well known position of the pastor, raffling was carried on by large numbers of the people, and was participated in even by members of the church.

The pastor interpreted this action of many of his people as an intentional disregard of his known feelings and conscientious convictions, and as a deliberate effort on the part of many whom he regarded as his best friends to impair his influence . . . .

Accordingly, after waiting three days in vain for some explanation or apology, and feeling, all the time that, if ever a minister's influence was irrecoverably gone, his was, on the 17th of December he tendered his resignation. . . .

It also appears that the church and society have voted to accept the pastor's resignation, and that there is a general acquiescence in the proposed dissolution of the pastoral relation. . . . In view of these facts, the council are compelled to admit the existence of an unpleasant state of feeling, which the people manifest no disposition to remove. We fear that the continued success of the pastor here would be difficult if not impossible, and therefore reluctantly advise that the pastoral relation be discontinued. In coming to this result, the council cannot refrain from expressing their regret that many members of this church of Christ, and some of its officers, actually stood by at the fair, approving and encouraging what is neither more nor less than gambling under another name."

The Boston Journal of Jan. 25th, 1866, when referring to this affair, says:—

"The practice of raffling at church fairs has greatly increased during the past three or four years, until in some fairs which have been held in this city it has been almost impossible to buy any article of value unless the purchaser "took a share" in the lottery by which it was sold. It is time that a stop was put to this growing evil."

Are not these perilous times?" Is not the church, the professed bride of the Lamb, a lover of pleasure more than of God? The form remains, but where is the power of godliness? Strange times. It is stated in the report of the council, that "for the past five years during which Mr. Lane has been [their] pastor, complete harmony has existed between pastor, church and society." Thus it appears they prefer to give up a beloved and faithful pastor, rather than omit "gambling" at their fair.

Truly, these are "strange times!" It is well known that but few pastors raise their voice against these fairs, where young men learn to gamble, and honesty is trampled under foot; because more money can be obtained in this than any other way. Is silence a virtue in cases like this? Is it not time for the faithful to lift up their voices like trumpets, and show the sinfulness of such alarming covetousness, as is now seen under the cloak of religion?

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 6.

THE MORALS OF SPIRITUALISM.

As the demons are the agents in all these spiritual manifestations, that purport to come from departed human spirits, their moral influence should correspond with their character. Its tendency should be downward, away from the holy religion of Jesus. Let us now attend to the facts in the case. Our proof will come from the spirits and the Spiritualists themselves.

We will first notice their claims. The following will be sufficient to set them clearly before the readers:—

"The Spiritualism of the present day is that which Jesus preached eighteen centuries ago." "Christianism should then be synonomous with Spiritualism." "The doctrines of Christ," says a popular writer, "are to be re-established in their purity. This is to be done by Spiritualism, which embraces all that tends to elevate man, and will be to the New Testament what that was to the Old—a light thrown on its obscurities."

A spirit, which professes to be that of John Adams, says:—

"I was happy . . . . in the religion of Christ which he taught eighteen hundred years ago—in Spiritualism as it is now called."

Says Mr. Partridge, Editor of the Spiritual Telegraph, when speaking of the permanency of Spiritualism:—

"It is likely to pervade and absorb all denominations of christians, exert a moral and reformatory power among the nations, and inaugurate the millennial era." "We feel that our advance will be irresistible, and our conquests speedy and sure. To Spiritualists is committed the gospel of the present age."

In the Spiritual Age of July 4th, 1857, we read:—

"Christianity and Spiritualism stand upon the same foundation. . . . . . Spiritualism has given it (Christianity) a vitality which it had not possessed before since the time of the apostles."

Spiritualism is called the "new gospel." After a lecture by Mrs. Laura McAlpine Cuppy, at Dodworth's Hall, New York, Sunday evening, Nov. 22d, 1863, the question was asked, "In what does the new gospel consist?"

ANSWER: "The new gospel, as we understand it, . . . is the philosophy of Spiritualism, so called, and the philosophy of Spiritualism embraces all the virtues, and strikes at the root of all evils, social, political, and religious." "There is one thing we know, viz., that we are by nature divine." "We have always asserted that there is not a single argument that can be brought against Spiritualism that is not competent as an argument against the christianity of the past—not one."

"Q. I understand the word 'gospel' to mean 'good news.'

A. It does; and Spiritualism is good news—the best that ever came to earth."

Let us now call on witnesses who are competent to testify in this case. Let them tell us what is behind the curtain.

We will first introduce Dr. B. F. Hatch, formerly husband of the noted trance-speaking medium, Mrs. Cora V. Hatch, now Mrs. Daniels. The Dr. traveled extensively with his wife while she was giving lectures on Spiritualism. He says:—

"The extensive opportunity which I have had, and that too among the first class of Spiritualists, of learning its nature and results, I think will enable me to lay just claims to being a competent witness in the matter.

I am aware that what I have to say will offend many who are less acquainted with the whole phenomena than myself, and such as may feel themselves involved, and will please others; but it is for neither purpose that I write, but that the inexperienced may more fully comprehend the dangers attending it. I am frequently asked if I still believe in the phenomena of Spiritualism? I answer Yes. I should deem it more than a waste of time to write about what does not exist. . . . But through it all, I believe that there is a powerful influx of an infernal error into nearly all mediumistic minds which greatly corrupts the moral sensibility and proves almost universally most disastrous to its victims.

I have heard much of the improvement in individuals in consequence of a belief in Spiritualism. With such I have had no acquaintance. But I have known many whose integrity of character and uprightness of purpose rendered them worthy examples to all around, but who, on becoming mediums, and giving up their individuality, also gave up every sense of honor and decency. A less degree of severity in this remark will apply to a large class of both mediums and believers. There are thousands of high-minded and intelligent Spiritualists who will agree with me that it is no slander in saying that the inculcation of no doctrines in this country has ever shown such disastrous moral and social results as the spiritual theories. . . . Iniquities which have justly received the condemnation of centuries are openly upheld; vices which would destroy every wholesome regulation of society are crowned as virtues; prostitution is believed to be fidelity to self; marriage an outrage on freedom; love evanescent, and, like the bee, should sip the sweets wherever found; bastards are claimed to be spiritually begotten. All change, of whatever nature, is believed to be an improvement, as there is no retrogression. Iniquity is only the effervescence of the outworkings of a heavenly destiny. God is shorn of his personality and becomes simply a permeating principle, the Bible a libel on common sense, and Christ a mere medium, hardly equal to the spiritual babies of 'this more progressive age.'

With such doctrines before us, what have we to hope? That they are rapidly increasing no one can deny. The end is not yet."

"The most damning iniquities are everywhere perpetrated in Spiritual circles, a very small per centage of which ever comes to public attention. I care not whether it be Spiritual or mundane, the facts exist, and should demand the attention and just condemnation of an intelligent community. Look at the iniquities which have been committed within the past two weeks in this city, and that too by Spiritual mediums who claim to be controlled by angels. It is worse than useless to talk to the Spiritualist against this condition of things, for those who occupy the highest position among them, are aiding and abetting in all classes of iniquities which prevail amongst them. The abrogation of marriage, bigamy, accompanied by robbery, theft, rapes, are all chargeable to Spiritualism. I most solemnly affirm that I do not believe that there has, during the past five hundred years, arisen any class of people who were guilty of so great a variety of crimes and indecencies as the Spiritualists of America.

For a long time I was swallowed up in its whirlpool of excitement, and comparatively paid but little attention to its evils, believing that much good might result from the openings of the avenues of Spiritual intercourse. But during the past eight months I have devoted my attention to a critical investigation of its moral, social and religious bearing, and I stand appalled before the revelations of its awful and damning realities, and would flee from its influence as I would from the miasma which would destroy both soul and body. Spiritualism and prostitution, with a rejection of Christianity, are twin sisters, which everywhere go hand in hand. With but little inquiry, I have been able to count up over seventy mediums, most of whom have wholly abandoned their conjugal relations, others living with their paramours called 'affinities,' others in promiscuous adultery, and still others exchanged partners. Old men and women, who have passed the meridian of life, are not unfrequently the victims of this hallucination. Many of the mediums lose all sense of moral obligations, and yield to whatever influence may for the time be brought to bear upon them. Their pledges, the integrity of their oaths, are no more reliable than the shifting breezes of the whirlwind, for they are made to yield to the powers which for the time control them."

Dr. T. L. Nichols, a distinguished Spiritualist, when speaking of the mission of Spiritualism, says:—

"Spiritualism meets, neutralizes, and destroys christianity. A Spiritualist is no longer a christian in any popular sense of the term. Advanced spirits do not teach . . . . the atonement of Christ; nothing of the kind."—Nichols' "Monthly Magazine of Social Science and Progressive Literature," for Nov. 1854, p. 66.

Let it be remembered that the foregoing is from advanced Spiritualists, who are well qualified to testify, because they have seen and heard for themselves. This testimony corresponds with the position we have taken; that is, that Spiritualism originated with the Devil and his angels, or demons. All thus far appears harmonious with this view of the manifestations.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

The House of Representatives has passed the bill for equal suffrage in the District of Columbia. The bill is expressed in the following terms:—

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from all laws and parts of laws prescribing the qualifications of electors for any office in the District of Columbia, the word 'white' be and the same is hereby stricken out, and that from and after the passage of this act no person shall be disqualified from voting at any election held in the said district on account of color.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That all acts of Congress, and all laws of the State of Maryland in said district, and all ordinances of Washington and Georgetown inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed and annuled."

The vote of adoption was 116 to 54. This is a noble step. We trust the same rights will be extended to the whole nation.

RECONSTRUCTION.

A joint committee has been chosen by Congress to inquire into the condition of the States that seceded. The committee consisted of six Senators and nine Representatives. They have made their report, and presented the following resolution, as an amendment to the Constitution:—

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both houses concurring, that the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several states as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, viz:

ARTICLE —. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed; provided that, whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any estate, on account of race or color, all persons of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation."

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS!

A good brother in Michigan, anxious to do all the good he can with the means which the Lord has given him, makes a very liberal donation of $1000 to the objects specified in the extract from his letter, which we give below. He wrote to us not long since that he should increase the subscription list of the Young Pilgrim by five or six hundred in the next few months, and he was intending then to donate some $400 for that and other purposes. But, in thinking the matter over since, and considering the great needs of the Lord's cause, especially in view of his near coming, he has concluded to increase the amount to $1000; and, furthermore, has consecrated two-thirds of all the Lord has entrusted him with to his service. May blessing and prosperity from the Lord be upon him, and the blessings of the poor and benighted, to whom his munificent gift shall be the means of bringing light and salvation, and the glad tidings of a coming Savior and eternal joy. We withhold the name by his request.

May God's blessing attend its ministration, and also attend you all, dear brethren, in your several labors in his cause.

Is it not a glorious work? Oh, what a burden has rested on my mind, when, looking over the various funds in the columns of the Crisis for the last six months, I have seen how very, very slowly they increase in amount. True, the blessing of God is not altogether dependent upon the amount of pecuniary contributions which are brought into his treasury; but when we see how little is done where there is so much that ought to be done, we naturally inquire, Where is that blessedness that ye spake of?

'We love the Lord Jesus SUPREMELY,' in words we say; 'we look for his personal and glorious appearing, this, next, or the year following; we love to think of it; yes, we long for it, and can hardly be patient until He come whose right it is to reign.' But how do we show our sincerity? Where is the proof? Where are the works? 'Faith without works,' like the body without breath, 'is dead.' Shall we be smiting our fellow servants, and 'eating and drinking with the drunken,' when we ought to be hard at work, with watchfulness and prayerfulness, 'lest that day come upon us,' and upon our fellow mortals around us, 'unawares'? Shall we be wasting our strength and our substance 'in riotous living,' clinging to our worldly possessions, and 'laying up for ourselves treasures on earth,' as though our dear lives depended on it? Is not this trusting 'in an arm of flesh,' or in ourselves, withholding from the Lord that which is his due ('the silver and the gold are mine'), while sinners are perishing all around us for want of the bread of life? O Lord, open thou the eyes of this people.

Do you, dear brethren and sisters, lay by each week, as the Lord hath prospered you? Do you really love Jesus? Do you abide in his love, and so keep his commandments? Do you 'deny yourselves' for the glorious gospel's sake? No wonder many of you are complaining of spiritual dearth. How can you expect otherwise, and believe the word of God? Do not you, with all that you have, belong to the Lord? Are you not 'bought with a price,' even the precious blood of Jesus? Hast thou 'left thy first love'? Repent, then, quickly, lest Jesus 'come and remove thy candlestick out of his place.' O, 'bring ALL the tithes into the storehouse,' even yourselves, with all you are and all you have, 'and see if the Lord will not pour you out a blessing.' 'Render unto God the things that are his,' and see if it is not 'more blessed to give than to receive.'

I write freely, because I write for the truth, and for Jesus, whom I expect soon to see. May his Spirit send every word home to the heart of every reader, is the prayer of your humble brother in the faith, ———."

BRO. ADAMS:—Isabella D———, a girl of perhaps thirteen summers, living in Massena Centre, N. Y., sends $5.00 to be placed on the Freedmen and European Mission Funds. This money she earned herself, but, instead of spending it for dress or pleasure, lends it to the Lord, who has already paid her again by giving her a new heart at the blessed revival in her town. I had the pleasure of baptizing her last week, and "Belle" and her parents are going into the kingdom when it comes. D. T. TAYLOR.

LITTLE WANDERER'S HOME.

For a long time I have desired to open a home for poor fatherless children and orphans among the colored people of this great city. The Lord has given me many tokens of his approval of my course in this direction, and we expect within a week or two to have the institution in operation.

I have dedicated myself fully to the missionary work in these highways and hedges, trusting alone in God for pecuniary and spiritual support. The Lord will provide. I ask for the prayers of all lovers of Jesus that God may strengthen me for my extra labors, and give me knowledge and wisdom for all my duties.

Two little girls have been given us from Satan's seat, and they are rescued in season to save them from infamy and shame. We expect more from the same locality. One of the little girls to whom I have referred is almost white. When I first found her she had on her mother's old hood, shawl, and boots, and a little black dress, but no under garments whatever. She is now warmly clad, and a happy little member of our Sunday school.

I have on hand for sale a lot of card photographs of her in her old costume as I first found her (and a comical picture it makes), and a vignette showing her present appearance. Any of the brethren and sisters who desire copies can have either kind for twenty-five cents each, which will include postage, envelope, etc. That will be just what they cost me. Send me your address with money, and the pictures will be sent promptly. She is the first fruit.

Pray for the little wanderers. Yours in the highways and hedges, F. H. BURBANK.

WHY I HAVE NOT FILLED MY APPOINTMENTS.

As those who were expecting me in different places may think strange that I have disappointed them, I would inform them through the Crisis that I am at present laid up with a cancer; am under the doctor's care, trying to have it drawn out. I cannot tell how long I shall be laid up. It seems a task for me to be thus deprived the privilege of meeting with the people of God, as I view time short and what is to be done must be done quickly. I ask the prayers of God's children, that I may again be permitted to bear this last message to my fellow men. Your Bro. in Christ,

J. S. JORDAN.

For the World's Crisis.

TO BRO. D. D. CHAFFEE.

Your puzzle about justification, and sanctification afterwards, originated from a complication of creeds and a confused arrangement of scripture and the experience of others. He that doeth the will of my heavenly Father, the same is accepted of him. A soldier who enlists to serve the government finds his work has just begun. He gets the first bounty on the first start, and then must be obedient and endure hardness without enjoyment, except what comes from a consciousness of duty by obeying orders. Paul told Timothy to tell his converts to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus, thus using war terms to illustrate a christian's life of warfare; not expecting always to feel happy. Sometimes we must expect to be entirely empty of any kind of feeling. But if we have sinned, we should know a feeling of condemnation. These are resting points in our experience of warfare.

We cannot expect to be nerved up to a happy feeling all the time, any more than we could have an appetite to eat all day. We must exercise unto godliness, to digest the previous meal and create an appetite for another one. Some eat often, and little at a time. Some twice a day, and eat enough to last them fifteen hours, according to their constitutional habits, and appetite, and work. Hence no rule in this matter will adapt itself to all; and in spiritual food there is a variety. A quick, sensitive mind will not be satisfied with what another of a different temperament would be. All cannot see alike, nor eat alike, nor do alike, nor believe alike; hence there is no universal rule to govern our feelings.

Again. Your shingle mill is on a small stream, for I know where it is. You have to shut down to let the pond fill up. You cannot run the wheel without water; neither can you expect to feel the water of life to flow always alike. We may be in heaviness through manifold temptations, as Jesus was,—far from being happy, and think we have sinned, which causes this depression of spirit; but if we do not feel condemned, then we may rest and wait for the pond to fill up, and the work will go again.

I do not know of any scripture or experience of good men that contradicts this position rightly understood and applied. Our sins are not blotted out until God sends Jesus back again. See Peter on this point in Acts 3: 19, 20. Our sins are forgiven when we repent sufficiently and deny ourselves and take the cross. Then we feel happy, are justified, and keep so by doing our duty. Job was just as good when the devil took all his property, friends, and health away, as before. God will judge us according to our works, instead of feeling. Sanctification is to be set apart, not particularly to be made more happy. Job was set apart, and yet suffered in his mind, and waited for the pond to fill; then he went to work again. See Job praying for his friends, which turned his captivity.

Because God forgives our sins, it does not follow we may not want an advocate to forgive us again. That is what Jesus is up with the Father for. The preaching "once in grace, always in grace," has proved a stumbling-block to thousands. Keep doing, Bro. Chaffee, and learn to live by faith instead of feeling and sight, and please God by so doing. Thus you will have just the feeling best for you. In hope, HIRAM MUNGER.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR SISTERS:—After a silence of a few weeks, I again take my pen to tell you now good the Lord has been to us in blessing our labors in a new field. On coming home one day, I found a note from a stranger, stating that he had heard of our good meetings, and wished us to come and assist him in holding a protracted meeting. He said for six long years he had been asking the Lord to pour out his spirit upon the church (Wesleyan Methodist) of which he was pastor, and he had become discouraged. He had now started an extra meeting, but needed help. I wrote to him we would come the first Sabbath after Thanksgiving day, and stay three days.

Sister and I went. Had preaching afternoon and evening. Eight came forward for prayers. On Monday we visited around among the sick. Found the Lord was in the place, but the people knew it not. In the evening, through the sermon, the whole congregation seemed to be broken up, and were melted to tears. When the invitation was given to come forward, there was a perfect rush. The altar was filled, and the two front seats. Five professed to find the Savior. But we soon found we could not talk and sing too. There was no one to sing, for those that led the singing in the choir were crying for mercy and could not sing. So on Tuesday I returned to New York for some of my mission band, and sent them up to the place to sing and pray.

I filled my appointments here and then returned on Thursday. Found the work going on gloriously. Two-thirds of the congregation were white people, from all the different churches. So we stayed till the next Friday. Twenty-four professed to find the Savior. We then left for home, promising to return and hold watch night with them. We arranged our missionary work here, and returned again the Saturday before New Year's. On Sunday morning we had a love feast, as I had appointed, when I left. At three o'clock had preaching, and at eight in the evening. At seven o'clock there was a crowd around the church enough to fill it. The doors were opened at half past seven. At eight o'clock no more could get in; and with all that crowd, some having their friends on their laps, and some standing in the aisles as close as they could stand, all the way up to the altar, yet I never had better attention or better order.

At nine o'clock we had the young convert's experience meeting, which was very interesting, each one relating how merciful the Lord had been in not cutting them off in their sins, but had shown them their lost condition, and had converted them. At ten minutes before twelve we had silent prayer, while each one made a covenant with the Lord to live a new life. At five minutes past twelve we arose and sung the covenant hymn. The converts all took hold of each other's hands, while they sung,

"Come, let us anew our journey pursue," and what a blessing did come down. I do not think I ever felt the Holy Ghost's presence more powerfully than at that time. The white people said it seemed like heaven to them. They all seemed to be blessed. There were very few unconverted white persons present. All over the church persons stood like children. I think that New Year's eve will never be forgotten by that people. We then invited the anxious to come forward for prayers. They had a hard time to get through the crowd, but they pressed through, and twenty-two came forward.

I stayed till four o'clock, and many stayed till daylight. Six professed to find Jesus in the pardoning of their sins. Next day was the day for making calls. Some of the converts called on their friends, and instead of drinking and singing songs, told them what the Lord had done for their souls. Our time was up for us to go home, but the friends begged so hard for us to stay longer, and sinners were crying for mercy in all directions; so we concluded to stay till Friday, which made a week, and the Lord was with us every hour. The cry was, "Lord, have mercy on me!" The Lord did his own work in his own way. There were four converted one day in their homes. One man in the barn, one woman in bed, one man while he was making the fire in the morning. This revival has run into the white churches. O may the Lord get to himself a great name, and scores of souls be converted to him, and be ready to meet him at his coming.

I want to say one word in reference to the simplicity of this people. One man came forward, fell on his knees, and said,—

"O Lord, I am a great sinner. O Lord, save me, the vilest of the vile."

We pointed him to the Lamb of God.

"But, O madam, I am such a bad man, no body was ever so bad as I am. I have done every thing wicked that a man could do. I am afraid God wont forgive me."

Then he prayed so earnestly,—"O Lord, please forgive me, and I wont do so any more. Please do, for Jesus' sake. Please do. You know Jesus died to save sinners. O do please save me. Only forgive my sins, and I will be a better man. Please do, Jesus. Please do."

This is about their style of praying. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard his cry. The next evening he found peace in believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, and jumped up from the altar, turned around to the congregation, and told them what the Lord had done for him, and invited every body in the house that did not love Jesus to come to him to-night, and he knew the Lord would save them. He had saved him, and he was the wickedest man there ever was, and he knew if the Lord could forgive him he could forgive any body. It had its effect on the congregation, and this spirit of earnestness was all through the meeting. Now our brother can have singing, for nearly all the choir were converted.

At the request of the white people, I held meetings in the afternoons in their houses, and they were well attended, especially by the young; they came out, confessed their coldness and lukewarmness, and promised by the grace of God to live nearer to Jesus. Thus we labored about three weeks, and sixty-two souls rejoiced in Jesus. We could not stay any longer, so we came home and sent Bro. Wilkins up to stay a week, while we went to Hackensack to set things in order, and then came home to our own mission. I found them glad to see me, and they had been praying for God to bless my labors. I found our meeting doing well. They had been good children, and kept up the meetings. Two souls rose for prayers last night, at the close of the class, which is heart-cheering. O, I am so anxious to have all come to Christ, for he is right at the door.

Brethren and sisters, let us work for Jesus, for we are in that time when whosoever calls upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But it will not last long, and then the time comes when he that is filthy shall be filthy still. Will you pray for us, that we faint not?

Yours, looking for Jesus,
ANNA E. SMITH.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT, and the brethren scattered abroad:—May grace, mercy and peace be multiplied to you, and to all who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I am at home, trying to rest and recruit my worn-down system. My age and infirmities will not allow me to expose myself to the cold weather of winter as formerly.

My heart is in the work as much as ever, although my voice is not heard so much. I remain firm in "the faith once delivered to the saints," and trust there is an increase in the knowledge of God's word.

I feel interested to know the time of my Lord's coming, and still more interested to know what events are to follow his coming.

But, says one, we can not know any thing about what will be beyond the coming of Jesus. We can know what is written by the prophets. They wrote for our learning, and prophecy is of no private interpretation. It is for our comfort and benefit to know into what state we are to be ushered when the Lord comes. Will it be better, or worse? If better, in what respect? What kind of beings shall we be? angels, spirits, or men? What kind of bodies shall we have? material, or immaterial? mortal, or immortal? If material, will they not need food? Shall we eat and drink, as the Bible teaches, with Jesus at his table, in his kingdom? If so, what shall we eat? will our food be spiritual, or material?

I answer in the language of Scripture: we shall eat of the twelve kinds of fruit which grow on the tree of life, and also that of all manner of trees for meat. And we shall make gardens, and eat the fruit thereof; plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof. What, says one, drink wine in Christ's kingdom? Yes, certainly, and the pure juice of the grape, too. Yes, and water from the pure river of God, clear as crystal, which makes glad the inhabitants of the glorious city.

And what other powers will man have in that kingdom? The power to love God his Creator, and Jesus his Redeemer, and his fellow men, too, who bear the image of their Creator, as Jesus did, even the "express image of his person"; and the power also to sing, to see, to hear, and walk, just as we do now. Yes, walk the golden streets, and range over the verdant fields of Paradise restored, and in and out of the pearly gates of the city.

Every power of man will find sweet employ in that eternal world of joy. Their swords will be turned to ploughshares, their spears to pruning-hooks; and I am thinking what a peaceable, happy time it will be when no swords are used, when man shall be a friend to his fellow man, and judgment and justice are executed in the earth. The Lord hasten the day, is the prayer of B. SPAULDING.
Chelmsford, Mass.

From Bro. J. H. Harding.

Brothers and sisters, scattered abroad:—The Lord is pouring out his Spirit here in this place. A mighty work he is doing. Sinners and backsliders, who have long stood out against God, are now giving their hearts unto him. Praise the Lord. Whole families unite in Christ, and the Spirit runs from heart to heart. There is a united effort made to save souls. The strangest revival that I ever witnessed. Little children came forward first, then the youth, then the cold backslider was ashamed to falter, and there are more coming to the anxious seats; upwards of seventy-five have come forward in the last few days. Glory to God.

Bro. Streeter is laboring with us, and as our united cry goes up to the Lord to carry on the work, I request the prayers of you all that the fire may burn until it spreads through this entire country, that God may be glorified in his people, and these that have been blessed come off triumphant and reign with Christ.
Yours in hope, JASPER H. HARDING.

From Bro. C. H. Sweet.

BRO. GRANT:—I do feel truly thankful to God that he has permitted me to witness the ushering in of the present year 1866. There seems to be a presentiment upon every hand that some great and grand event is to transpire ere its close. The Spiritualists, the Mohammedans, the Jews, and many other classes of people, have fond hopes and expectations centred upon the present year. But none have so bright and glorious a hope as those who are looking for the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And why may we not, dear brother, be looking for him? We see much to favor such a hope, but nothing to seriously oppose it.

Look for a moment on modern society, and see if it is not a complete likeness to the picture drawn by the apostle Paul. Says he, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. From such turn away."—2 Tim. 3: 1-5. Does not modern society fill this picture? Is not the likeness as perfect and complete as the camera could possibly reflect it? Now can we say this likeness is all a mere accident? Nay.

What, then, does it teach us? It should convince the child of God beyond a doubt that the Judge standeth at the door. Are we prepared for this great event? Your Bro. in Christ, CHAS. H. SWEET.

BRO. GRANT:—God is bestowing great blessings in New Bedford. His people are being revived and filled with the spirit of labor. Salvation is flowing. Wanderers are coming home to Father's house, while many are giving their hearts to God who never before enjoyed his peace and love. As many as twenty-four at a time have taken the anxious seat, many of whom found Christ before leaving it. Blessed be the name of the Lord. This work reminds us of past days, when God has displayed his matchless power in saving sinful men. The house is filled to overflowing. Last night every part was full, and hundreds left who could not gain an entrance. I verily believe the people of New Bedford are receiving the last invitation. Jesus is nigh at the door.

BRO. GRANT:—I praise God that I have one more chance of writing a few lines, to thank you for your excellent paper, the Crisis. It has been all the preaching I have had for four years.

The events of another year, which is so soon to dawn upon us, will show us that we are almost home. Dear children, I thank God that I live in these days when light beams from God's word, which tells me I am near the kingdom. Pray for me, that I may not be blind. From your unworthy brother,
Dec. 29th, 1865. JOHN BROWN, JR.

Bro. JOHN M. SNOOK, of Romeo, Mich., writes:—"I would here extend to any of the Lord's servants an invitation to preach in this place. There is a wide field here. I cannot promise a very hearty welcome on the part of the people, especially at first. If they come in the name of Jesus, they can make our house their home."

Bro. WALTER NICHOLS, North Searsport, Me., writes:—"The good Lord has blessed us here with quite a revival. The church has risen in the name of the Lord, and got on the harness, and they love the work the Lord has given them to do. Some three or four new ones have come out on the Lord's side. We believe the Lord is coming within the next three years. There is a real glory in believing this great truth."

Bro. R. H. BOLTON, Marshall, Ill., writes: "The work of God is onward here. Quite a number of souls are becoming obedient to the gospel. Last Lord's day I spoke to a large audience on 'the kingdom of God' and the Lord's speedy coming. Many christians rejoiced in the glorious message."

CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Did a holy life consist of one or two noble deeds,—some signal specimens of doing, or enduring, or suffering,—we might account for the failure, and reckon it small dishonor to turn back in such a conflict. But a holy life is made up of a multitude of small things. It is the little things of the hour, and not the great things of the age, that fill up a life like that of Paul and John, like that of Rutherford, or Brainerd, or Martyn. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles, nor battles, nor one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom,—make up the true christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloah, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not "the waters of the river, great and mighty," rushing down in torrent noise and force,—are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and of the flesh, little acts of indolence, or indecision, or slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations, or aberrations from high integrity, little touches of shabbiness and meanness, little bits of covetousness and penuriousness, little exhibitions of worldliness and gayety, little indifferences to the feeling or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper, or crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life. And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions or private dealings, or family arrangements; to little words and tones; little benevolences, or forbearances, or tendernesses; little self-denials, and self-restraints, and self-forgetfulness; little plans of quiet kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; to punctuality, and method, and true aim in the ordering of each day,—these are the active developments of a holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed. What makes yon green hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak, or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slopes, comprised of innumerable blades of slender grass. It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.—Bonar.

THE ALARM IN CANADA. The fresh rumors of a Fenian invasion of Canada have caused the banks on the frontier to send their specie to fortified places for safety. Dispatches from Toronto and Kingston say there are mysterious military operations going on. Forts are being strengthened, and new defenses are laid out on Wolf Island, while all the service militia are to be called out immediately. The Canadian authorities profess to have positive information that Sweeney and Roberts mean to invade Canada.

☞ From a statement in the Cleveland Herald, it appears that the disasters on the great lakes have nearly doubled in five years. [illegible] is as follows: In 1861, 271; 1862, 300; 1863, 350; 1864, 379; 1865, 500.

☞ The number of emigrants who arrived at New York last year was 196,000, or about 16,000 more than in 1864.

Obituaries.

GRINNELL. Died at his residence in Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., Oct. 2d, 1865, Ira Grinnell, aged forty-seven years, four months, and eleven days.

His death was caused by an accidental blow while at work on his farm. After receiving the blow (which was the result of his horse's whippletree catching a pole while mowing, which pole at first seemed to be fast, but broke from its fastenings, and in doing which struck Bro. G. on the backside of his head, just behind the left ear), he went to his house. Sister G. was alone (with the exception of the children), and as he entered the house she said, "Are you sick?" He answered, "No. I am hurt, and I do not know but I have got my death blow." She sprang and gave him an easy chair. But his pain forbid his occupying it. She aided him to the couch. He soon began to vomit, and his carelessness in the operation convinced her that he was losing his powers of mind. Under these circumstances Sister G., in endeavoring to render her dying husband (for he died the same day) the necessary help that the case demanded, so over tasked and strained her frail body that as soon as the excitement and funeral services were over, she herself was compelled to take her bed, and as she did so she seemed to be impressed that it was her deathbed sickness, and, therefore, while she could yet arise and walk, went to her wardrobe and selected her grave clothes, in the full belief that she should shortly sleep with her husband, till the voice of the Son of God shall call his loved one from the grave to enjoy that rest which remains to the people of God; and, alas! her premonitions were all realized, so far as death was concerned, for on the 3d of November, 1865, she died, and was gathered to her people; like the fathers and saints of old. She was forty-four years, eight months and nine days old.

They were both genuine christians, and loved and esteemed by their neighbors and acquaintance. Their presence will not only be missed in the remaining family of seven orphan children, but in the social and religious circles as well. May the Lord bless the children and surviving friends. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, Oct. 5th and Nov. 5th, 1865, in the presence of large congregations. C. F. SWEET.

KINSMAN. Fell asleep in Jesus Jan. 25th, 1866, Bro. David Kinsman, of Essex, Ct., aged forty-six years and nine months.

Bro. Kinsman was a believer in the Lord's coming in 1843, but it was not until 1854, while residing in Collinsville, Ct., and under the preaching of Bro. Grant, that the blessed hope became a living principle in his heart, and ever after an unfailing source of comfort. He was ever ready to give of his means to the needy, and to spread the truths he so much loved. Our preaching brethren and many others will remember his house as a place where all his Father's family were welcome.

In 1857, he removed to Essex, Ct. Although leaving all of like precious faith, yet he never lost sight of the truth, and he was respected by all who knew him as an upright christian. For a long time his health had been failing, but he clung to the hope of living until Jesus comes, until about a year ago he gave up work, and felt that he must fall a victim to consumption. His faith grew brighter as his strength failed, and he was able to look death in the face with perfect calmness, and truly he bore a good testimony to all who visited him, that the hope which gave him such peace was a good one to die by.

A few days before his death Bro. Seth Woodruff visited him and found his sickroom a cheerful place. There were weary, sleepless nights, the hacking cough and oppressed breathing, but no murmuring. The language of praise and joyful anticipation was ever on his lips. "I shall sleep only a little while," he said; "all is dark here, but all is bright over yonder." On the morning of his death he said, "Can it be that I am so near through?" On being told he was, he said, "The Lord is my Shepherd. Give my love to all my friends, and tell them I feared no evil."

He was brought to Collinsville for burial, and after words of comfort from Bro. W., we carried him to the hillside, where he sweetly sleeps, waiting for the resurrection morning. A wife and daughter mourn the loss of a kind husband and father, and the church has lost a faithful member.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep!"
H. J. HALE.

IN MEMORIAM.

In Farmington, N. H., Nov. 18th, 1865, Sr. MARY S. RICKER.

Our gentle sister sleepeth
The slumber of the blest,
Unmindful of our sorrowing,
She peacefully doth rest.

'Tis said death loves a shining mark,
He seeks the brightest, best,
So hath he laid our sister low—
The loving, loved, and blest.

She early loved the Savior,
And chose the better part;
Hers was a spirit kind and true,
A tender, generous heart.

A gloom hangs o'er the household
Her presence made so bright;
Her flowers, and every thing she loved,
Are treasured with delight.

How much her aged father
Will miss her tender care,—
Heaven send thee comfort, mourning one,
Is my heart's earnest prayer.

Her brothers, too, and sisters,
Ah! who can tell your grief?
Love ye the Savior that she loved,
He'll bring you sweet relief.

And when we gather weekly
Unto the house of prayer,
Ah! then we miss thee, Mary dear,
Thy seat is vacant there.

And when to the All Father
We raise the fervent prayer,
Or talk of Jesus' wond'rous love,
Her voice is missing there.

From the old school-house window
Where we oft meet to pray,
I see the grave where Mary waits
The resurrection day.

We covered her with flowers
When we robed her for the tomb,
But she'll gather fairer flowers
In the bright world to come.

Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard
The glories Mary'll gain,
When from his Father's throne on high
The Lord shall come to reign.
MARTHA S. HORNE.

RICE. Died at Hillsburgh, Nova Scotia, Jan. 3d, 1864, Mrs. Elizabeth Rice, wife of Silas Rice, in the forty-sixth year of her age.

Also, Nov. 19th, 1865, Silas Rice, her husband, in the forty-third year of his age, leaving one child, three brothers and seven sisters to mourn his loss.

"How vain are all things here below,
How false, and yet how fair;
Each pleasure has its poison too,
And every sweet a snare."
ISRAEL RICE.

LITTLE. Died, four miles east of Ossawatomie, Miami County, Kansas, Jan. 7th, 1866, of fever, my father, Anson Little, aged seventy-one years, three months, and seventeen days.

He was born in Litchfield Co., Ct., Sept. 21st, 1794. He moved to Illinois in 1836, where he remained till 1863, since which time he has lived in Iowa and Kansas. The first Advent paper printed fell into his hands. He saw the firm gospel foundation of Bro. Miller's position, and at once embraced the faith of the speedy coming of the Savior in 1844. He looked with undaunted faith for the coming of the blessed Savior at that time. Being disappointed, he yielded not his faith, but continued to watch the signs that have since marked the prophetic history of these last days with such deep interest. And as he saw the dawning of that glorious day so soon to break, he expected to live to see the triumphant King in majesty appear. But calmly and peacefully he has fallen asleep in Jesus, whom he loved, fully believing that he would soon hear the voice of the Son of God and live, clothed with immortality, enter the holy city of God, and dwell with the Redeemer for ever. [illegible] It was my holy privilege to be with my dear father the last three months of his life, and to administer to his wants in his last moments. He was calm and gentle, pleasant and affectionate, and appeared perfectly prepared for heaven. A hallowed ray of heavenly glory seemed to beam forth from his face in death. Triumphantly he has gone to rest, while we mourn his departure in this strange land.

We have laid our dear father to rest on a high bluff overlooking the Maridisene river, one and a half miles east of Ossawatomie.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Via. Queenstown the 21st ult.

The Paris Presse of the 19th announces that Baron Saillard left Paris on the 15th for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements with the Emperor Maximilian for the return of the French troops from Mexico at the earliest possible date.

On the 16th Prim's insurgent forces in Spain were still on the road to Portugal. The Royal troops were taking many prisoners, notwithstanding forced marches by the insurgents.

A Madrid telegram of the 18th says it was thought probable that Prim would enter Andalusia, as the Royal troops had barred his passage into Portugal. A band of armed men had appeared in the mountains of Tarragona. The Royal troops were in pursuit. On the 17th Prim passed the night at Berlanga. It was not then apparent whether he would attempt to penetrate into Andalusia or cross into Portugal.

Madrid continued tranquil, but there were rumors of risings in various parts of Spain. The semi-official Correspondencia qualifies these reports of risings as having no importance, and says it is believed that the government, finding its hitherto humane course of procedure ill-understood, is about to adopt a vigorous system of repression.

The sergeants who attempted to get up a mutiny of the Alcala regiment and release the convicts were shot on the 18th.

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 12. The Allied army is at Corrientes, receiving reinforcements. Lopez had addressed a very angry and violent note to the Allies, in which he threatened to massacre the prisoners in his hands. President Mitre replied in dignified terms. Famine is destroying Paraguay.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 31. The steamer Miami, which exploded on the Arkansas river, had about 250 passengers, among whom were 91 men of Co. B of the 13th United States cavalry. The accident occurred at seven o'clock in the evening, just after supper, and while the passengers were assembled in conversation around the stoves in the hall. The explosion was of such force as to rend the cabin floor asunder, and let every person down in the front part of the cabin. Great numbers lost their lives by jumping overboard. The total loss of life is supposed to be nearly 150. Thirty of the soldiers were lost.

The steamer Missouri, which exploded in the Ohio river, had 120 persons on board, 23 of whom were passengers. The latest information from Evansville places the loss of life at about 100. The Missouri was one of the largest boats on the river, and valued at $100,000.

Mexico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—A Washington dispatch says letters have just been received here from Paris. The Emperor Napoleon is ready to withdraw his forces from Mexico with the least possible delay, demanding nothing of the United States except that it in the meanwhile remain neutral between the belligerent parties, according to the assurances frequently given and reiterated by this government during the last three years. The Emperor does not ask for recognition of Maximilian, nor insist upon any other treaty stipulations. The statement put forth by the Paris Presse that an extraordinary commissioner had been sent to Mexico to make preparations for evacuation, is confirmed by letters received here. I have good reasons for believing that the State Department is already in possession of official information to this effect.

Mexican correspondence in a morning paper has reports, some of which are contradictory, to the effect that arrangements are now being perfected for the withdrawal of the French; that Maximilian has given his consent to their departure if the "United States" will send him troops to replace them; that he has expressed willingness to abdicate in favor of Iturbide; that he will soon receive another million dollars from France, and that he will certainly make a change in the cabinet soon. The difficulty between the Pope and the Mexican clergy has been settled in favor of the latter, but that between Maximilian and the clergy, on account of the church property confiscations, continues.

About 30,000 stand of arms for the Imperialists recently arrived at Vera Cruz from New York, but being condemned as unserviceable, were sent back.

The Imperial Court is in mourning for the king of Belgium. In response to a recent address of condolence, Maximilian made a speech, in which he expressed his determination to continue the course he has commenced in Mexico, and pursue his destiny. While he claimed not to have interfered with the democratic institutions of Mexico, he asserted that its only salvation was in a strong government. In the meanwhile the court martialing and execution of Republican prisoners by the Imperialists, and anarchical proceedings throughout the country go on, and the promised tranquilization appears no nearer than at the beginning.

The majority of the rebels who emigrated from this country to Maximilian's dominions, are said to be disgusted and anxious to get back home.

ITEMS.

☞ The commander of a French man-of-war has been exterminating the cannibal inhabitants of a village in the island of New Caledonia, in the Pacific, they having been guilty of killing and eating the captain and four men of a French vessel, who fell into their hands. A French garrison has now been placed on the island.

The Scientific American informs the ladies that if they would have corn beef juicy after it is cold, and not as dry as a chip, they should put it into boiling water when they put it on to cook, and they should not take it out of the pot when done until it has become cold.

☞ A letter from Salt Lake, Jan. 9, reports a heavy fall of snow, the ground being covered to the depth of two to four feet. The weather had been unusually cold, causing thousands of cattle to perish for want of food and shelter.

☞ An inch and a half of snow fell recently in Stockton and Sacramento, an occurrence never known before in the valley by any white man. The California born children were greatly astonished and delighted.

☞ Late advices from Japan announce that the ports of Ossacca and Hiago are opened to foreign trade.

☞ The Rochester (N. Y.) Fenians have pledged themselves to refrain from wearing or using goods, wares or merchandise of English manufacture.

☞ At the Isle of Wight on Christmas day flowers and fruit were growing in unprotected gardens.

THE GOSPEL TRAIN.

The gospel train is coming,
I hear it just at hand;
I hear the car wheels moving,
And rumbling through the land.
I hear the bell and whistle,
They're coming round the curve,
She's plying all her steam and power,
And straining every nerve.
CHORUS.—Get on board, get on board,
For there's room for many more.

O see the gospel engine,
She's heaving now in sight;
Her steam valves they are groaning,
The pressure is so great;
No signal for another train
To follow on the line.
O sinner, your forever lost,
If once you're left behind.

O see the engine banner,
She's fluttering in the breeze,
She's spangled with the Savior's blood,
But still she floats with ease.
This is the gospel banner,
The motto's new and old;
Salvation and repentance
Are burnished there in gold.

She's nearing now the station,
O sinner, don't be vain,
But come and get your ticket,
And be ready for the train.
The fare is cheap, and all can go,
The rich, the poor are there;
No second class on board the train,
No difference in the fare.

I think she'll make a little halt
To wood up on the line,
And give you all a chance to go,
But yet she'll make her time.
She's coming round the mountain,
By the rivers and the lake;
The Savior, he's on board the train,
Controlling steam and brake.

This train has ne'er run off the track,
She's passed through every land;
Millions and millions are on board,
O come and join the band.
There's Moses, Noah, and Abraham,
And all the prophets too;
Our friends in Christ are all on board,
O what a heavenly crew.

We soon shall reach the station,
O how we then shall sing,
With all the heavenly army,
We'll make the welkin ring.
We'll shout o'er all our sorrows,
And sing forevermore
With Christ and all his army,
On that celestial shore.

For the World's Crisis.

TRIP TO IOWA.

BRO. GRANT:—As many of the friends have inquired why I did not write for the Crisis, and also earnestly desire that I should give them through that organ a sketch of my trip into Iowa, I will improve a few moments for that purpose, hoping you will find some spare corner in your valuable paper for its insertion.

It was under great exercise of mind and a deep sense of duty, that I complied with previous invitations and sent forward my determination to visit Iowa at the time of her quarterly session in December, and pass a few weeks in her limits, among her different churches. Although I very much dreaded the taking of such a journey in mid winter, I expected the presence and care of my husband throughout the route, which I felt would make the journey as comfortable as kindness could do so. But after sending on the notices, unexpected engagements prevented my husbanp accompanying me, which was quite a trial to us both, and would have completely deterred me from taking the intended journey, were it not for the fact that the notices had gone out, and I consequently felt that my engagements must be met.

Accordingly, Friday, Dec. 22d, I bade adieu to the dear ones at home, and in company with my husband, who was to take me to the State line and attend our conference there, turned my face to the south. It was a clear, cold day of winter, and our colts took us over the ground in good speed, but I could not drive from my heart the thought that every mile was taking me just so much further from that home which I could not visit again for weeks. At Rushford we stopped to dine, and fell in with Deacon Bates and wife, and others, on their way to our quarterly meeting, which was cheering. We crossed the Root river on a ferry, and arrived at Highland, very cold and somewhat tired, soon after the shades of night had enveloped the scenes around us. Here we were very kindly entertained by Bro. and Sr. Sutherland, who, although not exactly with us in our religious belief, we trust belong to the "church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven."

Left an appointment at their school-house for us to attend on our return, and pressed on to Elliota, where we arrived in time for the commencement of the conference, which was held in Capt. Elliot's dining-room. Eld. Sweet opened the meeting, and Eld. Burcell followed him, after which every brother and sister had some good thing to tell of the kingdom. We had a most heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. It was truly a feast of fat things, wine on the lees, well refined. Some of our hearts were somewhat saddened at the absence of those whom we expected to meet here, and whose presence we were sure would have added much to the interest of the meeting. We do wish all the friends, more especially our ministering brethren, would make it a point to attend our quarterly and annual meetings, for if they would do so invariably it would be a great help to the cause. These large meetings are representatives of us as a body, and are scanned closely by leading men of different sects; and were they to be well attended by all our ministerial brethren, and warm-hearted, earnest lay brethren and sisters, they would carry an influence with them that the spectator could not resist, but be led to declare that we were indeed a people.

Our quarterly meeting closed Sunday evening by observing the ordinance of the Lord's Supper; when we sung a hymn, took the farewell hand, and went out. These family re-unions of our Father's children are truly blessed, and although the adieus bring with them sadness and tears, they also freshen in our hearts the blessed hope of our eternal inheritance in that better land, where we shall meet to be complete, and forever enjoy the society of the just made perfect, when we shall see the King in his beauty, and behold the land not very far off.

This was, I think, the best quarterly meeting ever held by us on the State line. There seemed to be such a unity of heart, firmness of purpose, and determination to advance in the divine life.

Monday morning I bade farewell to my husband, whose time had now come to return home. Pressed by the request of the friends, I remained to speak here Monday and Tuesday evenings. Good attendance and good interest. Wednesday I bade adieu to Bro. Elliot and his dear family, where I had been so hospitably entertained, and every want anticipated, and took the stage for Decotah, where I arrived soon after dark. Stopped at the Winneshiek House over night, and took the stage next morning for Canover, and the cars for Ossian, and from thence the stage to Strawberry Point, where we arrived about twelve o'clock at night, having traveled sixty miles that day, and part of the way in an open wagon. It was an intensely cold day and evening, and I suffered severely, and more than once my mind wandered to the comforts of the dear home behind me.

I found the friends in Strawberry Point anxiously expecting me, and some had almost given me up in consequence of my late arrival; for I remained in Elliota and preached as long as I could and arrive in Strawberry Point in time for the conference. I feel that time is short, and every moment ought to be improved in working heartily in the cause of God. I found a hearty welcome and a pleasant home for the time being at the house of Eld. P. S. W. Deyo, who was absent engaged in the work of an evangeliutt, but whose family reside here, and with whose dear wife I had been for a number of years acquainted. Bro. Deyo returned home in time for the commencement of the Friday evening meeting. Eld. Hough is here from Cascade, and Eld. Kinney from Manchester, together with others, and we are hoping to have a good meeting.

29th. Meeting this evening in the hall where our brethren in this place usually convene for worship. Bro. Kinney gave us a warm-hearted discourse, which I hope did all of us good, at the close of which the brethren and sisters brought in their tithes into the storehouse, and we felt it was good to be there.

Dec. 30th. Eld. Hough gave us this morning a very edifying discourse in the Universalist meeting-house, which the proprietors had kindly opened for the occasion. He is an able man, and his labors and experience in the desk and out of it, are doing a vast deal toward promoting the cause of God in this State, and building up the church in the most holy faith. It fell to my lot this evening to address the audience, which I tried to do with singleness of heart. Lord's day morning I again addressed the people. Audience good and very attentive, while I discoursed to them concerning the three cardinal principles of the Christian religion. This afternoon Eld. Kenney gave us a most excellent discourse on the importance of prayer, more especially family prayer. This evening I was again called upon to take the stand. We had a large audience. The house was filled to overflowing, galleries and all. I spoke to them concerning the soon setting up of God's kingdom under the whole heaven. Great solemnity prevailed. After the discourse the ordinance of the Lord's Supper was observed. The family of believers lingered a long time around the table of the Lord. Many spoke, some confessed, some were received into the church, and we felt the place was consecrated by the presence of God. The parting hymn was most solemn, and tears flowed freely, and we parted with the strong determination seemingly pervading every heart to be living witnesses of God, and followers of that which is good in the midst of a wicked generation, shining as lights.

I remained in Strawberry Point and spoke on the evenings of Jan. 1st, 2d and 3d, to good and attentive audiences. Tuesday evening especially a deep interest was manifested, and many tears shed.

Jan. 4th I left the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Deyo, where I had been so kindly cared for, and started for Manchester, arriving there a little before dark. After riding so long in the cold of a January day, and then warming up by a brisk fire, felt that stupor which is the natural effect of such transition from cold to heat, and consequently but little of that animation one likes to feel when about to address an audience. However, the appointment was out, and true to my post I appeared at the place appointed. The house was completely filled, more than could be seated, and when I had got interested in my subject I forgot every thing but the great work before me. It gladdened my heart to once more see and shake the friendly hand with brethren and sisters with whom I had become acquainted, and held sweet converse, and walked to the house of God in company, while attending the annual meeting held last June at that place.

Jan. 5th. Spoke in Manchester this evening to a crowded house and deeply interested audience. Missed very much our lamented brother, Ward Cooley, who has done so much towards building up and sustaining the church in this place, but who now sleeps in Jesus. Eld. Kinney is living here, and laboring faithfully for his Master, and kindly assisted me in opening and closing the meetings.

Jan. 6th, I bade farewell to the pleasant village of Manchester and its surroundings, and took the cars for New Hartford; arrived there about twilight; found Bro. Ensign there, and also Bro. Ingalls, with an easy carriage to convey me to his house, which we did not reach until dark. Took some refreshments and repaired to the school-house, where I found the congregation waiting, and Bro. Ensign and others improving the time by singing. Addressed the audience on the greatness of the Messiah and the soon coming King.

Next day being Lord's day, addressed the people twice, morning and evening, also the evening of the 8th. This was my last discourse. The house was crowded, and its inmates solemn as the grave. It was a solemnity that could be felt. I felt I must say just so much—that there were those there I would never see again until I met them at the bar of Almighty God, and I wished to clear my skirts of the blood of souls. Bro. Ensign lives here, and labors faithfully to keep the church together, and to strengthen the things that remain. He very kindly assisted me in the exercises of the meeting.

Jan. 9th, I left New Hartford in company with Bro. Ingalls and wife for Boylin's Grove. It was a very unpleasant morning. The snow fell and the wind blew, while our road lay across one of those broad, open prairies so unpleasant to cross in a storm. But Bro. Ingall's team was an excellent one, his wagon easy to ride in, and he wrapped us up well in the buffaloes, and on we sped. Called at Bro. McKee's and took dinner, and enjoyed for a few hours the sweets of social life; then pressed on to our destined port. The snow changed to sleet, and we had a most uncomfortable ride, and were right glad as night drew on apace to alight at the hospitable mansion of Father Hewitt, where we were most warmly greeted, and every want administered to.

Jan. 10th, spoke to the people in Boylin's Grove. It was a very rainy, unpleasant evening, but the friends turned out well, and listened attentively while I spoke to them on the great truth that "God should bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." As I arose from the opening prayer I found Elder Jaynes and wife had arrived, which was quite comforting. The next day being Thursday, they dismissed the school, and I spoke to them on the morning and evening of this day, the interims of which I passed very pleasantly at Bro. Sawyer's house. I felt for some reason an unusually deep interest for the people of Boylin's Grove, and would have remained longer with them, but my appointments were out ahead, and I could not tarry.

This moring I bade farewell to Bro. and Sr. Ingalls, they being under the necessity of returning home, lest the streams would be so swollen they could not cross them. My heart swelled with sadness at the parting, for it seemed like leaving old and tried friends. They had taken me from the cars to their own home, and most kindly cared for me while I remained there, and then brought me through the storm and cold all the way to this place, for which may God reward them; and if we never meet again in this dispensation, give us a happy meeting in the kingdom.

RUTH M. ROWELL.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM BRO. L. BOUTELL.

BRO. GRANT:—I am again called to drink a bitter cup in the loss of my dear companion, who has been a helpmeet indeed for thirty-five years, especially since I was called out to sound the alarm and proclaim the soon coming of our absent Lord. While I was called to leave my family and all to preach this gospel of the kingdom of heaven at home, which has been my speciel work for the last twenty years and more, warning and beseeching men to shun death and lay hold on eternal life, she has borne faithfully and lovingly her burden in taking care of the family and all other domestic matters which I was obliged to leave, making my self-denial and trial in leaving as light as possible, for I love domestic life and home associations as well as any one. She was always interested in the cause of truth and the coming of Jesus; and while no mother could feel more interest and deny herself more readily for her children, yet her whole soul was in love with truth, and her head was uplifted, knowing redemption was soon to come.

In my absence the family altar was kept up, bringing the children within the hearing and influence of prayer. These duties of christian and domestic life devolving upon her, with a deep solicitude for my faithfulness to Christ and his cause in labor, that it might not be brought into reproach, wore upon her both mentally and physically. This, coupled with the death of our first born, which brought sorrow and mourning with bitter lamentations, was followed by a time of sickness culminating in inflammation of the right lung; and while I was hoping we had gained a partial recovery, sudden and unexpectedly death with his icy hand laid his fatal grasp upon the last doting daughter on whom we depended, under God, for domestic felicity, and in a moment our hearts were broken with grief; and although bearing it with holy resignation, yet her labor and affliction was more than she could bear. She became enfeebled and prostrate.

Thinking it might be better for her, and it also being her desire, I took her to Lynn and staid awhile; from thence to Salem, Mass., where we took up our abode. This was pleasing to her. She was delighted with the calls of those of like precious faith and the voice of prayer. But after all we could do, she wasted gradually till the morning of the 17th of January, when she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

I need her care, her counsel, admonition and advice. I feel my loss, my great loss. I mourn and weep. I am sad and sorrowful. But my trust is in the Lord. I look to the same source of comfort to which I have so often pointed others—the coming of Jesus, and the resurrection of the dead. I see redemption's plan must soon be consummated, when the sleepers will leave the land of the enemy, and gain glory, immortality, and eternal life. Amen.

The funeral services at Salem were attended by Eld. S. S. Brewer, and although in the morning at nine o'clock, many brethren and friends came to the house, showing their friendship and sympathy; when Bro. Brewer very appropriately administered words of comfort and consolation, directing to the only hope of life through the resurrection of the dead.

From Salem by cars we went directly to Groton Centre, where our old neighbors made full preparations for the funeral at two o'clock P. M. The services were attended here by Eld. Rufus Wendell. Most of the relatives and many friends came together, when Bro. Wendell preached an excellent, truthful and timely discourse, from 1 Thess. 4: 16, after which we followed the dear one to the cemetery, where with her children she will sleep in the dust of the earth till the sounding of the last trump. Then all the holy ones of all ages will come forth to the resurrection of life, and be like the angels, to die no more. I am

For the World's Crisis.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

We have shown that death is brought to view as a punishment for sin; and as saints die the first death, it must refer wholly to the "second death," which takes place after the day of final judgment, and is a final and eternal cessation of being, in relation to those who die in their sins before the coming of Christ; who are then brought to life, to receive their final doom, which is extinction of life forever, by the dreadful instrument of punishment, which is fire and brimstone.

But supposing we should prove by the word of God that the soul dies; what can be said then in favor of an immortal and a never-dying soul? We think, in this case, that the heathen dogma of a never-dying soul will be exploded.

Let us turn to the following passages of Scipture: We read in Ps. 22: 29, "And none can keep alive his own soul." Also, Ps. 49: 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." How can a soul be redeemed from the power of the grave unless it had been under its power? In Ps. 78: 50, "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence." In Ezek. 18: 4, we are informed that "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Here it is declared that if the soul sins "it shall die."

We will now look at Rev. 21: 8, where there are several crimes brought to view, and a positive declaration that the criminals "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." Now I would ask if there is any thing in this passage which shows the endless, conscious misery of the wicked? Certainly there is not.

We will next notice the word "perish." We read in Luke 13: 3-5, "I tell you, nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." The word "perish" is from the Greek word apollumi, "to destroy utterly," "kill." In our English language, it means "to die," "to decay," "to be lost," "to come to nothing," "to be blotted out from existence." It is a proper synonym of death; for when we say such a man perished in the flames of a burning building, we understand the man is dead. Would it be proper to say the man has gone to hell to live forever in torment? No, indeed.

We read in John 3: 15, that "whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have eternal life." Here we have "life" and "perish" in contrast. Can we say it should read, "shall not go into endless misery, but have eternal life?" Now please look at John 3: 14, where our Savior alludes to the brazen serpent that was raised upon a pole for those who were bitten by the poisonous serpents, that they might look towards the brazen serpent and not perish but live. Did they look towards the brazen serpent to save them from endless misery? or was it to save them from death? Does not the Savior use the figure of the brazen serpent to represent himself as a ransom to save the sinner from death? Certainly he does.

We will now refer to John 10: 28,—"And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." As "life" is here contrasted with the word "perish," it must certainly refer to the second death; and it perfectly agrees with Rev. 2: 11, where the revelator declares that "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." This cannot mean the first and literal death of any person who is now alive; for the first death is the common lot of all the living, both saint and sinner. But the word "perish" in the above scripture must mean that death, which is "the wages of sin," which is the second and eternal death; and is an eternal extinction of life and being. This dreadful punishment which awaits the wretched unbeliever who dies in his sins, must take place after the great day of judgment, and not before.

We will now refer the reader to Rom. 2: 12, where Paul says, "As many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law." Here we must understand the word "perish" to mean "second death," which the unrepenting sinner, who leaves the world in his sins, must receive after the day of judgment. Is there any thing in the word "perish" to show the meaning to be endless life in misery? Certainly not. Then for conscience' sake do not let us twist language out of its proper meaning, in order to make it agree with the heathen doctrine of immortal-soulism.

Let us now look at 2 Pet. 2: 12, where the apostle says, they "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." Here we discover the addition of the word "utterly" to the word "perish," and also "in their own corruption." Can there be any stronger expression made use of, to show the entire destruction of the wicked?

Let us look at the 37th Psalm, where the Psalmist tells us, "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; . . . into smoke shall they consume away." Here the Psalmist makes use of the strongest language to show the eternal death and final destruction of the enemies of the Lord. But those who are trained up in the schools of modern orthodoxy cannot see the truth unless it will agree with their favorite theory. We have some very important Scriptures for our next article.

Vernon, Vt. B. PERHAM.

DOWNFALL OF NAPOLEON III.

Some one, curious in the statistics of fatality, has been making calculations to show that Napoleon III. will come to his downfall in 1869. The calculations are founded on some very odd coincidences of dates, which we will try to explain. In the first place, they take the dates of the principal events in the history of Louis Phillippe and his Queen, which they group together so as to sum up 1848, the year of his downfall. Thus Louis Phillippe was born in 1773, and ascended the throne in 1830. Now to 1830 add separately the figures 1, 7, 7, 3, of his birth date, and they make 1848, thus: 1830 and 1 and 7 and 7 and 3 make 1848. The same result is reached if we take the year of his marriage. That event occurred in 1809, and he ascended the throne in 1830. Now 1830 and 1 and 8 and 0 and 9 make 1848. Again, if we take the date of his Queen's birth, 1782, and go through the same process—1830 and 1 and 7 and 8 and 2, we arrive at the same fatal year, 1848, in which he lost his throne.

The second part of the calculation is this: Napoleon III. was born in 1808, and ascended the throne in 1852. Now, if we start with 1852, and add the separate figures in his birth year, we come to 1869—for 1852 and 1 and 8 and 0 and 8 make 1869. So, too, of his Empress. Eugenie was born in 1826. Taking the date of his ascent to the throne in 1852, we have 1852 and 1 and 8 and 2 and 6—again bringing us to the fatal 1869. He married Eugenie in 1853, and taking the year 1852 and adding the separate figures of his marriage year, and it still points to 1869. Thus 1852 and 1 and 8 and 5 and 3 make 1869. In fact, these French historical dates are full of such curious indications. Robespierre fell in 1794. Taking that date and adding the separate figures of it as above, and we have 1794 and 1 and 7 and 9 and 4—making the date of Napoleon's last fall, 1815. Pursuing the same method, we take 1815 and 1 and 8 and 1 and 5—making 1830, the date of Charles X.'s fall. Going on to 1848, the date of Louis Phillippe's downfall, and we find that 1848 and 1 and 8 and 4 and 8 brings us once more to the fatal 1869.

But there is still another fatality attending these French dynasties, which is put in this form: Seventeen years was the limit of the supremacy of Napoleon I.; seventeen years the restored Bourbons reigned; seventeen years Louis Phillippe occupied the throne; and the same seventeen years being accorded to Napoleon III., it carries him to the same fated 1869 as the end of his career. And this fatal seventeen is also produced by strange coincidences. Taking the figures in the year of his birth, 1808, and adding them up thus, 1 and 8 and 0 and 8, and they sum up 17; taking the figures in the year of the Empress' birth, 1826, and adding them, 1 and 8 and 2 and 6, and they also make 17; then taking the figures in the year of his marriage, 1853, 1 and 8 and 5 and 3, and they likewise foot up 17.

These coincidences are extraordinary enough to set the wonder-mongers at work, and some of them see the finger of fate in it all. And it not unfrequently happens that such shadowy prophecies set influences in motion that enable them to work out their own fulfillment. The Bonapartes are all confirmed fatalists, and these things may cause the present head of the family a great many anxieties about 1869.

The historic eye of four thousand years looks down upon this point, the year 1866, and sees the issue fairly made up—is man capable of self-government? During that long, tedious march man has demonstrated a thousand times, and upon as many battle-fields, his capabilities to fight, has shown beyond question his physical prowess. And the last great showing on that issue was the grandest of them all—the crushing of the rebellion. The question for 1866 is to see if the broken fragments of war, a disorganized nation, can be harmoniously combined, the "many in one," by the diplomacy of peace, so that virtue and intelligence shall enable the people to make love of country its bulwark, and not its army and navy. For a "union of hearts, a union of hands, a union of lakes, and a union of lands" must be the bonds of a Republic, or it ceases to be a Republic. Well, the result sought is the most important man ever attempted to accomplish.

But 1866 is a year of note to the world. As an epoch it stands at the head of consummating grand events. The four quarters of the globe, at the dawn of this year, stand in strange and significant juxtaposition, as to coming troubles. A network of surroundings, not the devisings of human ingenuity, mysteriously enthralls the nations. All Europe watches Turkey. That appears to be the key of the arch of government of that continent. The Suez canal this year will make Palestine the highway of the nations," and knock the last prop from beneath the rotten bottom of the worm-eaten Ottoman Empire. In 1866 the Emperor of the French will control the "short line route" to the East. On the 1st of May he is to withdraw his troops from Rome and leave the Pope to take care of himself. And already that venerable successor of the "rock-bottom" Gallileean fisherman is looking out for a home, and the "Empire of Malta," the "kingdom of the sea," is talked of.

That fact may herald the coming regenesis. "66" is an epoch year; the Pope may lose at Rome, during the year, the political power which "1260" years before was bestowed upon him by the very power that at last takes it from him. There is not a nation on earth that is at rest. The great cry is, "More rights to the people." The British empire is troubled. Fenians and pauperism are causing the corruptions of that government to quake. But why numerate the trials of the nations and the people? They are without end.—Warren Republican.

OUR ONLY HOPE.

I once saw a ship-mate at work making fast some spars which were hanging over the stern of the bark. The sea was quite rough at the time, and the vessel was rushing swiftly through the troubled waters. As the sailor was "hauling taut" one of the lashings, and leaning backward over the water, the rotten rope suddenly broke, and had not a strong hand seized him quick as thought, he doubtless must have fallen overboard, and as he could not swim, there was but a very small prospect of his escaping a watery grave.

This illustrates the condition of those who depend upon their own goodness for salvation. You are trusting to a rotten rope, and one that will surely break when the time of trial comes. There is a strong arm ready now to save you, and if you trust in that aright, you may escape the doom that awaits all who trust in their own righteousness.

There is no other arm but that of Jesus that can save you. May the Holy Spirit lead you to see that all your best deeds are as "filthy rags," and may you haste at once to the only "city of refuge."—F. H. C.—Voice of the West.

DR. MILNE.

When the late Dr. Milne, of China, was a working tradesman at Leith Hall, the seat of the late Gen. Hay, now of Sir Andrew Leith Hay, in Aberdeenshire, he was ever ready to act out John Newton's principle: "I make it a rule of christian duty never to go to a place where there is not room for my Master as well as myself."

It so happened that on one occasion, when a ball was to be given in honor of some family event, orders were issued to send invitations to every person on the estate. When the grieve received the name of William Milne, he said to the steward, "You need not invite Milne, he won't come; balls don't do with his religion."

"But you can take the invitation, whether he accepts it or not," replied the steward, "for my instructions are to invite all."

The grieve sent the message to William Milne, who, on receiving it, gravely said:—"Tell the grieve that when William Milne has no work for eternity he will attend to balls."

The answer was an arrow from the quiver of divine truth. It pierced his heart, and he could get no peace until it was drawn by the great Physician, and the balm of Gilead applied. The grieve still lives, and in a higher sphere of labor has long been a useful and consistent member of the church of Christ.

PRAYER.

Ere the morning's busy ray
Call you to your work away;
Ere the silent evening close
Your wearied eye in sweet repose,
To lift your heart and voice in prayer
Be your first and latest care.

REASON AND FAITH.—Implicit believers, ignorant believers, the adversary may swallow; but the understanding believer he must chew and pick bones before he come to assimilate him and make him like himself. The implicit believer stands in an open field, and the enemy will ride over him easily; the understanding believer is in a fenced town, and he hath outworks to lose before the town be pressed; that is reasons to be answered before his faith be shaken, and he will sell himself dear, and lose himself by inches, if he be sold or lost at last.—Donne.

"SOWING HIS WILD OATS."

"Sowing his wild oats"—aye! sowing them deep,
In the heart of a mother, to blossom in tears,
And shadow with grief the decline of her years.

"Sowing his wild oats," to silver the head
Of the sire who watched his first pulse throb with joy,
And whose voice went to heaven in prayer for "the boy."

"Sowing his wild oats," to spring up and choke
The flowers in the garden of a sister, whose love
Is as pure and as bright as the blue sky above.

"Sowing his wild oats"—aye! cheeks shall grow pale,
And sorrow shall wither the heart of the wife
When manhood thus squanders the prime of his life.

"Sowing his wild oats." Death only shall reap,
With his keen sharpened scythe; the fruits will be found
In the graveyard near by, 'neath that grass-covered mound.

A NEW THOUGHT FOR OLD BARLOW.

"So you won't give me anything?"

"You needn't have put it in that way; I've got nothing to give," said Allan Barlow. "Nobody gives to me. I get nothing but what I work for, and pay for, and its rather hard to come upon such folks; you should go to them, as you may say, that gets plenty for nothing, and have more than they want."

And old Allan Barlow leaned both his elbows on his garden fence, and turned away from the person he spoke to.

The man he spoke to was a gray-headed man, in workman's clothes. He carried a little book in one hand, and in the other held a pencil ready to write.

"You have told me of two sorts of people," said Silas Pyne, "that I don't expect to meet with—those that have nothing but what they pay for, and those that have more than they want."

"Very like," said Allan; "but there's some of both in the world for all that. I've got nothing but what I pay for, but I haven't got more than I want."

Silas smiled and shook his head.

"What dy'e shake your head at?" asked Allan gruffly.

"Why, at the mistake you are in, friend," answered Silas, "in thinking you pay for everything."

"Make it out that it's a mistake, and I'll give you leave to put me down five shillings in your book," said Allan.

"Thank you," said Silas; "but before I begin to do it, will you just give me a draught from your well? It's the best water any where about."

"That it is," answered Allan, readily getting a cup for him; "and it's a prime thing for me, for I can't drink much of anything else."

"Aye; what should we do without water," said Silas taking a deep draught, "when you come to think how it comes into all the things that keep life together?"

"Oh, it's wonderful useful," replied Allan, "maybe the most useful thing in life."

"As to that," said Silas, "we couldn't live well without it. Air, good fresh air, is the thing we couldn't by any means do without."

"And for that," said Allan, "you'll never have finer than this as blows over the common I take it, it's worth ten years of life to be in good air."

"You are right there," said Silas, "and I should say you're a proof of it; you look as firm as a rock, and as red as a rose."

"Not amiss," said Allen; "never knew much about sickness."

"And yet you've lived many years," said Silas.

"Just up to my three score and ten," answered Allan, nodding.

Silas began to write in his book.

"What are you putting down?" asked Allan.

"Your name for five shillings," said Silas, didn't you say that I should have it, if I could prove that you had things more than you want that you neither work for nor pay for?"

"Yes, but you've never begun to do that yet," said Allan.

"What do you pay for air?" asked Silas.

"Pooh! nonsense!" said Allen.

"For water?" said Silas.

"Pooh!" said Allan again.

"For health, and having been brought through threescore years and ten?" continued Silas.

"Oh, as to them—of course we never count up the things that God gives us," said Allan; "I wasn't thinking of them."

"No, friend: few people do think of them," said Silas. "The best blessings, I mean of those belonging to this life, are such as cannot be bought with silver or gold; and they are freely given to the rich and poor, without any difference—yes, and more than they want—and are taken as matters of course without any praise or thanks to the Giver. Come, now I have shown you that you don't pay for the things that you couldn't do without, and I could tell you of many more—can't you find it in your heart to give something to give poor sinners, young and old, a knowledge of the better blessing of salvation through Jesus Christ? Surely such a thank-offering would be but becoming."

"Well, said Allan, putting his hand in his pocket, "I'm not against giving you a trifle, but I didn't know you was going to talk that way when I said about five shillings."

WHY CHARLIE DID NOT GO TO THE THEATRE OR OPERA.

Charlie A—— is about sixteen years of age. His parents are considered rich. He lives in a handsome house, beautifully furnished. He has attended the best schools, and has every opportunity for improvement and enjoyment that the beloved son of wealthy parents could desire. Charlie is a real christian. He loves to pray. He has been received into the church as a member, and reads carefully the Bible to learn how a young christian ought to live. He is really a beautiful example in his daily life for older persons.

This does not make Charlie always sober, and an unpleasant companion for his young friends. Everybody seems to love him. He is anxious to make all around him happy. He is kind to his brothers and sisters. He is full of innocent fun. He enjoys a good round laugh as well as any little gentleman that I know. But he is as true to his conscience and to the Bible as the needle in the compass is to the North Pole.

In a large company of his young friends, collected one evening at the residence of a gentleman of wealth, a young lady asked him "if he had been to hear Forrest." She referred to Edwin Forrest, the noted actor, at that time engaged at one of the most popular theatres of the city.

"O, no!" said Charlie.

"What! have not heard Forrest?"

"No, never."

"Everybody hears him!"

"I have not."

"Why have you not heard him?"

"I do not attend the theatre."

The buzz of conversation ceased around the young lady and Charlie. They were anxious to hear how he would come out of the discussion. They were all his companions, and very fashionable young people, attended the same church many of them, and it was quite a trying place for the young protestant against the theatre. But Charlie stood his ground without flinching or blushing. He had a reason for his course which he was perfectly willing to give.

"You attend the opera sometimes, do you not?" his elegantly dressed and beautiful questioner continued.

"Never!" was the unhesitating answer.

"What objection have you to going? Church members go," continued the young lady, determined not to give over her catechism until she had drawn Charlie into close quarters.

Now Charlie might have very naturally and properly answered, "My parents do not approve of my going" as a young person would, if he had no other reason to offer. But Charlie did his own thinking, and worked out the conclusion in his own mind from what he had seen with his own eyes. He might have said that the influence of such places was any thing but good; that many young persons were ruined by them; that very vile persons, as well as those that were respectable, attended them; that the character of play-actors was said to be very bad; that many of the most popular plays and operas were decidedly immoral; all this he might have said, but he had not been over this in his mind. But he did say this, and some older persons heard him, and were struck with his answer:

"I have noticed this," said Charlie, "that the best persons I know—the truest christians—those that are doing the most good and are the most active in the religious services—never attended such places. I have also noticed that those that do go are not found laboring in the Sunday School, and ready for every good work. This is the reason why I have preferred not to attend the theatre and opera."

It was simply and honestly spoken, and there was not a word to be said in opposition to it. There was not one, even of that gay young company, but knew this to be true. And there was not one of them that did not respect the manly stand taken by Charlie, and approve his decision in their hearts, although few of them might have the courage or piety to follow his example.

It has never been written that one person has been made more generous, more truthful, more beloved of God and man, by attending these places of amusement; but it has been recorded that hundreds have fallen into habits of dishonesty, prodigality and intemperance by yielding to the seductive influences of the theatre. One may be equally as cheerful, as eloquent of speech, as fond of music, certainly as lovely and pious, without ever entering these places of amusement, which good men, from the beginning of them, have looked upon as only hurtful.—Zion's Herald.

A PLACE TO PRAY IN.

"Mother," said a good boy, the night before going away, "mother, the worst of leaving home is, I am afraid I shall not find a place to pray in."

"I can always find a place to pray when I have a mind to pray," said a man-of-war's man. "I can commune with God leaning over the breech of a gun, though fifty men were walking the deck at the same time.

"And I," said another, "can crawl out on the fore-chains, and there I can pray undisturbed."

"Ah!" said another sailor, "when the Spirit of God got hold of me, and showed me my sins, I was miserable indeed. I looked into my Bible, and the more I read, the more it condemned me. Everything in it seemed against me. So it went on nearly two weeks, till one day I was sitting aft on the hatch, strapping a block. I thought my heart would break. I was afraid I should become discouraged, and begin to swear again; yet it did appear of no use to try. Then I thought I would make one more effort to get pardon. I threw down the block and strap, and started aloft for the main topsail-yard, and I leaned over the yard and prayed, 'O Lord, if there is mercy for a poor sinner, let me have it now, here on this top-sail-yard, before I go down on deck. Thou art able: O come!' Just at that moment when I felt, 'I can do nothing; O God, help me!' then the answer came; light broke on my soul, and I knew that God is love. And I have never since wanted a closet in which to call upon my God."

So, children, in this duty, as well as in almost everything else, "where there is a will there is a way." Even under the most unfavorable circumstances, you can still find some quiet spot to kneel down by yourself and pray to your heavenly Father and divine Redeemer. How often you want to whisper something into your mother's ear that others shall not know; how often you desire to say something to father alone; and much more will it be sweet and precious to have no ear but that of Jesus to listen to your humble prayers.

HOW OTHERS SEE US.

Did you know that we talked by signs? that others could read our feelings, even though we do not utter a word? Our eyes and face are great tell-tales.

"They tell if we are happy,
They tell if we are sad,
They tell if we are good,
They tell if we are bad."

Should we not, then, try to be pleasant and kind? If we are cross, fretful, peevish, lazy, unkind, disobedient or disrespectful, something in our face or manner will tell of us. Then who will love us? and how can we be happy if there is none to love us? If we want to appear good and loving, we must pray to God to give us a good and kind heart, and we must try and live every day just as the Holy Bible tells us.

WAITING FOR THE SAVIOR.

AIR.—"We are waiting by the river."

We are sailing on Time's ocean,
'Mid the storms' and tempests' crash;
We can hear the wild commotion,
Where the waves in fury dash.

CHORUS.—We are looking for the Savior,
We are waiting day by day
For the resurrection morning;
Blessed Jesus! come, we pray.

How the storms have beat and thundered
For a thousand years and more;
How we've longed, and hoped, and wondered
When we'd reach the other shore.

How we've toiled, so faint and weary,
'Mid the long, long gloomy night;
Oh! it is so dark and dreary,
Scarce a star to give us light.

Soon, oh, soon the light that glimmers
Out upon the ocean's crest,
Will be brighter still and nearer,—
Just beyond it is our rest.

Though so faintly it is beaming,
How it lightens up the gloom!
O'er the rolling billows streaming,
Just beyond it is our home.

We are drawing nigh the harbor,
Where we sweetly shall repose;
We shall rest within the arbor,
Where the vine and fig-tree grows.

We can almost hear the singing
From the bright seraphic throng;
Sweet, oh! sweet these notes are ringing,
How we long to join the song.

Come, oh! come, thou lovely morning;
King of glory! come and reign;
We are waiting, hoping, longing,
Come, dear Jesus! come again!

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

EDITOR OF THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

Dear Brother:—In contemplating an event of such transcendent importance as the downfall of Popery, and in watching the process of dissolution, standing in spirit almost at the bedside of the decrepid and dying giant, we scrutinize with eagle intentness the word of God, to see and know, if possible, what shall be the immediate sequel of the overthrow. What is the next vision in apocalyptic mysteries? Certainly, from the best evidence in the prophetic scriptures, we find on the downfall of the apostasy—the huge and hideous counterfeit of Satan, the next event is the advent of the Son of God, and the inauguration of his kingdom. Nay, it is the advance of Jesus in person and in power to this planet that consummates the destruction.

But yet, is there not for a moment, as it were, a modified development of this colossal scourge, just before its utter abatement and extinction? Is there not a short and sharp and terrible reproduction of the man of sin, before the final thunderbolt is launched that dooms every vestige of the apostasy to perdition? As the figurative Antichrist has tyrannized for 1260 years, shall we not have reenacted a brief and fearful despotism of a personal Antichrist for 1260 days? And as the proud and pestilent sway of popery for 42 months of years began with Boniface III., may we not justly expect a sort of concentrated and intense fac simile of the past for 42 months of days, beginning and ending with Bonaparte III.? There is surely a likeness of names between Boniface and Bonaparte.

Without entering into a full examination of the scriptural evidences of the correctness of this position, and showing the exceeding probability of this succession and transformation, let us not fail to make the attitude and policy of the man, who is foremost monarch of earth at the accomplishment of the prophetic period, fixed by ordination of the Almighty as the term of the duration of the apostasy. Well may we follow with unrelaxing zeal and keenness of observation his adroit and daring operations, so far as cognizable, under the veil of a profound secrecy and awful dissimulation. A monarch whose military power is unrivalled, whose political influence is preponderating, whose ambition is boundless, and whose undertakings seem invariably successful, the imperial head of a continent, and having in a certain sense the fate of the Papacy in his hand,—such appears to be the present Emperor of the French. He has upheld the Papal abomination with his military arm. He now deliberately withdraws his support, and says to the rejected and helpless son of Boniface, "Provide for yourself." And this when there are agitations and dangers on every hand, which threaten momentarily to overwhelm this apparently last of a ghostly ecclesiastical line.

Napoleon then clearly stands in a critical place. His is no idle sinecure. He must either greatly rise or greatly fall. Either the Romish Colossus of the ages must be carefully made harmless by a solid compact of civil powers, or, thwarted and enraged, it may in its dying throes strike fearfully at the real or imagined authors of its downfall. Or yet again, propitiated and transformed, it may probably give the powerful aid of a renovated life and energy to the modern re-modifier of European geography, as well as ecclesiastical politics.

Now let us glance at a few evidences of the probably destined manifestation of a personal antichrist. "This is the antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son," says John. But popery, with all its daring and wicked depreciation of the attributes and glory of God, has not refused a recognition of the deity of God or of Christ. Hence infidelity must bring forth its instrument and impersonation, while Satan, foiled or exhausted in the decrepitudes and death of the papacy, puts a desperate energy and inspiration into his final and infidel king, and this—this is a personal antichrist. Spiritualism, deadly, and dead-set in enmity against the name and word and power of God, opens its infernal broadway of sorceries, by which Beelzebub breathes up the subtle and malignant energy of the hell in himself and his fallen legions. Spiritualism, then, is infidelity, and its crowned political head and imperial human god, is the embodiment and executive both of itself and Satan, who is a liar from the beginning, and as much an infidel as a devil can be.

But again. The number of the wild beast is the number of a man. And allowing for a minor accordance with the prescription of prophecy in the Papacy, yet the very words, Lateinos and Apostates, which are applied to the Romish church as numerical fulfillments of 666, with not a little propriety may also apply to an antichristian prince, who rises on the ruin or subordination of an apostate church, and proposes the universal unity and re-invigoration of the Latin race. But if there be a king, a man, a head of nations and princes, a master of Rome, an adroit manager, enthroned and powerful in Popery's extreme old age, and who takes away himself the crutch on which the Papacy has been leaning for life, while that staff is none other than his own army, or a detachment of it,—if there be such a man, and six times in three languages his name variously and truly evolves the significant prophetic number, then, if we are candid, if we are honest, if we are rational, we shall not only credit the bi-prefiguration of a personal antichrist, but we shall think the evidence very direct and impressive that he lives, and is without error or difficulty able to be identified.

Now this power, whether a system or a person, whether ecclesiastical or civil, or ecclesiastico-civil; whether a prince or a line of princes, or the last of what you will, this anomos or wicked one, this man of sin, must perish. For "him the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming." Or if we correctly interpret, Jesus will overthrow this enemy by the energy and execution of his word, by the fulfillment of his prophecy, by the enforcing of his decree, and also by the appearing or bright splendor of his presence. Thus, when the prophetic period expires the sentence will be executed. The two points denoted are the certainty and the manner of the destruction. For the spirit of God's word is infallible truth, and the accomplishment of it is by the personal coming and presence of Jesus, for thus doth parousia signify; viz., both coming and presence.

We reach, then, this grand consummation of the ages, duly and truly and surely, in the irreversible purpose of God,—the destruction of antichrist by the coming of the Son of man. And it is worth while to inquire if the two antichrists, that is, figurative and personal, are not overthrown at two stages of the advent. So plain and various appear to be the intimations of two such closely successive acts in the advent, that we are brought to contemplate the revelation of the Son of God as in the most startling proximity to our times. If indeed Jesus shall overwhelm the personal man of sin with the burning effulgence of his glory, will he not also destroy the figurative man of sin with a sudden and tremendous stroke of his power? And when he shall send forth electric and vindictive fire to devour the city and site of Rome—the apocalyptic Babylon, with all its pomp, its pride, its antiquities of wickedness, vestments, altars, idols and tinsel abominations, will not our Lord then also send forth his voice into every region and recess of earth to rouse and raise the dead, and his angels to gather up his elect into the air? It is worthy of our most humble and industrious inquiry, if Babylon's doom be not already just about immediately to be accomplished, and if synchronous with that overthrow be not the translation of all ready and waiting saints; while after the ablation of the watchful children of God, Antichrist personal goes on quickly to his full development, and finishes his career amid judgments and convulsions, which are all ended in the tremendous epiphany of Jesus. At all events, after the fall of Babylon, we observe the appalling sequel: "It is become the habitation of devils and the hold of every foul spirit,"—as if Spiritualism with all its vile agents and devices were then dominant and raging, while Satan inflamed puts every possible energy into every desperate instrumentality to stay the wreck of his ruined fortunes, and evade the doom of eternal vengeance.

How very solemn and pregnant with meaning is the announced determination of the disconcerted Pope to summon a grand assemblage of Catholics in Rome from every part of the globe, ostensibly to celebrate the 18th centennial of Peter's martyrdom in A. D. 66, but in reality, perhaps, to deliberate in regard to some possible way of extrication from the distressing dilemma, some deliverance in the terrible crisis of the time. Should such a council be convened, who can tell if the Lord shall call for the pent-up energy of subterranean fire, and the arrowy treasures of his electricity, to converge on the seat of Satan, enveloping the host of Rome's potentates and upholders in one remediless and fiery ruin! And even then it is not impossible but some plenipotentiary of Beelzebub may take the headship of apostate church and earth, for a short and vain conflict with the King of heaven, while Satan makes the burning Rome his last and angry rendezvous.

C. COLGROVE.

THE EVIL ROOT.

Away back in the beginning, when God had created the heavens and the earth, he planted a garden eastward in Eden. In this garden made he to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

In this beautiful retreat God placed our first parents, with free permission to eat of every tree of the garden, with the exception of the last named: concerning this tree God said, "Thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof THOU SHALT SURELY DIE!"

Now there arose in this garden an opposing spirit which, through the medium of a serpent, questioned Eve in reference to the forbidden fruit, and assured her that the eating of it would greatly increase her knowledge; and in reference to God's threatened penalty, declared:—"Thou shalt not surely die!" This assurance we shall call The Evil Root! and endeavor to shew, briefly, the tree that has matured from that root. From it sprang a thrifty stem which has aspired to the very heavens: it is, the dogma of man's INHERENT IMMORTALITY!

Immortality is defined to be "the quality of never ceasing to exist; exemption from death"; and, admitting the statement of the serpent to be correct, then is this stem the natural and legitimate offspring of that evil root; and there being, in the Bible, no other intimation of man's inherent immortality, we can trace its paternity no further.

From this stem, or trunk, as we will now call it, depend three principal branches; the first of which we name The Separate Existence, after death, of the immortal part in a state of happiness or misery forever! This branch grows naturally enough out of such a trunk; for, if man is possessed of the quality of never ceasing to exist, it is very evident, from the Scriptures, that his existence, in a state of reward or punishment, must run parallel with that of the Creator.

The second branch of this trunk is the dogma of Purgatory—a kind of half-way place between heaven and hell, where the immortal part expiates in liquid flames and unutterable torments the sins which, from any cause, were not sufficiently atoned for in the mortal state!

The third branch, out of this trunk, is the doctrine of Eternal Torments in hell; which are thus concisely, graphically, and horribly described by one who knows—it may be presumed, as he has staked the veracity of God and his word on the correctness of his description.

Hear him:—"When thou diest, thy soul will be tormented alone—that will be a hell for it—but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells: body and soul shall be together, each brimfull of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood, and thy body, from head to foot, suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured: but more; thy head, tormented with

'Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts:'

Thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of Hell's unutterable lament; thy soul for ever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again I say, they are no fictions, and, as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true, and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so."—Spurgeon.

Out of these great branches grow some minor ones; at first, Prayers to the Dead; who are supposed to be alive and in the presence of God, the Virgin Mary, and her Son Jesus Christ; and with whom, it is supposed, their prayers will prevail to bring down blessings on their friends on earth, and enlargement to those in purgatory. Now, if the root is holy, so may be this branch also; for if we seek for, and have confidence in, the prayers of the saints while on earth, how much more when in the presence of Him from whom we expect all blessings? If in an imperfect state their prayers prevailed with God, how much more when equal with the angels!

2. Prayers for the dead. These are to be offered by the priest, who must be paid according to the greater or less difficulty he may experience in getting them out of their purgatorial pains! which being accomplished, they join the blood-washed company in heaven, completely purified from all sin—not by the blood of Christ, but by the fires of purgatory! This has proved to be a wonderfully productive branch in the hands of those who teach and practice such things; for none would be willing that his parent, brother or sister, or any other near friend, should stay one hour in that horrible place, when a few dollars paid those holy priests would bring them out! This branch, like the others, owes its existence to the evil root, and has proved itself worthy of its high paternity.

3. Works of SUPEREROGATION, which are to be turned to the credit side of the account of those persons suffering the pains of purgatory for sins uncanceled. This is a fine, luxuriant branch out of the old root, and shades, in a very effective manner, the atonement of Christ,—a doctrine cherished by the apostles in their lives, and defended in their deaths.

The FRUITS of this tree are abundant;—among them we notice Universalism; of which many good men have partaken, because unable to reconcile the dogma of individual election and reprobation, coupled with that of eternal torment, with the character of God as revealed in his word. Of two errors, they chose the least.

Another prominent and pernicious fruit is the so called spiritual mode of interpreting the Scriptures; by which they are made to mean anything, or nothing, as may best suit the interpreter, or meet the supposed wants of his hearers. Nothing could be more natural than the production of this fruit from such a root. In the root is found a flat contradiction of the declaration of Jehovah; and in the fruit, the doctrine that God says one thing and means just the reverse;—both root and branch contain the doctrine of devils.

Closely connected with the above, we find Swedenborgianism, which, with its subtle nothingness, furnishes about as much foundation for the hope of the saints, as would a fog bank to the shipwrecked mariner.

Next comes Transcendentalism, with its metaphysical subtleties, exceeding in nothingness its predecessor, and leading thousands on thousands to destruction with its uncertain glare.

Lastly, borne up and sustained by the three last named, comes modern Spiritualism, or, more properly, Demonism,—the rotten ripe fruit of the whole concern,—the last manifestation of the evil spirit; who, from having a serpent, sorcerers, and witches for MEDIUMS, has risen to command the services of fair ladies and intelligent gentlemen; who esteem it an honor to dance attendance on this father of lies, and prostitute their best powers to his service.

This manifestation is calculated to destroy the last remaining vestige of confidence in the word of God,—a manifestation that can boast as its fruits table-rapping, table-tipping, free-love, rank infidelity, and a bold denial of the Lord that bought them. These are not all the fruits. Its advocates can do cures, and work miracles, as well as the magicians of the days of Moses, or Simon Magus! This manifestation is destined to fill up the cup of iniquities. This is the "strong delusion" predicted by the apostle, and will come upon those who refuse to obey our Lord Jesus Christ. Their triumph will be short. The Avenger is at hand. The tree of evil is soon to be plucked up, and burned up, root and branch! Then will errors, absurdities, and abominations share in the utter extirpation of evil from off the earth. So let it be.—Letter Tract, Box 4, Presque Isle, Me.

For the World's Crisis.

FAITH—ITS ORIGIN AND NATURE.

Faith,—the faith of God's elect,—has its origin in man's religious capacity and in "the gospel of God."

"Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10: 17. On this principle Abel was enabled to lay hold of the divine promise, and offer his "more acceptable sacrifice." He accepted "the word of God" as truth, and rested in it, as his only and all sufficient ground of hope.

Abraham was told to count the stars, if able; and when he found them twinkling and seeming to multiply (as they do to our sight, and we presume they did to his), God said, "so shall thy seed be"—that is, a countless number. "Abraham believed God." That was all. His faith was his acceptance of God's promise, his resting in it, and his venturing his all upon it as unfailing truth. Though all outward appearances seemed against it, yet "against hope he believed in hope"—against natural causes to the contrary, he trusted in the promise as the all-sufficient foundation for his hope, and hence "it was accounted to him for righteousness." Rom. 4; Gal. 3; Gen. 11 and 15.

This statement of the origin of "the faith once delivered to the saints," simplifies the whole subject of faith. But many in their darkness of unbelief, speak of faith as a diversified, dreamy, and undefined religious exercise. To such "faith" may be like an imagined ghost in twilight—anything, or nothing, that may conform to the floating current of popular feeling, that may leave them in whatever ecclesiastical eddy into which they happen to be borne.

It is our happiness to know its origin—as a belief in the plain, unvarnished "word of promise."

The nature of faith, like its origin, is easily stated, so as to be apprehended by the most humble minded of men. See Heb. 11: 1–6.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for." Faith accepts "the promise" instead of the substance, till the time of its fulfillment. Just as we accept a note—a "promise to pay"—till the note becomes due.

Faith is "the evidence of things not seen." Had Abraham been asked for "evidence" that he should ever "inherit the promised land," he would point to "the promise of God," and then tell of his unfaltering "faith" in it. He could say God made the world, and man to govern and enjoy it, as his creature—his child. He could say, "God quickeneth the dead, and calleth things that be not as though they were." Rom. 4: 12–16. Hence he could say my "faith" is my "evidence" or demonstration, that the promise of God shall be fulfilled.

Such is faith in Abraham, its pre-eminent patriarchal example. Such is its origin and such its nature.

This (or some analogous) statement would be taken by all Protestants and by all Papists, allowing the application to stop as far back "in the way" as they themselves do, and hence we may conclude that it accords with all right reason among all intelligent men.

Those who believe in the coming of Christ "the second time unto salvation," as taught in Heb. 9: 28, John 14: 1–3, like no other or better ground for the foundation of their faith.

Those who believe in baptism (as taught in "the word of God," having a "faith" that comes only "by hearing" God), feel firm as if standing on an everlasting rock.

And those who take "the gospel" in its three-fold elements—given in my last—feel just so "settled and grounded in the truth." First, we have "the promise" through near two thousand years. Second, we have "the seed"—Christ and his body, the church." Third, this is the agency to come into position—"possess the gate of thine enemies," and so "bless all the nations of the earth." Amen. This is just good enough for God to give promise of and to fulfill.

For the World's Crisis.

THE 1260 DAYS AND 1866.

Where do they begin? and where do they end? Since some expositors of prophecy have claimed that they began A. D. 606, and are to end in 1866, it may be well to assign our reasons for dissenting from this position.

1st. The "time, times, and dividing of time," or 1260 days, measure the bloody supremacy of the Papal horn. If this Papal horn did not rise till A. D. 606, as some expositors claim, the 1260 days may begin at that epoch; but is it true that this persecuting horn did not rise till 606? No; for in the 7th chapter of Daniel we are expressly informed that this horn should "rise after" the ten Roman horns, and early enough to "pluck up three" of the ten; and it is an authenticated fact that this work of plucking up those three horns began as early as A. D. 534, and all three were plucked up long before 606 arrived; now since the Papal horn was to do this work, its rise must precede the accomplishment of the work; for "HE shall subdue three kings," and this he could not do seventy years before coming into existence. Thus it must be evident that the Papal horn, which should persecute the saints for 1260 years, had its rise not in 606, but prior to 534.

2nd. This measurement of 1260 days not only spans the time that the symbolic city (the church) should be "trodden under foot," but also the time that the two symbolic witnesses should be clad in symbolic sackcloth (Rev. 11: 2, 3), and terminates, not at the Lord's coming, but at the time these symbolic witnesses should be slain (ver. 7), after which they were to remain dead "three days and a half,"—a positive proof that the 1260 days do not mark the time of the Lord's coming, for God's witnesses (whether literal or symbolic witnesses) are not to remain dead, and under the scoffing triumph of their enemies three and a half symbolic or literal days after the Lord comes.

If the 1260 days begin in 606, and mark the time of the Lord's coming, they must be symbolic days, and consequently the subsequent "three and a half days" must also be symbolic time—three and a half years.—Therefore, if the 1260 days end in 1866, there must be subsequent to their ending three and a half years more, during which the two witnesses must remain dead, and their enemies "rejoice over them and make merry;" and all this precedes "the third woe," and the sounding of "the seventh angel," and "the time of the dead that they should be judged" (ver. 18), and consequently prior to the Lord's coming, for Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing." So the 1260 prophetic days cannot be made to reach to the coming of Lord, even if it were true that they began A. D. 606; for if the 1260 days are symbolic days, the three and a half days must also be prophetic; and subsequent to these three and a half years comes "the time of the dead that they should be judged," which judgment scene is AT Christ's appearing.

If the "three and a half days" are not prophetic days, but literal time, then we should be driven to the conclusion, in following out the same principle, that the 1260 days were also literal days; and likewise that the "city," the "witnesses," the "olive trees," and the "candlesticks," are all literalities.

Let us just glance at the "two witnesses," in the light of literality, two literal men, and see what shocking absurdities we shall be compelled to in attempting to literalize God's symbolic arrangement. Here is the picture fairly drawn: For 1260 literal days, two literal men shall be literally "clothed" in literal "sackcloth;" literal "fire proceedeth out of their mouth," which literally "devoureth their enemies," and if any man will literally "hurt them," he must literally "in this manner be killed;" they literally have power to shut heaven," literally "have power over waters to turn them to blood," and finally a literal "beast" out of the literal bottomless pit," shall literally "make war on them," and literally "their dead bodies" shall lie above ground, "unburied," and literal "people and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and a half," and literally "rejoice over them and make merry," and literally "after three days and a half" they came to life again, and literally "ascended up into heaven."

Just think of it. Two literal men walking around with a stream of literal fire blazing out of their mouths, which they breath on to their enemies, and thus literally "devour" and "kill" them. If the time is literal, the witnesses are literal men; if the witnesses are literal men, the fire out of their mouths is literal fire. What two mortal men could have a stream of fire blazing out of their mouths for 1260 days, and not get burned to death? I say "mortal" men, for they were finally "killed" by a "beast." And as literal fire must have fuel to feed on, or else be extinguished, these two literal men must have a literal oven inside, in which to deposit fuel to keep up the flame, which must not be a feeble one, but strong enough to "kill" a man and "devour" him whenever it comes in contact with him.

There are those who claim that Enoch and Elijah are to be these two witnesses. But who, after mature reflection, can drink down the revolting idea that these two men are to march around on earth 1260 literal days, vomiting out streams of literal fire, literally killing men, and finally (although they had been "translated that they should not see death") be killed themselves by a literal "beast"?

If the 1260 days are symbolic days, so are the three and a half days, and so are the "witnesses" symbolic, and the "fire," etc., etc. God's two symbolic witnesses—the two testaments—were slain in the Reign of Terror, just 1260 symbolic days after A. D. 533 (where the saints were delivered into the hands of the Papal horn), by the symbolic beast, in 1793; and these symbolic witnesses remained in their slaughtered condition three and a half years, from 1793 to 1797. Thus a stake is driven in 534, marking the beginning of this measurement, and another in 1793 and 1797, marking its end. Only seventy-five years after the close of the 1260 are required to complete the 1335, which, with this arrangement, cannot be extended beyond 1868.

Thus we have clearly shown that A. D. 606 is not the starting point of the 1260 days, and that if it were, the termination of this measurement would not mark the time of Christ's coming, seeing "three and a half (symbolic) days" must succeed this measurement, before the time arrives for the dead to "be judged," which will be at Christ's appearing. I am bold to say that the argument for 1866, founded on the ending of the 1260 days at that epoch, is decidedly defective. Temporal millennium advocates err in time as well as in the event.

PERFECT LOVE.

In answer to some inquiries made by one in the Crisis in relation to justification, sanctification, perfection and perfect love, I will give my opinion.

Justification consists in the remission of sins and free pardon for all past offences. Sanctification is being made holy—set apart to God. I believe a person may be sanctified at the moment of his conversion. Perfection and perfect love are the highest degrees of holiness, when God is loved with all the heart and perfectly obeyed.

We are sanctified through (or in) the truth, which means that the word of God is to be our guide, attended by the Holy Spirit. He is made unto us "wisdom, justification, and sanctification." "As ye have received the Lord Jesus, so walk in him."

I understand that we are made free from sin at the period of conversion, but unbelief soon leads one to doubt the power of God's grace, and then follows a relapse into sin. I cannot see how one can commune with God while sin remains in the heart. Nor do I believe there can be real spiritual communion until there is an entire yielding to God. It is leaving one's first love and the Savior, to follow a wicked world, which is doing so much to enfeeble the church.

Oh! how many precious souls are going down to ruin because of the example of professed christians. Preach a full salvation, both by precept and example. May the Lord help us to get out of the way of others, and be made perfect in love. When God forgives sin, he does no imperfect work. Follow on to know the Lord, and be careful lest the first love be lost. We may do a great many things out of duty, when our love towards Jesus has grown cold. He that loveth God is perfected in him.

Perilous times have come, when we need to live very near to God, or else be borne down with the vain world, who are seeking pleasure rather than God. Do not tell the young convert that soon he will lose his enjoyment in religion, and if he loses his first love that he must not be disappointed. Tell him to love the Lord with all his heart, and never to doubt. We have got to watch and pray constantly, trusting in him, if we would always feel his love within us. Soon Jesus will come to earth and redeem his people.

Multitudes are perishing in their sins, and what are we doing to save them? O Lord, help me to lead sinners to Christ. Save the young and blooming youth, who are strangers to thy love. Brethren and sisters, let us be wholly consecrated to the Lord.

"RESIST THE DEVIL."

According to the admission of the familiar spirits themselves, they are trying to get as many as possible under their influence. They want complete control of the whole person. But it is somewhat strange that they should acknowledge the fact that they have no right to this control. They say that they usually ask leave to use the body of the person of which they wish to make a medium; and in most cases this leave is granted. Then the spirit proceeds to "mesmerize" the victim, and soon he is "led captive" by Satan "at his will."

But we are told that if we "resist the devil he will flee from" us. However great the original power of the demons may have been, they are held in check now by a higher Power. The weakest of the saints may drive them, and cause them to flee, by courageous resistance.

Is there any one who reads this annoyed by the devil? I have found the Lord ready and willing to drive him away when I cried to Him for help. In old times I used to hear these words sung:

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

"Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." If he comes to you and asks permission to "mesmerize" you, resist him. Give him such an emphatic denial that he will not have any encouragement to repeat the question. You need not be afraid of displeasing him. Let him rage; he cannot harm you if you resist him "steadfast in the faith."

This satanic mesmerism will probably seem like a new idea to some. Is this what ails the nominal church? Are the learned leaders "mesmerized"? We have heard that many of them seemed to be asleep, but the cause of their slumber was not apparent.

Brethren, "be sober, be vigilant," lest ye also fall into this snare of the devil. Resist, even "unto blood," "striving against sin." Soon the "accuser of our brethren" will be cast into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Let us resist him in earnest until that glorious day arrives.

COME UNTO ME.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—MATT. 11: 28.

Whose voice is this that falls so sweetly on the ear? who is this that feels so much interest in our lot? We have labored long and been heavy laden, but none have offered their assistance. Many have seen us stooping to earth beneath the burden of life, but they have not said,—We will help thee, lean upon us. We have had to bear our sorrow all alone,—we have had to suffer without a single face looking into ours with compassion. None have cared for us. All have passed by. Then we have said,—"No sorrow is like to mine;" yet no voice of pity has reached us. We have stretched forth our hand, but none have taken it in their own; we have called, but none have answered.

Whose voice, then, is this that now falls on our ear? Come unto me, he says. Are ye bowed beneath the burden of grief? Come unto me. Are ye stooping to earth beneath the weight of sin? are ye tossed about and disquieted by reason of the cares of earth? Come unto me and I will give you rest. Cast your trouble and your grief at the foot of my cross. I care for you, but others do not. I behold your tear-stained cheek, though others cannot. I see you sinking beneath the wave of affliction, and even now I come to you upon the waters. Come unto me, ye tempest-tossed soul, and the wind and the waves shall be rebuked. They shall no longer go over thy soul, nor bury thee within their dark depths. I have suffered, you say; so have I, your Master. My cheeks have been stained with tears; so have mine. I have trembled beneath the burden of life; so has your Savior. From men has come no compassion; from them no hope has reached my sorrowing spirit. So was it with me, thy Master.

Hast thou forgotten Gethsemane and Calvary? the garden and the cross? Come, then, unto me. Enjoy my smile and receive my compassion. I have bought thee with a price. I have redeemed thee. Thou art mine.

Come, then, unto me, and I will give thee rest; acknowledge thy weakness, that thou mayst have my holiness; but feel thy need of me, and I am at thy side; seek me, and ye shall find me; call, and I will answer thee. Thou hast tried the world and found it empty. Come unto me, that your joy may be full.

Lone pilgrim to the Celestial City, how often have thine eyelids dropped with heavy tears because thou couldst not see thy Father's house away in the blue distance. Yet, when the mansions of the blest are no longer visible, think not that heaven is lost. It is only veiled by thick exhalations, rising cloud-like from the earth. There is a sun whose brightness can dispel them all. Then faint not in the way, but press on; and even from out the mist and the dimness, the gates of pearl shall suddenly open to receive thee, and the wanderer will be at HOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WHIPPING "OLD GREY."

Some time since I saw an anecdote in the Crisis, in substance stating that there was a team of which only one of the horses was good for any thing to pull, and that was "Old Grey." So when the driver wanted the load to move, he would whip Old Grey, as it would do no good to whip any of the rest, for they would not pull any way.

Now I have thought of this as I have read the various calls for aid in the Crisis of late. I have thought if there were any "Old Greys" in the Advent ranks, who are always ready to pull, even at great sacrifice, they will take hold with all their might; while the balky ones, fat and lazy, will set back in the harness as hard as ever. I find in my experience that it is but of little use to preach liberality to a greedy, stingy soul.

My father had a balky horse that would stand perfectly quiet under the heaviest blows from the lash, and even turn his head and look around to see what the driver was doing, as if he would say,—"I wonder he don't do something to make the load move."

So a great many will read the calls, and appeals, and pleadings for aid, and then look next week to see who has done any thing, never thinking they are meant or hit at all. But "Old Grey" will make a greater effort than ever to move the load.

I am heartily sick of seeing this unequal pulling, but I find it more or less everywhere.

ENEMIES.—Every child of God will have his enemies. He is in imminent danger of whom everybody speaks well. "But I say unto you, love your enemies." Our conduct towards them must be such as is prompted by love. A spirit of forbearance should characterize every follower of Jesus. A providential opportunity to injure them is a providential opportunity to do them good. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

THE PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We have received over five hundred new subscribers since the 1st of December, a large proportion of which are due to the offer of premiums. Many have received their premiums already, and others are still working for the larger ones, with a good prospect of success.

A prejudice seems to exist against this way of getting subscribers, though for what good reason it is difficult to conceive. The whole thing is simply an offer of due compensation for services rendered,—no more, and no less. Yes, it is more,—it is a work of benevolence; for it offers to the poor minister or Bible student an easy way of obtaining, by a little effort, and no expense, a valuable and indispensable book of reference for his library, or a sewing machine for his wife, or for some poor family whose scanty income is hardly adequate to meet their daily wants.

Yet a correspondent thinks "it looks worldly." We have done the same thing, only on a smaller scale, for years, and no one thought it worldly. Standing notices, under the heading, "A Liberal Offer," and under other headings, have appeared in the Crisis year after year, offering, in books and tracts, one third of the amount sent, and in some instances certain specified books, to every one who would send us three or more subscribers with the money for one year. Was that worldly, or wrong? If not, then it is not wrong to enlarge the offer, with greater liberality, to a Sewing Machine or a Dictionary. In principle, both are alike. They benefit all parties, without injuring either, or doing any hurt to public morals.

"But worldly papers use such means." Well, suppose they do. Worldly people wear clothes; but that don't make it wrong for Christians to wear them. The question is—Is the thing worldly or wrong in itself?

"But how can you afford to do this? and why don't you rather put the price of the Crisis down?"

The great cost of printing paper, and other expenses of publication, will not warrant any reduction of price at present. We can afford to offer these liberal premiums only in case that most of the subscribers thus obtained become permanent subscribers. If they do, we shall be gainers in the end, even though we were to suffer pecuniary loss at first.—But it is not pecuniary gain for the Crisis, either now or hereafter, that we seek. It is the enlargement of its usefulness, by the enlargement of its circulation, as a herald of the Lord's coming.

Our co-laborers in this good work, who are already doing what they can, will please bear in mind that the offer of premiums for new subscribers extends only to the 1st of June, and no longer.

THE SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

"A Webster's Dictionary is something that I very much want, and I should be glad if I could make up a list of ten subscribers, so as to obtain it. But those who sympathize with our views are so few here, that I shall be unable to get the number required. The five which I have sent are all I can get."

"With a large family to support, and no dependence but my needle, a Sewing Machine would be a great help to us; and if there were more of our faith in this place, or more who look upon it with favor, I should go to work with some hope of securing it. If the requisite number (32) were not so large, I think I could, as it is; but I must be content for the present, to go without what I so much need."

We have received a number of letters like the above, and to put the Sewing Machine and the Webster's Dictionary within the reach of all who are thus situated, we make the following offer:—

For every $5.00, with five new subscribers, and $2.50 from each for one year, one copy of Webster's ($12.00) Unabridged Dictionary.

For every $20.00 with sixteen new subscribers, and $2.50 from each for one year, one of Grover & Baker's ($55.00) Sewing Machines.

This offer, with the other, extends only till the 1st of June. All names for the Dictionaries or Machines must be sent in before that date.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

Valuable Premiums for New Subscribers!

SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a

Grover & Baker's

($55) SEWING MACHINE,

one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

Webster's ($12)

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of Cruden's Condensed Concordance.

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let us every one see what we can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

SHALL WE GO FORWARD?

We have received a pressing invitation to hold some meetings in Washington, D. C. The one who writes says there are two others there who are interested in the "blessed hope," but that all are poor, and unable to hire a hall, which would cost $20 a night, or $100 for a week. It is proposed that an admittance fee be taken at the door to pay expenses; but we feel anxious to give all a chance to hear the glad tidings.

We think something ought to be done in the Capitol of the nation by way of spreading the light on the great truths that sustain the "hope" we love so well. After praying about the matter, we think it is the will of the Lord that an effort be made in that city. If any wish to help pay for the hall for a week or more, they can send their offerings to the Crisis office at once for this purpose, and we will commence meetings immediately. The meetings should continue two or three weeks, if possible, and then we might hope to see a good church established. What shall we do? Shall the alarm be sounded in the heart of the nation? Let fervent prayer be offered that success may attend the effort.

It is our purpose now to begin meetings there within two or three weeks, if the way opens.

The one who writes from Washington, when closing, says:—"Brother, not in my name, but in behalf of perishing humanity, I ask you, Will you come? I shall await an answer most anxiously."

We will endeavor to come.

DISCUSSION AT CANTON.

Our discussion at Canton, Me., with Mr. Johnson, a Universalist minister, commenced at 1½ o'clock, Feb. 1st, and closed the next day about noon. We discussed the following question:—"Does the Bible teach the immortality of man?" Our discussion was at the Universalist meeting house, which was full of attentive listeners. Two chairmen were chosen—one believing with the affirmative, the other with the negative. We think it much better to have but one chairman.

Mr. Johnson insisted on having thirty minute speeches instead of twenty, in order that he might finish reading his written documents at his opening speech at each session. We think the shorter time is more interesting to the audience, and just as well for the speakers. He also requested the privilege of having the time extended beyond the half hour, in case he did not get through with his argument in thirty minutes. This favor was granted. His first and second opening speeches were an attempt to prove that there will be no resurrection of the dead bodies of men; and boldly affirmed that the Bible does not teach such a doctrine. His position was the same as is taught by the Spiritualists. We found the Bible was all against him; consequently his effort was a total failure.

The reader may inquire how he attempted to prove the immortality of man by denying the resurrection of the dead? It was on this wise: Men live hereafter, but there is no resurrection of the dead body, consequently man never dies. He admitted that Christ was raised from the dead, and also admitted that the Bible does not plainly teach the immortality of the soul.

His first speech was based on Acts 24: 15, which contradicted all he said on the subject. It was a saying of Paul in which he declares he had "hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

He endeavored to prove that the resurrection takes place when a man dies, and that then he goes to his reward. We remarked that if he would find one passage of Scripture which teaches that men go to their reward at death, we would yield the point. The next morning, (Friday, Feb. 2nd,) he opened the debate at 10 o'clock, by reading two passages concerning paradise, and then read about the thief on the cross, and said the debate was ended, as he had proved that men go their reward when they die. Having said this, he sat down some twenty minutes, or more, before his time expired. We rose to speak on the passage, and show that according to his view of it, it most plainly contradicted the Scriptures; when he at once objected to our saying a word, remarking the discussion was ended, as that passage proved that men go to their reward at death. We attempted to speak, and he interrupted by saying the discussion was ended.

The day before he had agreed to have two sessions, of two hours each, on this day (Friday.) As he objected very earnestly against our speaking, we inquired of the chairman, who should occupy the floor? As his thirty minutes were not expired, of course the chairman decided that the floor belonged to him if he wished to occupy it. But he refused, saying the discussion was ended. We arose again to speak on the passage he had introduced, for the purpose of showing that his application could not be sustained by the Scriptures; when he again insisted on our being silent, for the debate was closed. The chairmen were not agreed as to what step to take next. After some excitement and confusion in the audience, Mr. Johnson proposed to submit the question to the audience, to decide whether the passage concerning the thief on the cross did not prove that men go to their reward at death. Previous to this, he had stated that the audience agreed with him, excepting a few Adventists. We objected to putting the question to the house before we had an opportunity to say any thing on the passage, as it was improper to call on a jury to bring in a verdict before they heard the evidence on both sides. To this Mr. Johnson earnestly objected, and insisted that the question be put, without any remarks on our side. To this, one of the chairmen was much opposed; but the other one, who sympathised with Mr. J., did not know what to do. A motion was then made by Bro. Haggett to appoint a third chairman, in order that the question might be decided in some way. To this Mr. Johnson also objected. Then the chairman who was opposed to Mr. Johnson's course, proposed to resign; but Mr. J. would not agree to that. Finally, some one of Mr. J.'s friends moved that the question be decided by the audience, whether the passage in Luke 22: 43 porved that men go to their reward at death, and another seconded the motion. After the motion was made and seconded, Bro. Haggart rose to speak on the motion, before it was put to the house, but Mr. Johnson insisted that he should not speak, notwithstanding both of the chairmen decided that he was in order, and had a perfect right, or any other one, to discuss the motion before it was put to vote. At this point Mr. Johnson's friends began to cry,—"question," "question," in order that Bro. Haggett and others should not get a chance to speak on the impropriety of calling for a vote of the house, as to their view of the passage of scripture before we had an opportunity to say a word about it.

By this time there was considerable excitement, some crying one thing and some another, —some affirming, some contradicting. The second chairman, who favored Mr. Johnson, then rose and put the question as requested by Mr. Johnson, thus preventing all from speaking on the motion before they voted. A small majority voted that the passage proves that men go to their reward at death. Mr. Johnson then arose and declared the debate ended, and took his hat and started for the door in "Bull-Run" style. We stated that we had come from Boston to discuss the question, "Does the Bible teach the immortality of man?" the people had come to hear, some of them many miles, and we were ready to go on with the discussion. But Mr. J. started for the door, saying the discussion was ended, and the people did not want to hear any more.

We then remarked that as soon as the congregation was quiet, we would speak on the passage proposed by Mr. Johnson, relative to the thief on the cross. Mr. Johnson then stopped to say, that he did not think the Universalists would be willing that I should have the house. The house is occupied partly by the Universalists, and partly by the Baptists, the former claiming the first right. We were satisfied that the leading Universalists, who are characterized for their manly generosity, would not refuse us the use of the house, when they did not want it themselves; for they had previously expressed their willingness for us to hold meetings there. At this time a prominent citizen, and a gentlemanly friend of Mr. J., who was also himself a Universalist, said we were welcome to the use of the house. We then made an appointment to preach in the afternoon and evening and the next night. Upon this Mr. J. continued his march for the door, in company with some of his sympathizers, who seemed to be determined that we should not say any thing about the thief on the cross; but in a little time the audience were quiet and we went on with our remarks till about noon. Thus closed the discussion.

In the afternoon we had a most excellent meeting. A prominent Universalist who was present remarked that he thought the spirit of the devil was present in the forenoon, and the Spirit of the Lord in the afternoon.

We continued our meetings over the Lord's day, and had an interesting time. Brn. E. M. Haggett and J. Whitman were present to assist in the good work. We closed our meetings with an interesting communion season, when about forty gathered around the table of the Lord. Tears flowed freely from the dear friends of Jesus as they sat around the sacramental board.

We received very kind treatment from some of the most prominent persons who had been strong sympathizers of Mr. J., but who said they wished to see "fair play." We were much rejoiced at the results of our discussion, and the subsequent meetings in Canton. There is an open door for the welcome of truth and its supporters.

"THEY ARE WIDE OPEN."

The above is a heading in one of our exchanges, and relates to the flood-gates of crime at the present time. It is true there seems to be no restraint against deeds of wickedness. Laws and officers are trampled under foot by the lawless rabble; and professedly good men look on with astonishing indifference, and clear the track as they would for the express train on the railroad. The courage that characterizes a living faith is rarely seen; hence Satan's forces meet with but little opposition.

The writer of the article indicated by our heading says:—

"The flood-gates of vice and crime were never perhaps so widely opened before in this country. And, alas! how they are thronged! And by all classes of society—the old, the middle aged, the young. The sight is pitiable to behold; it is truly heart sickening.

Look at the crowd of reeling drunkards—an army of men little less than that which saved the Republic. Read the annals of crime of every possible description and of the deepest turpitude. Forgery, robbery and murder are the order of the day. The devil seems to be let loose, and hell to be mad to devour the sons of men."

Says the Chicago Journal: "The crime of crimes is on the increase. We could take from our exchanges what would fill several of our columns, in report of the cases of rape that are now multiplying with unparalleled rapidity, to the terror and dismay of every good citizen. But we forbear. And in forbearing to lay the sickening details before the eyes of our readers, we act upon the suspicion that such a course would aggravate the evil that we desire to destroy."

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 7.

THE MORALS OF SPIRITUALISM.

We proceed to examine other witnesses relative to the moral tendency of Spiritualism. Our next witness is Dr. P. B. Randolph, a noted lecturer on Spiritualism, who has been, he says, "in a trance state about two thousand five hundred times," and is probably as well prepared to speak of the moral tendency of Spiritualism as any other man.

In 1858 he was led to renounce Spiritualism.* We make the following extracts from a sermon preached by him on Sunday, Nov. 21st, 1858, in Clinton Hall, N. Y., and published in the New York Tribune. He says:—

"For nearly ten years have I been seeking rest for my weary soul. But rest came not until I sought it earnestly at the family altar, surrounded by those whom, in the delirium of mad philosophy, I thought were not for me, but whom I subsequently found dearer, nearer, truer than all the world beside. * * *

"Spiritualism is all eye and head, no soul and heart; all intellect, no emotions; all philosophy, no religion; all spirit, no God! And even the social reformatory movement has dwindled down into prostitutional nurseries!

"I enter the arena as the champion of common sense, against what in my soul I believe to be the most tremendous enemy of God, morals and religion, that ever found foothold on the earth—the most seductive, hence most dangerous, form of sensualism that ever cursed a nation, age or people.

"I was a medium about eight years, during which time I made three thousand speeches, and traveled over several different countries, proclaiming the new gospel. I now regret that so much excellent breath was wasted, and that my health of mind and body was well nigh ruined. I have only begun to regain both since I totally abandoned it, and to-day had rather see the cholera in my house than be a Spiritual medium. * * *

"In a moment of despair, . . . with dreadful intent, I severed the blood vessels of both arms in four places. Chance led a man to approach me ere the lamp of life had quite gone out, and by superhuman exertions I was saved. All this I charge to demonism and the infernal doctrines taught by many invisibles. . . The anti-Bible, anti-God, anti-Christian Spiritualism, I had perfectly demonstrated to be subversive, unrighteous, destructive, disorderly and irreligious; consequently to be shunned by every true follower of God and holiness. . . .

"For seven years I held daily intercourse with what purported to be my mother's spirit. I am now firmly persuaded that it was nothing but an evil spirit and infernal demon, who in that guise gained my soul's confidence, and led me to the very brink of ruin. . . . Five of my friends destroyed themselves, and I attempted it by direct Spiritual influences. Every crime in the calendar has been committed by mortal movers of viewless beings! Adultery, fornication, suicides, desertions, unjust divorces, prostitution, abortion, insanity, are not evil, I suppose! I charge all these to this scientific Spiritualism. . . . It has banished peace from happy families, separated husbands and wives, and shattered the intellect of thousands. . . . It is Godless, non-religious, opposed to the Bible, and all ecclesiastical organizations. It is subversive of human dignity and public morals; is destructive of all we hold most dear and cherish most sacredly. It robs us of faith in Christ without giving us a substitute. It robs us of our refuge of religion, and cultivates the intellect at the expense of the heart." . . .

The following, from Dr. Randolph, was published in the Banner of Light, the leading Spiritualist paper:—

"I have a volume of sixty closely written pages, of names of those who have been drawn down from respectability, morality, wealth and intelligence, to the filth of free love, poverty, and to insanity itself.

"Spiritualism is a synonym of all falsities and lies; a cloak for all kinds of crimes—adultery, murder and lust; it weakens man's intellect and individuality; changes his love of God to a worship of ghosts."

The foregoing statements set Spiritualism in its true moral aspect. No truer words were ever spoken than that Spiritualism is "anti-Bible, anti-God, anti-christian," and should "be shunned by every true follower of God and holiness." It is "anti-Christ" in its fullest sense.

Our next witness is Mr. Joel Tiffany, a man who has been a champion in Spiritualism, and probably as well prepared to speak intelligently upon the the subject as any man in our country. He says:—

"After all of our investigations for seven or eight years, we must say, that we have as much evidence that they are lying spirits as we have that there are any spirits at all. . . The doctrines they teach . . . are mostly contradictory and absurd. . . . There are those . . . who have become and are becoming victims to a sensual philosophy, under the influence of what is termed Spiritualism, . . . Spiritualism, in a very large class of minds, tends to beget a kind of moral and religious atheism."

Mr. T. L. Harris, a very intelligent Swedenborgian minister, who became a Spiritualist, and lectured in Europe, said, as reported in the London Advertiser:—

"The marriage vow imposes no obligations in the views of Spiritualists. Husbands who had for years been so devotedly attached to their wives, that they have said nothing in the world but death itself could part them, have abandoned their wives, and formed criminal connection with other females, because the spirits have told them that there was a greater Spiritualist affinity between these husbands and certain other women, than between them and their lawful wives. Wives, too, the most devoted and loving, and true to their husbands, that had ever contracted the marriage obligation, had left their husbands and children, and lived in open immorality with other men, because the spirits had told them that they ought to do so, on the ground of there being a greater Spiritualist sympathy between them and these men, than between them and their husbands."

All this is in harmony with the idea that these spirits are demons, and opposed to Christ and his word. They are just what the apostle calls them, —"seducing spirits.' While they profess to be christian, they are most emphatically anti-christian, and never lead any to Christ, but thousands away from him to the rankest infidelity.

* He has since been drawn back into it again.

TRACTS FOR MAINE.

Who will help scatter them? The last year we succeeded in this work very well, and over two hundred dollars were raised and devoted to the work. A very few did this, who had the satisfaction of knowing that much important truth was published thereby. Had all our ministers and churches taken an interest in such a work, one thousand dollars could have been as easily raised and devoted to this important work. We are trying to supply the lack of a State missionary as far as possible by the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Who wishes to subscribe and send in one, two, five, or ten dollars for this object? You can have the full amount in tracts to distribute yourselves, if you wish them. Who of our brethren or sisters will collect among their acquaintances such sums as they may, and send for tracts? Who wishes tracts, and will send for them with or without money, to scatter the light and truth of "the gospel of the kingdom," "and signs of the times"? 1800 pages for $1.00, by express; 1300 pages by mail, post paid. Send in your orders, with or without money.

For the World's Crisis.

IN GERMAN LANGUAGE.

We have had several letters inquiring whether our "Treatise on Matthew 24th and 25th chapters" could be obtained in the German language. We give an extract from a letter just received from a brother in Pennsylvania. He says:—

"I have read your Treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th, and must say it is clear and living truth out of the Scriptures. I had not so much feeling and power of those predictions before, as since reading your book. I have read other books on the signs of the times, but none, I confess, struck my mind so powerfully as this little work. I wish you would let me know whether this book can be had in the German language. There are a great many in this country, who do not understand the English language, who are searching after truth. It would be, I trust, of great benefit to those pilgrims in this vale of tears, and in these dark times. God bless you, and me, and all who love his appearing.

Henry H. Johnson, Jr."

I will inform our German brethren that although the book is not published in their language, yet they, or any one who wishes, may have it translated and publish it in German. The cost would not be great. Perhaps $200 for a thousand copies, and $100 per thousand after the first. I. C. Wellcome.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW WORKS.

Two new works, but lately put in circulation among us, I must here approve. Elder William Shepherd's tract on "The Angels" is good, and worth buying. It should be read by all who love to think they are encompassed about by the divine guardians; and who, one day, hope to see and worship God among them. And then there is H. L. Hastings' "Bethlehem," "the sweet story of old," told in rhyme, or prose-poetry, got up for the children, but which is profitable for the child-like adult to peruse. It is the very best child's book I know of, and I have ordered thirty-three copies to give away to my little friends. It should be introduced into every Sunday School in this country. D. T. T.

Alcoholic Medication.—Miller, Wood & Co., have published a paper entitled "Alcoholic Medication," prepared by R. T. Trall, M. D., (a Water Cure practitioner), for presentation to the National Temperance Convention lately held at Saratoga Springs. It was not presented to that body, however, owing to circumstances beyond the control of the writer. Dr. Trall holds that alcohol is never necessary as a medicine, differing therein from the great body of medical men in every part of the world. His argument is worthy of attention.—Ex.

We have received a copy of the above named work, and have been enlightened by its perusal. It is one of those works that every one should read. For sale by Miller, Wood & Co., 15 Laight Street, New York. Price 30 cents.—Ed.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

A gracious manifestation of divine power is being experienced in this place. Some of the praying ones have for months been fervently crying, "Lord, revive thy work in our midst." And the result is an outpouring of the Holy Spirit to quicken and reclaim.

Protracted meetings have been held during the past week, under the labors of Bro. Munger, during which the prayer of penitence has been heard, and returning prodigals have been made to rejoice in the God of their salvation. Glory to God in the highest, that in these last moments of time some are turning from the service of Satan to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven.

The interest is still increasing. Meetings are to be continued every evening for the present, and we hope to see many who are now on the road to destruction brought to a saving knowledge of the way of life. We have had some distracting elements in our midst during the past year tending to divide the flock. But the Lord has overruled it all for his glory and our good, so that the cause of Christ at the Lowell Street Chapel never looked more encouraging than at the present time. To God be all the praise. Brethren, pray for us. Moses H. Piper.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

DOWN EAST.

North Norway. Here I found myself east, over 1600 miles from Moline, Ill. The contrast was great in many respects; weather 26° below zero, with a good old-fashioned fire-place full of wood, which disputed the right of Mr. Zero occupying that room. After trying every door and window, gave up, and left us to enjoy our fire again. At Ill. we could look on no mountains or fields of wood, and here were all mountains and plenty of wood. There, corn 25 cts. a bushel; here, $1.00. But with these variations other things are alike; i. e., sectarianism, and a hatred of Christ's coming. At our meeting there was much opposition by professed holy Methodists and backsliders, Universalists, and Spiritualists. These elements of opposition gave voice or license to a few young men to disturb our meeting; but they soon found out their mistake. The brethren took hold, and held on for about a week before much effect was seen, but on the last Sabbath prejudice began to give way before a week's bombardment of truth, and the last Sunday eve. the work of God broke out in power.

One man arose and said it was of no use to stand out any longer; God had got hold of him, or to that amount; and asked for prayers. This raised a shout in the camp, as this man had always stood aloof from religion, and favored and argued Universal salvation. He had formerly been a publisher of the Boston Herald, and was well posted, but never heard any thing like that. Said he, "It was not the manner or eloquence of the preacher did this work, for I did not like him; but the plain truth of God he has preached; and the steady boring has struck oil in my heart," or to that effect. This raised such a shout I was somewhat confused, not knowing who or what he was; but soon understood that he was a brother to the brothers French, who had been in the truth about three years. Others asked prayers; some of the Methodists who had been stubborn confessed the truth, and up went another shout, and a general break-down and confession ensued.

At the close of this meeting this man came up and shook hands, saying, "I can call you Bro. Munger now." The next morning, as I was starting off, he came over a mile to say good bye, and said his wife was glad he had started. She was a Spiritualist, so I was told, and was sensitive and cross at my preaching at first, but wept the last evening. I think she will be out, soon as God's truth has got hold, and the dark fog of the devil has cleared away.

But it was a hard battle to the last. Only the evening before, a man rose and gave me an awful run about my preaching, and language, and doctrine. He was a Congregationalist, and fitting for the ministry, and never heard it on that fashion before. There was nothing right he had seen or heard, and said he would sit down. I told him to go on and clear out all that was in him. He rallied again, and began to twit about the robes the Millerites had to go up in, in '43, and that many had spent their property and had to be supported by charity, etc., and started to sit down again. I told him we were not tired; to go on. He rallied again, and was more eloquent, and began to preach the conversion of the world. He asked a few questions,—if religion and science had risen into that exalted position they must be before the Lord come? Bro. L. L. Howard being present, cried out, "Yes," which somewhat put him out; but he continued, by saying he saw no signs of the Lord's coming, and he wished the Millerites would set another time, that everybody might see their folly, and stop harping or talking about it.

His fund of information had run out entirely, and he stood some time without saying a word, and at last sat down, as Bro. Howard refused to reply. I thought Christ's words about the evil servants were then fulfilled—Matt. 24: 48–50, which applied exactly to what had been said; and Peter's scoffers came handy just then, and probably a coat never fitted better. This battle was the turning point. Even the wicked and outsiders noticed he did not quote one passage of Scripture in his sermon. He got no credit from them, and went off with his friend, not thinking very well of the Millerites; only as he got one of them to go home with him, to watch two nights with his sick family, thus receiving good for evil.

These are some of the opposing influences we had to contend with in North Norway, before we got the victory. I found two new subscribers.

West Poland—to the old saint's homestead, which is ready for the reception of pilgrims at Bro. and Sr. Megquier's. Found them much afflicted. Their daughter, Bro. Albert Libby's wife, is suffering from the removal of a cancer from the breast, and her life is doubtful. This prevents him from going out to preach. While here I visited Bro. True Jordan, who also has a large spider cancer on one of his legs, and is growing very fast. This is a distressed family. A son just gone with consumption, a sick wife, and for years has supported his family by hard work, and preached in by places, and received next to nothing for preaching; and now he is taken down with a cancer, and can not work, and not a well one in the family. Something must be done soon. Come, send in your dollars and fives; no matter how far off you are. Three cents will get it to him. He is needy and worthy, and sick. What would you be in his situation for? Direct your letters to J. T. Jordan, West Poland, Maine. Those who are able and do not give him something, would not give it to Christ, and are none of his.

Mabrey Hill, in Casco. Found them all holding on. Not one has backslidden or backed out. One brother said he never saw such strong converts in all the reformations he has witnessed in the past fifty years. I thanked God they were not converted to me; if they had been, they would not have held out; but were converted to God and his truth. I found Bro. Simpson had been feeding them for a week, and felt safe to have him feed them, for he rides no hobbies.

South Poland. Found the church standing fast in gospel liberty. Portland,—to an old fortified place, and new ones seeing the light. Biddeford. This is a new church, and doing well. South Brunswick. Found some of the trustees had refused to open the Methodist house, as they had agreed, and we applied to the outsiders. They took hold with us, and engaged a large hall. We had a good hearing among outsiders, which worked well for the truth. The other churches were well represented, especially the Methodist. The preacher, disapproving of the course of the trustees, sent out the people in the evening. God overruled it for good, and a door is open for the truth. Hiram Munger.

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—Matt. 25: 46.

In our last article we were on the examination of the word "perish"; and we will now call on the good old patriarch Job to tell us what becomes of the wicked. In Job 20: 7, 8, he says, after speaking of the flourishing of the wicked, "yet he shall perish like his own dung; they that have seen him shall say, Where is he? He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night." Can we ask anything plainer than this to show us the entire destruction of the wicked? Please take your Bible and turn to Isaiah 41: 11, 12, and read those two verses, and see if you can make out any thing else but the destruction of the whole being of the wicked.

We will now say a few words on the subject of losing our lives in this world for the sake of eternal life in Christ. In Matt. 16: 26, we read, "For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Here the same Greek word which is translated soul is translated life in the 25th verse. The Greek word psuke should have been rendered life in Matt. 16: 26, in Mark 8: 36, 37, and in Luke 9: 25; also should have been translated life, person, or himself, which properly means the whole living man, and not a separate living being, that ministers call the "immortal soul."—There is no other way to harmonize the word of God, only to call the whole man a living soul, if alive; and a dead soul, if he is dead; and if he is lost at last, he will be a lost soul, but not a live soul in the flames of fire and brimstone, to all eternity. We think if man has an immortal soul, and a never-dying soul, separate from the body, that fire and brimstone never can hurt it, or even have any effect on it.

Those who fall asleep in Jesus will remain dead till the resurrection; and then will be made living souls, and also be made immortal souls; and then it will be proper to call them never-dying souls.

We will now pass to the instrument of punishment, which is fire and brimstone, and is sometimes called "unquenchable fire." Let us turn to Malachi 4: 1,—"Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Here we would ask any candid person the question, does not this exactly agree with St. Paul, where he declares,—"When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven . . . . in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This is when he cometh to "be admired in all them that believe." "But," say our orthodox friends, "this means everlasting misery in fire and brimstone."—Does it?

Stop a moment, kind reader; is it possible that God will turn the wicked into stubble, and set the most destructive fire to burn them up, in order to preserve them alive to torment them; and then say that it should "leave them neither root nor branch?" Horrid absurdity? Can a rational being ever believe such doctrine as that? And if they are to be everlastingly destroyed from the presence of the Lord, how is it that the ministers sometimes tell us that God is present in hell to make their torment cut intensely deep? Can it be that you and I belong to a race of human beings who believe such awful absurdities? It is enough to sicken the heart of those who possess common sense, to read such horrid falsehoods, which seem to be drawn right from the fountain of Satan's old lie, in the garden of Eden.

There is nothing in all the holy Scriptures that shows the punishment of the wicked to be any thing else but second and eternal death, which takes place after the final judgment, and not before. There is no such Scripture as "immortal soul," or "never-dying soul," or "immortal spirit," or "never-dying spirit," any where in all the Bible.

We will give the full meaning of the undying worm and unquenchable fire in our next article. B. Perham.

THE CONFERENCE AT BROCKPORT, N. Y.

Brethren, you will see that our next quarterly conference comes off at Brockport. (See notice.) Let there be a general turn-out in western N. Y. Our last meeting was a great success. The Lord was with us in very deed. Let the interest increase in these meetings. The Lord is soon coming, and we need on the wedding garments. Come, Brn. and Srs., filled with the Spirit. Come, and may the Lord be with us. C. B. Turner.

DISCUSSION AT PORTLAND, ME.

My discussion with Eld. M. E. Cornell on the Sabbath question, has led me to delay the publication of my book on this subject, until I could enjoy the benefit of the criticism of the opposition against my views, as would be brought out in that debate at P., and also by the report as given by the opposition through their paper. As this report was concluded last week, I am now prepared to say that my opponents have failed to meet my arguments in favor of a change of days for the Sabbath, from the seventh to the first day of the week.

I am highly pleased with the results of this discussion. Those who heard it, and have read the report as given in the opposition paper, will be compelled, we think, to say that the description of the debate as given through their oracle is not the "fairest thing in the world." But all things, thus far, only encourage me to publish my promised work on the Sabbath question, as soon as circumstances will admit.

CHALLENGE.

In the "Review and Herald," of Jan. 30th, 1866, in referring to J. N. Andrews' History of the Sabbath, the writer says:—

"The door is now open for them to test this matter, if they dare step in and risk their cause in fair open encounter."

To this challenge I reply that I am ready, and "dare step in and risk" an "open encounter" with any man in their ranks qualified to defend "their cause," in testing the merits of J. N. Andrews' History, or any other point connected with their theory of the seventh-day Sabbath, either in oral or written discussion, as soon as arrangements can be agreed upon.

Will they "dare" do it? Will they "risk their cause" in this manner? We shall see. They may try to shield themselves from this issue, by saying they will not debate this question with me, unless the "World's Crisis" will also publish the discussion. But I am disposed to "dare" them to "risk their cause" in an "open encounter" through the columns of this paper. But it is quite doubtful whether they will "dare" to run such a "risk" as this. But we shall see what we shall see.

THE TEN LEPERS.

"And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?"

Dear reader, do you remember the circumstances in which these words were uttered? Permit me to say a few words about the subject.

In looking over the Scriptures, my mind was arrested by this circumstance, and it referred me back to the law. In so doing I learned something about this plague. Without going into details, or a description of the same, I will try to give some account of the disposal of one that was found to have such a plague. The high priest had to decide about this plague. He must take the man and go through a thorough examination, and if he is found to be a leprous man, the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean.

What is the condition of such an individual? The leper is first to have his clothes rent and his head bare, and shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry unclean, unclean. Is that all? No. He shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be. What think you of a situation like this? Who but the Son of God would not have been frightened to see ten such frightful looking subjects, bare headed and ragged, coming to meet him, he, perhaps, weary of his journey towards Jerusalem? You will see he is about to enter a village, and is met by ten such individuals. Yet they say,—

"Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!"

"Who are you?"

"We are lepers."

"How came you out here?"

"We have been pronounced unclean."

"By whom?"

"The High Priest."

"And after being called unclean ask me to have mercy. Do you know what these priests think of me? Do they think I am the Son of God?"

"No."

"What will they think if I send them back to them all whole? They can call them unclean, but I will call them whole." If we are allowed to suppose that he reasoned, perhaps he reasoned like this: "Now I will try them, and see what they will say or do about the matter. Then again, I will see how many will come back and thank me." Then he says, "Go, show yourselves unto the priests."

And they might have said, "They say we are unclean. They will not hear any thing from us; and what is more, they do not allow us a place in the camp, nor to wear any thing upon our heads, and nothing but these rent clothes."

But does that make any difference? No. It is go. So they start. How far they went, I am not able to say, but as they went, they were cleansed, yes, cleansed.

How many a poor soul has experienced just such a cleansing as this. If God has forgiven your sins, you know something about it. Perhaps you might have had your head covered, and instead of tattered garments you had on your broadcloths or silks; but, ah! what was inside? Did you not with all your fashionable attire have to cry, Lord, have mercy on me? What better were we than they? But some that have not been cleansed may say, We have not been driven out of the camp; we can dress finely, and appear well in company, and all these things. But have you not been pronounced by the great Teacher, now our High Priest, unclean?

You say they had to remain without the camp. That was hard; but how will it be with you when Abram, Isaac, and Jacob, sit down in the kingdom, and all the rest of those that have experienced this cleansing? Where will you appear? Methinks your condition will be worse than theirs was. If you meet the Lord with the expectation of being cleansed, you must do it before he enters the city.

Sinner, bear in mind that you must start to meet the Lord before he is about to enter the city, if you do not you will be too late; the door of mercy will be closed. You have no time to spare. He is about to enter the city. Flee, oh, flee, for soon mercy will be all gone, and your crying for mercy will not be heard. You need not tell a great long story about your sins. Christ knows all about them. Come right along. You are just the one he wants. Repent! Cry for mercy. All that have ever received this cleansing have had to come over the same road; that is, to repent, call for mercy, and God will be faithful to forgive. Remember, we have a great High Priest, who is always ready and willing.

A few words about this returning. It was asked, Were there not ten cleansed? where are the nine? Think of the mercy he had for them, and only one returned to give him glory.

How will that compare with those who are cleansed in these last days? God be praised, that there was one, and that there is now and then one who returns in these days, amid all the wickedness there is. Thank God for some who give him the glory. How was it with that one? Did he come back softly, for fear some one would see or hear him? No, for he cried with a loud voice, and glorified God, falling at his feet, and giving thanks.

How is it with you who have been cleansed? Are you giving God the glory? Are you passing through trials? Do you thank God that he cleansed you, so you could bear them like men and women? Do you receive blessings every day? If so, does God have the glory? It all belongs to him. May God help us all to be good.

Concord, N. H. JOHN T. KIMBALL.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. L. Percival.

BRO. GRANT:—I enclose a little scrip for some tracts for a sister whose experience since September last, as related by her last Sunday evening in the prayer meeting, is worth repeating, and her example well worthy of imitation.

Sr. C. was reared in the faith of the Episcopal church, a full believer in the creed of St. Athanasius, and latterly belonged to the Congregational sect. In September, by the failure of one of the hired preachers to meet his appointment in our meeting-house, I was requested to take his place, and did so, presenting the subject of the resurrection of the dead in the light of God's word. It crossed her track so terribly that she was "full of wrath," and went home feeling and saying that she would never hear me preach again. But she had too much grace to retain such feelings long, and fully believing that I was really a servant of Christ, and honest in my faith and actions, and conscious of her own integrity and love for God and his truth, she felt that she must fellowship me; and it distressed her that under these circumstances we should differ so much in our faith.

So she began to pray earnestly, day after day, that God would show Bro. P. his error, if in error, or, if not, to show her the truth, and thus bring us into one faith; at the same time, also, she began to pray for the Lord to send some one to preach the truth in the place.

Soon after this, our meeting was nearly vacated of preachers, and after repeated solicitations, I gave an appointment to preach, feeling very uncertain about its being duty, and determined to be guided by the result of the effort as to my duty. Well, the Lord blessed so richly that I was satisfied, and have continued till the present, preaching every other Sunday.

Two weeks ago I crossed her track again, and she felt so bad that in the course of the week she came to see me with her Bible in her hand, and lots of leaves turned down! We spent a couple of hours most interestingly. I did not make much effort to show her her error, but showed her some of the beauties and consistencies of the truth,—showed her where to commence her investigations of the subject, so as to reach the truth in the shortest time, lent her your tracts,—"Man," "Soul," and "Spirit,"—and she went home feeling better, though not convinced.

Last Sunday, the Lord gave me the subject of immortality to preach upon, and enabled me to speak from an overflowing heart, and with power, and in the evening Sr. C. told her experience, as above related, and confessed that her faith in the immortality of the soul was all gone, and gone forever, and she was happy. Praise the Lord. She wishes you to get the worth of the enclosed in your tracts above named.

Allow me to say, Bro. G., that I consider your tracts on "Man," "Soul," and "Spirit," the best works on that subject that I know of, for three reasons. First, they are brief; this is worth much in these hurrying times. Second, they are simple; a child can understand them. Third, they are written in a meek spirit, instead of a dictatorial one, quietly and kindly leading the mind of the reader to the Scriptures, showing him where to look for the light, but leaving the mind unbiassed, and, if honest, almost sure to get the truth. I would never be without a supply of them, if I could help it. Most truly yours,

C. L. PERCIVAL.

Massawippi, Jan. 25th, 1866.

From Bro. D. T. Taylor.

[Although the following good news from Massena, N. Y., was in a private letter, we trust Bro. Taylor will pardon us for giving it a place in the Crisis.—ED.]

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—It is Monday, the 29th. I am at Potsdam Junction, homeward bound. The good work has gone on. The interest since you left has not at all abated I preached on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday evening held a union prayer and conference meeting at the church. On Friday evening led a young people's meeting at Deacon Goodrich's, where thirty of the youth were in attendance, and all took part, doing nobly for Christ. On Wednesday afternoon also I had service, and at the close immersed ten happy souls. O it was a glad, glorious scene. I never enjoyed a baptism in winter so well; never suffered so little with the cold so severe; never saw young converts go down into the water so unflinchingly. I made an attempt to get home on Thursday, but could not; God hindered by sending the storm. So Eld. Smith gave us the house, and yesterday I held three services.

At each, and all the above meetings, new ones were forward for prayers, and very many souls have come out into the light during the week. Last night the feeling was deep, and a dozen were forward who had hitherto stood aloof. The Spirit was present, and God worked mightily. At the village Eld. Smith baptized three yesterday, and all Massena appears moved by the divine influence. I may return there next Saturday, as Rev. Mr. Allen offers me the pulpit. If not then, I shall go in two weeks. Your services were well received, and you are remembered very kindly by all who heard you. "Pray for us." Farewell. Yours in Jesus,

D. T. TAYLOR.

Obituaries.

PERKINS. Died in China, Me., Feb. 2d, 1866, of typhoid fever, our much beloved brother, Isaac C. Perkins, aged twenty years and seven months.

He was converted in the year 1861, under the labors of Eld. J. A. Varney, of the F. W. Baptist church; but from the word of God, which he diligently and understandingly studied, he was convinced that we were living in the closing scenes of earth's history; that Jesus was soon coming to call from their dusty beds the sleeping saints, and take his waiting, faithful ones to be with himself. These and kindred truths he fearlessly advocated. Of his life, the life of one so young, I know not how to do it justice. His was not that flickering, unsteady light that is soon lost amid the vain things of earth, but pure, steady, increasing, emanating from true love to God, and from a principle so firm that nothing could cause him to turn aside from the path of duty.

He sleeps in Jesus. Many a heart mourns that a life so useful should so soon be terminated.

F. A. GRAY.

FIELD. Fell asleep, in Falmouth, Me., Jan. 24th, 1866, in hope of the better world, Bro. Alden C., son of Bro. E. C. and Sr. Sarah P. Field, aged twenty-two years, four months.

Some weeks before his death, Bro. Alden found peace in believing in Jesus, and from that time was happy in the Lord. All was peace and joy unspeakable. It was a blessed privilege to see one so filled with a Savior's love. The day before his death I visited him. Stretching out his feeble arms to embrace me, and saluting me with a kiss of Christian love, he exclaimed, "O! we will meet again where sorrows are unknown."

A large circle of friends mourn his loss, yet they rejoice in hope of soon meeting where

"Pain nor sickness ne'er shall enter,
Grief nor woe their lot shall share."

HUTCHINGS. In Portland, Me., Feb. 1st, 1866, Bro. James A. Hutchings, aged thirty-four years, ten months.

An aged and oft-afflicted father, a heart-broken widow, together with two little children and other dear ones, now weep over the loss of one so near and dearly beloved. Truly the affliction is grievous, but Bro. James "rests in hope." His christian walk for several years gave evidence that he was a pilgrim and stranger on the earth.

May the consolations of the gospel support the heart-stricken mourners in this hour of affliction, and may they be prepared for that land where sickness and death will never be known.

R. R. YORK.

HURD. Died in Concord, N. H., Jan. 31, 1866, Flora S., daughter of Wm. and Susan Hurd, aged one year and seven months.

Words of comfort by A. Simpson, from Jer. 31: 16.

Side by side they're sweetly sleeping,
Little loved ones early blest;
Free from care, and pain, and sorrow,
Oh, rejoice! they are at rest.

Once more death has entered this family, and taken another darling. The enemy has laid his cold hand on two darling ones, and taken them to his land; but, thank God, they will come from the land of the enemy. May this affliction be sanctified to these mourning parents and children, and brighten their hope of seeing these dear ones again, where pain and death cannot come.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Via. Queenstown.

London, Jan. 25. The Paris correspondent of the Times gives a minute account of M. Salliard's interview with Napoleon and his hurried departure for Mexico. His instructions, verbal only, are to represent to Maximilian that the time has arrived for the withdrawal of the French troops.

There had been another disastrous mine explosion near Wigan, by which thirty lives were lost.

Fenian trials and convictions continue daily.

It is reported that France has tendered its mediation between the Pope and Russia.

Prince Otho died at Genoa Jan. 22.

In consequence of disturbances at Valentia, that province has been proclaimed in a state of siege.

Madrid continues tranquil.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post concludes an analysis of the Imperial speech in these terms:

"So far as I am able to judge, no speech from the throne since the foundation of the empire has given such universal satisfaction. It responds to the actual spirit and feeling of the nation—to the view of appreciation of public affairs which has begun to flow from the nation's mind of late. France turns from the impoverishing arts of war abroad to the productive arts of peace and material progress at home. The session of 1866 opens with greater political vitality than those which more immediately followed the establishment of the Empire."

Complicated questions are arising between China and France on the subject of propagandism.

Japan advices state that the Minister's mission to Osaca was successful. Treaties had been ratified and the ports were to be opened Jan. 1.

Melbourne, Dec. 26. There is intense exitement in South Australia in consequence of the Chilian war, and all the sales of copper have been stopped.

The rebels on the east coast of New Zealand have been defeated and have surrendered.

It was stated that the Spanish fleet in the Pacific is to be increased.

DOMESTIC.

BAPTIZING.—Sunday forenoon, five men and twenty women were baptized in the river, at the east end of Fish Island, by the Rev. Mr. Hook, of Concord, N. H., assisted by Rev. Mr. Damman, of Worcester, both of whom have been laboring at the Second Advent church in this city. A vast crowd assembled to witness the sacred rite, and the scene was interesting and solemn.—New Bedford Mercury.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 26. At a Fenian meeting to-night Gen. Sweeny promised, if supported, to conquer a spot of British territory before next May as a base from which to liberate Ireland. Roberts promised to have the green flag supported within ninety days by the largest army of Irishmen the sun ever shone upon.

New York, Feb. 10. A Washington dispatch says a less peaceful view of the Mexican situation appears to be obtaining ground in Congressional circles. Napoleon's expressions are regarded as evasive and disingenuous, and it is thought he does not really intend to withdraw his troops unless our Government will recognize Maximilian or enter into some other compromise in the matter. Many military men entertain the opinion that our force on the Rio Grande is to be increased at once, and our affairs there are to be placed on a war footing immediately.

France and Mexico.

The freshest rumor concerning Mexican affairs is that the Emperor of France has sent word to Maximilian that he may count for a year longer upon the presence of French troops in his empire, but that France will make no engagement to support him beyond that time. This statement professes to be semi-official, and yet advices from Paris say that three regiments are under orders to go out to Mexico to reinforce Marshal Bazaine, and that a government transport in the port of Toulon had been ordered to proceed in all haste to Algiers to take on board one thousand men for Mexico. The truth most probably is that nobody knows what arrangement Napoleon has made, or whether he has made any at all. Concerning the expected speech of the Emperor at the opening of the Chambers on the 22d ult., a Paris letter in the Tribune says:

"I do not believe that anybody but the Emperor knows what he will say, and I doubt whether he knows himself. His interest strongly calls him to come away from Mexico, but his pride stands in the way. He is in a worse dilemma regarding this matter than he has ever been in during the whole course of his life. If he withdraws his troops, Maximilian must at once go to the wall, and then gloss it over as he may, explain as he may, all the world will see that the Mexican expedition, which he of his own head, and without consulting the country, went into for nefarious purposes—an expedition which has cost France more blood and treasure than she yet knows of—has been an ignominious failure. But if he goes on he risks his throne. The finances of France are in a most precarious condition, and a war with the United States, which must come sooner or later if Napoleon III. persists in keeping an army in Mexico to prop up an empire, would bring France to the verge of bankruptcy. M. Fould, the Finance Minister, well knows this, and is using all his influence to persuade the Emperor to take the only course which will give his dynasty a chance of lasting. The French nation, which mistrusted and disliked the Mexican expedition from the first, would never stand the frightful expenditure which its long continuance would entail."

In this relation an article appeared in the Debats of the 19th ultimo, from the pen of M. St. Marc Girardin, earnestly pressing upon Napoleon the policy of his evacuating Mexico. He says its prolonged occupation would be contrary to the policy of the first Napoleon, because its continuance and success would establish between France and the United States the contiguity which that great statesman and warrior desired to put an end to, while a third party would have all the benefit. M. Girardin has to be very cautious in his mode of expressing himself, still he declares that France is bound in honor to go to war, provided the United States threaten her on account of her Mexican policy, regardless of the disastrous consequences.

"But what he very sensibly insists upon is, that hitherto the United States has not so acted toward France as to make it a point of honor that she should continue to hold Mexico, and that France has at this moment an opportunity, which she would do well to seize, to get away from Mexico without the appearance of being driven away. Now, in 1866, the diplomatic language of the United States is precisely the same as it was in 1863. Three years ago Mr. Seward wrote to Mr. Dayton a dispatch, calling the attention of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to three principal points: First, that the American people, being republicans, sympathized with republican government in Mexico. Second, that the interests of the United States, as well as those of France, required a prompt termination of the Mexican complications, based upon the unity and independence of Mexico; and Third, Mr. Seward earnestly hoped that the result of the war in Mexico might not be to cause a coolness between France and the United States. Here was, in most moderate and conciliatory language, distinct warning of the danger that a prolonged occupation of Mexico by France might disturb the good relations which the government of Washington most earnestly desire to maintain between the two countries. Such is the language, neither more nor less strong, that the Cabinet of Washington uses now. France, therefore, says M. Saint Marc Girardin, cannot say that the United States, puffed up by the successful termination of her great civil war, is assuming an arrogant and threatening attitude, since the latest dispatches to Mr. Bigelow merely repeat what was said with equal firmness in 1863, when the war was raging in its utmost intensity. He trusts that Napoleon III., not following the example which ruined his uncle, will be wise enough 'to in time.'"—Journal 5th inst.

ITEMS.

☞ New England people seem to be losing their respect for the Sabbath at an astonishing rate, and will soon outdo the Germans in their desire to make it a day of recreation, instead of rest and devotion to religious duties. Too many of our young people regard the teachings of the Bible in regard to the observance of the Sabbath as "too old fogyish," and act accordingly; but there are well settled principles of moral action that cannot be thrown aside without endangering the peace and good order of society as well as resulting injury to the individual.—Newburyport Herald.

☞ A Savannah correspondent writes to the Congregationalist: "I find the colored people here given to the New Testament models. In all their churches the custom for collections is to spread the table in front of the pulpit, and while singing a hymn, to come forward and cast in their gifts, as when the Savior sat by the treasury and beheld how the people cast in—thus making a personal offering at the altar.

☞ Prof. Hough, of the Dudley Observatory, speaking of the comparative changes of the barometer and thermometer during the cold snap of last month, says that in January the barometer attained the greatest elevation ever known in the United States.

☞ A family of seven persons, the husband and father of which had broken his leg, was found starving to death Monday, having had no food for two days. This in Brooklyn, the "city of churches."

☞ The laws passed in Wisconsin a few years ago, abolishing capital punishment, are to be repealed and the old laws revived. Reason—murder rampant.

☞ A recent article in the N. Y. Tribune recommends an adoption, by the whole world, of the French standard of currency; or at least suggests a basis for universal conformity in the French franc for a unit.

☞ A recent visit to Olean, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., elicits the fact that the rise in the Alleghany river, last spring, was without precedent. People living along the banks were compelled to live for days in their chambers.

☞ The conflict between the Czar and his revolutionary nobles at Moscow, is attracting the attention of Western Europe, and a London journalist declares that the Emperor of Russia is at the present time the most care-laden man in the world.

☞ The cattle disease in England continues to increase. The latest returns show that the number attacked in the week approaches ten thousand.

☞ It was Dean Swift who was to preach a charity sermon, and giving out as his text, "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord" then added, "If you like the security, down with the dust."

☞ An earthquake was felt throughout Mexico on the 13th ult., and was severely felt on the South American coast. The destruction of the city of Caraccas by an earthquake is confirmed.

Conference.

The church at Casco., Me., purpose to hold a Conference at the Union Chapel, commencing Feb. 22d, to continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren and sisters wishing to come may stop on Mayberry Hill, at any of the Mayberry's, or with J. Sands, or E. Dyer, at the village, S. Leach, S. Sylvester, or Wm. Hodgdon. We hope to have a good meeting. If we would, we must come praying, and be ready to work. Bro. J. Couch is engaged to come, and other laborers are invited.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Notice.

A protracted meeting will be held at the Freewill Baptist meeting-house, West Falmouth, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 22d, to continue as long as may be thought best. Brethren N. G. Reed, I. C. Welcome, and others, are expected to be present. All who have a mind to work are invited to attend.

For the brethren, R. R. YORK.

Notice.

There will be a meeting at the school-house in Lovely Street, Ct., Sunday, Feb. 18th. Brn. L. Woodruff and S. M. Tatro will be present if the Lord will.

Maine Quarterly Conference.

Our next Easterly Maine Quarterly Conference is appointed at Lincolnville, to commence Thursday, the 22d day of February, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Friends and brethren will call on Bros. Daniel Fletcher, Ephm. and Wm. Calderwood, M. Young, Edmund Blood, etc. Love for the cause of Jesus prompts us to hope that all coming to the meeting will come prepared to labor in accordance with our hope.

M. YOUNG, Clerk.

Maine Eastern Conference.

The Eastern Maine Conference will be held at Corinna Mills, to commence March 1st, at 2 P. M., and continue over Lord's day. We want the preaching brethren to be faithful in attendance, and if any from other States, or from the west part of this State, should read this notice, and feel that the Lord says "Go," we hope and pray they may come, filled with the Spirit.

In behalf of the brethren, J. DAMMAN.

Notice.

The third quarterly meeting of the N. Y. Christian Association will be held at Brockport, Monroe Co., N. Y., commencing Friday, March 2d, and continue over the following Sunday. Come brethren and sisters, let there be a general gathering to this meeting, and come praying for the Lord's blessing. C. B. TURNER, for the Board.

PASSING AWAY.

We are passing away;
Away from a season of smiles and of tears;
Away from a season of hopes and of fears;
Away from a season of sorrow and sin;
Away from a season of strivings within;
Away from all seasons of toil and of care;
From anger and turmoil, from grief and despair.

We are almost home:
Home to the birthplace of love and of light;
Home to the harbor of endless delight;
Home to a sure, endless season of rest;
Home to the land of the pure and the blest;
Where the song of rejoicing never shall cease,
In the land of purity, blessedness, peace.

We are passing away:
Away, yes away from the loved ones on earth;
Away from the long endeared family hearth;
Away from the clustering joys of years;
Away from the mingling of smiles and of tears;
Away from the graves where our loved ones lie low;
Away from much that we cherish below.

We are almost home:
Home to that home where our Father will greet us;
Home to that home where the ransomed will meet us;
Home to that home where partings are never,
Holy communings and fellowship ever;
Where treasures, enduring and rare, lie in store;
Home of the faithful! Home evermore!

We are passing away:
Away from the moment which seems to be ours;
Away from the moments, away from the hours;
Away from all that we have been and are;
Away, swift away to the judgment bar;
Away and away to eternity's shore;
From now and from then to the great Evermore.

We are almost home:
O rapturous thought! O blissful desire!
We have almost attained that to which we aspire;
Such fullness of joy! such fullness of love!
Perfection of peace to that city above!
Filled with the glorious presence of God,
The Spirit divine, and Jesus our Lord.

For the World's Crisis.

GLORYING IN INFIRMITIES AND TRIBULATIONS.

Paul did what it takes a christian to do,—he gladly gloried in infirmities. Why? That the power of Christ might rest upon him. Others might rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, the glory that shall be revealed.—Bright prospects make bright hopes, and bright hopes make cheerful hearts. No wonder that Paul, or any other one, could rejoice in hope; but to "glory in tribulations," and "in infirmities," and such trying things,—that is hard work, and quite another question, for any but a Christian.

Paul gives us one of the best reasons for glorying in these things. He wanted the advantages of a good discipline. Here is his synopsis of the process of discipline: Tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed. Now Paul wanted the hope of the glory of God, the hope that maketh not ashamed, a hope which supposes that the love of God is shed abroad in the heart.

This hope he loved to rejoice in, and he knew it would not be a good one unless he had an experience to support it. He could not get the experience without patience; he must have either patience or impatience; one would be a good foundation on which to build a perfect experience; the other nothing good.

Experience is knowledge gained by practice; and patience is necessary to get knowledge; for an impatient, fretting, uneasy, chafing disposition never can learn or know any thing good. It cannot wait long enough to learn. One must have patience, and "patience" must "have her perfect work" in working experience; so there must be a place to put patience, and the tribulations which occur furnish the place to put the patience in. In other words, furnish an opportunity to use it.

Oh! what precious lessons have been learned by patiently holding "still" in the fiery furnace. It does certainly give patience a trial. Some sometimes say that impatience gets tired, but impatience cannot bear trial; that is its great fault. Nothing but true patience can bear the "furnace heat" when it makes the heart quiver in anguish. But it is so good to have the gracious power (for the most patient man in the world could not patiently hold still in tribulation unless God helped him) to be able to get all the good out of the seeming evil of tribulations and infirmities, and so treasure up an experience like tried gold, enriching its possessor, so that he can have as a glorious final result a "hope which maketh not ashamed."

David prayed, "Let me not be ashamed of my hope." But many are so ashamed of "the little hope" they have they scarcely dare "indulge" it; they are obliged to pet it, and sometimes fear that it is not good for any thing. The great reason is they are afraid of the fiery trial of "tribulation." Tribulation means "threshing," and they cannot bear to have the good grain threshed out of the straw and separated from the chaff; or to have their hearts taken upon God's great anvil and beaten and moulded into a proper spirit and temper, that they may be able to see clearly with a good hope, through grace, into the promised land.

There is an admirable old poem which expresses the idea forcibly. It makes one seem to feel the heat of the fire and the weight of the blows, to wit:

"Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers,
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I answer, 'As God will,'
And, trusting in his name, hold still.

He comes and takes my heart all heated,
On his hard anvil, minded so,
And turns it o'er and o'er, and beats it,
And lets it cool, and lets it glow;
And yet I whisper, 'As God will,'
And in his mighty hand hold still." *

Tribulation and infirmities are closely related. By one comes a good hope; by the other a blessed experience of "the power of Christ." Paul did not at first glory in infirmities as much as he did in tribulation. He desired to have the "infirmity," the "thorn in the flesh," taken away. He prayed three times, Lord, take the "thorn" away, remove this "infirmity," send away this messenger of Satan;" and the answer came,—"My grace shall be sufficient for thee." Paul took that promise as a "note" in full to cover all his "liabilities," "damages," etc. He knew God's "bank of grace" was sustained by a full capital; so as soon as the promise came he ceased praying. He had received in answer to prayer, not what he asked for, but what he most needed. So he exultingly cries out,—"Most gladly will I glory in infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

Here is something paradoxical. I should call it by the anomalous title of paradoxical parallel, to wit:

Tribulation—a hope which maketh not ashamed.

Infirmities—the power of Christ resting on [illegible]

* The remainder of the poem is not at hand, and I have not room to give it. [illegible] I will send it to the Crisis for publication.

you. Oh! how blessed it is to know that while Father finds us in a world of sin and evil, he can bring us up out of the tribulation with our robes all washed in the blood of the Lamb, all the fiery trials purifying us.

There is a great truth in this fact, which want of time and a dread of long articles will not permit me to notice. It is sufficient to say that it contains the full solution of the reason why God lets sin and Satan hold their sway for six thousand years. Thank God, their reign is almost over. Soon the day of deliverance will come, and the purified ones will be sufficiently disciplined to ensure their safety in the kingdom.

L. C. McKinstry.

GOD'S CONVERTS.

There is no cause so absurd but that it may gain adherents. A live church will have conversions; but additions by no means prove that a church is holy. Every thing depends upon the character of the converts; not what they were before, but what they are after their conversion. The old Pharisees were extremely zealous; they compassed sea and land to make one proselyte; but he was no better, but rather the worse, for his conversion. Is it not so with many converts at the present time? Is there, as far as human observation extends, any reformation? Is not their piety, so called, in reality bigotry? Do they cease loving the world?

In a new country, the first thing to be done to clear off the forests is to cut down the trees. After they have laid sufficiently long, if fire is applied at the right period, much of the labor in clearing off the land is obviated. But a poor burn is worse than nothing. The kindling wood—the leaves, and smaller twigs, are consumed, while the large brush remains to be removed piece by piece. So a superficial revival burns over the ground and renders it almost impossible to promote a thorough work of grace. The consciousness of guilt, and the apprehension of the wrath to come, which irreligious persons generally feel, render them accessible to the arrows of divine truth.

But a profession of religion—no matter how poor the kind, or how poorly sustained—operates as an armor through which the sword of the Spirit with difficulty penetrates. For conversions to be a blessing, and not a curse, the church must be in a state of salvation. The Bible standard of religion must be held up in the testimony and in the lives of professing christians. If they are proud and covetous—if the women are fond of fashion and display, adorning themselves in gold, and pearls, and costly array—if the men love the world and are bent on making money, as will always be the case when extravagance is to be maintained—then the converts will partake of the same general character.

Some months since, we saw at the altar a young lady seeking pardon. She seemed deeply in earnest and professed a willingness to "come out from the world and be separate." She was taken to another altar where the Bible requirements concerning dress were not insisted on. She put on extra jewelry after going to that altar. She was taught to believe in Jesus, professed faith in him, and went away to lead as vain and fashionable a life as before. But conviction was silenced, and the heart was hardened.

"Cursed be he that doeth the work of God deceitfully." Do not suffer souls under your influence to be deceived, if you can help it. Let them know what it is to be a christian. Tell them plainly and kindly what are the fruits of the true christian character. Let the Bible standard of religion be held up so plainly that there can be no doubt as to what is meant by becoming religious. Every person engaged in promoting the salvation of souls—and every follower of Jesus engaged in this work—should have, in their experience, the prayer of the Psalmist answered; and the result which he mentions will be sure to follow: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."—Earnest Christian.

DONATE? HOW CAN YOU?

What have you left to donate for purposes of charity and mercy, truth and salvation, after the expenditures of the day, consuming on pride, lust, and fashion? What have you to donate for objects benevolent, after building popish temples, popishly adorned—after counting the cost of opera-choirs, high salaries, idolatry in dress and equipage, the money expended in feastings, at pleasure-parties, in things luxurious, extravagant, and positively injurious—novels, wine, and tobacco?—what is there left for Bibles, tracts, missions; for the poor, the oppressed, and the perishing? Friends, are you aware that you are stewards? that, by and by, God will call on you to account for every farthing consumed on lust, pride, fashion and folly? Do you ever think on Him who went about doing good, healing all manner of disease, and had not where to lay his head?

Give? what have they to give for any benevolent enterprise, after deducting bills for dress, equipage, pastimes, luxurious feastings? Give? what have they to give when all is on the back or in the wardrobe? The great mass of the people are living above their income. Who can doubt this wicked expenditure of God's bounty to gratify pride, ostentation, fashionable etiquette, is one special cause of the late awful visitation, the fearful judgments of the Almighty? Look here—

A fashionable dry goods dealer advertises a lace scarf, worth fifteen hundred dollars. Another has a bridal dress, for which he asks twelve hundred. Bonnets at two hundred dollars are not unfrequently sold. Cashmeres, from three hundred dollars upward, are seen by dozens in a walk along Broadway. A hundred dollars is quite a common price for a silk gown. In a word, extravagance in dress has reached a height which would have frightened our prudent grandmothers and appalled their husbands. A fashionable lady spends, annually, on her milliner, mantua-maker, and lace dealer, a sum that would have supported an entire household, even in her own rank in life, in the days of Mrs. Washington. A thousand dollars a year is considered, we are told, quite a narrow income for such purposes, among those pretending to be "in society" in some of our cities. Add to this the expenditure for opera tickets, for a summer trip to the Springs, and for a score of little inevitable et ceteras, and the reader gets some idea of the comparatively wanton waste of money, [illegible] on year after year, by thousands, if not tens of thousands, of American women.

And for what end? Do these human butterflies improve their intellect, enlarge their culture, or elevate their characters, by this spendthrift system? On the contrary, they deteriorate all. Do they bestow additional happiness on their husbands and fathers? The very reverse; for to sustain these extravagances, the father or husband, as the case may be, toils late and early, consumes his health, and often is driven into wild speculations that end in utter ruin.

Do they win the approval of the other sex? Never was the esteem of any worthy man secured by a costly, reckless style of dress. All that this perilous extravagance effects, is to gratify miserable, personal vanity. The fostering of one of the most petty of human vices, is the only result of these spendthrift habits. Mrs. Potiphar plumes herself on having outshone her rival in laces, at some grand soiree, or in having worn more jewels; and that is the single, barren harvest which she reaps by the expenditure of thousands. Can the pampering of such vanity benefit her or others? Alas! the women who live for such triumphs as these, whose whole souls are given to diamonds and dress, are little fitted to be wives or mothers, to be companions for men or educators of children. When the Roman matrons sunk to a similar condition, Rome began from that hour to decline.

Stop and think, friend. Think twice, three times, before you purchase. Do you really need the article? It is probably a pretty trifle in dress, in furniture; but what solid benefit will it be to you? Or is it some luxury for the table that you can as well do without? Think, therefore, before you spend your money. Or, you need a new carpet, new sofa, new chairs, new bedstead, or a new dress; you are tempted to buy something a little handsomer than you had intended; and while you hesitate, the dealer will say to you, "It's only a trifle more, and see how far prettier it is." But, before you purchase, stop and think. Will you be the better a year hence, much less in old age, for having squandered your money? Is it not wiser to "lay by something for a rainy day," and for doing good? All these luxuries gratify you only for the moment; you soon tire of them; and their only permanent effect is to consume your means, and debar you from deeds of mercy. It is by such little extravagances, not much separately, but ruinous in the aggregate, that the great majority of families are kept comparatively poor. The first lesson to learn is to deny yourself useless expenses; and the first step towards learning this lesson, is to think before you spend, and not only think, but ask God. Our stewardship comes into requisition. Have we any right whatever to squander God's money on things trifling, useless, or merely to gratify fancy, the lust of pride, ambition or extravagance?

Think of the poor,—the ten thousand objects of charity. Think, will it not be more pleasing to my heavenly Father to deny myself this gratification, and devote the amount to cause the widow's heart to sing for joy? What we presume to call ours, is not ours, but God's. By and by, "Give account of thy stewardship."—Home Thrusts.

For the World's Crisis.

LAST CRISIS.

That we are living in the last crisis, or last generation, is now a fixed fact, proved by every fulfillment of prophecy, and believed in by all classes, skeptics as well as believers. It is evidenced by the thousand and one reports we are having continually from every kind of source, all going to show that we are living in an unparalleled age in the commission of crime, without we except the days of Noah and Lot, as the following extracts will show:

The Portland Advertiser of Jan. 4th, 1866, says in an article headed, "Murders and Executions," quoting from the Philadelphian Age: "The highest of all crimes is frightfully on the increase. . . . It is startling to compare the number of murders and executions during the past year, and to see with what ease the criminal is permitted to escape. . . . In 1864 there were in the United States 682 murders—not accidental killing—but real murders. And how many executions followed? Just 98. . . . And things have naturally been growing worse and worse every year since."

Says the Independent, "The present times bid fair to be distinguished pre-eminently as a period of crime. . . . The progress of the grosser forms of wickedness are facts frightful to observe, and more frightful to ponder. Every newspaper is laden with the records of such. They make the staple news of the day. They load and darken the columns of all journals, till one trembles to take up the morning paper, is afraid to have it read in the family, and lays it down with a sense of heart sickness, . . . a keen apprehension of what is to be expected in the future. It is not those who are avowedly worldly and godless in their lives. . . . Teachers, physicians, lawyers, ministers, the young not only, but the aged, in well nigh equal measure. All seem to be smitten with the foul contagion."

The Portland Enquirer states that at a murder trial in San Francisco, the district attorney stated that 1200 murders had taken place within four years.

Says the World, of New York, in a late issue: "The dark deeds of murders, etc., daily blacken the pages of our journals." The same paper, speaking of the coming of the cholera, calls it an Atlila in its ravages. "This, to-day, incomprehensible scourge of God."

Says the Christian Press, of Cincinnati, Ohio: "Brethren, the crisis of the world is come. Are we prepared for it? Can we resign all the interests of an earthly life, and identify ourselves with the will of God and spiritual excellence? Can we stand in the whirlwind, talk with the thunder, and look calmly on heaven when God looks forth in indignation on a guilty world? Are we prepared with serene joy and holy confidence to unite in the song of Moses and the Lamb, when the plagues of heaven shall fall on the wicked, and the earth shall be filled with wailing and blasphemy?"

Before me lies the programme of the concert given at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, and judging from the name of the institution, we should judge that the programme might have been filled with selections from the Oratorios of The Messiah—David—The Creation, etc., but true to the description given by Paul of the form of godliness, the programme stood thus: "Part first. 1. Overture, Caliph of Bagdad. 2. Polka. 3. Declamation. 4. Berlin Waltz. 5. Polka. 6. Polka. 7. Lily White Quadrille. 8. Polka.

Part second. 1. Waltz. 2. Duet. 3. Wedding March. 4. Irish Polka. 5. Johnny Schmoucker. 6. Hanover Waltz. 7. Gallop. 8. Quadrille Polka."

I wonder if John Wesley were alive now, if he would know his followers? I do not think you would find him listening to Irish Polkas. It fulfills Scripture,—"Departing from the faith."

Rev. T. L. Cuyler, in the Independent of Sept. 7, 1865, says of lukewarm christians, "I would not exchange the prayers and power of a single servant girl, that I have in my Brooklyn church, for five hundred of these petrified professors sitting around the communion table in meaningless mockery of a crucified Master. . . . Put a score of lukewarm professors into a prayer meeting, and it becomes an ice house. . . . . Terrible to contemplate the mischief which these lukewarm professors make in the church, and in society. Over such as these sinners stumble into perdition. . . . To avoid such a state, go back to your secret closet again; ask the Spirit to help you. To-morrow you may be in your shroud."

The following is taken from an English paper, showing how a man attempted to get immortality through the wrong way, or door (the devil): "A butler in Herefordshire, England, recently stabbed himself four times in the stomach, with a carving-knife. He, however, recovered from his injuries, and upon being asked for what reason he committed the act, said, 'I was cleaning the plate, and a carving-knife was lying before me; the devil came up and tapped me on the shoulder, and after some conversation (hold no parley with him, for 'tis then that he takes the advantage), he told me I must put the knife into my stomach, and then I should become immortal. I then put the shaft of the knife up against the wall, and thrust myself against the point. I am sorry now I took his advice, and I shan't try it on again.'"

Let us give heed to the words of Christ, and then we can keep clear of the devil.

BEREAVEMENT.

This is the bitterest cup of all earth's sorrow: To love tenderly, and then to part, saying that hard, hard word, farewell; to see the stupor of death fast creeping on, and have all efforts to rouse the loved one fail. You may call, but he does not answer. You may even seek for a pressure of the hand, but he does not give it. This is the reality of sorrow.

And then to gaze on that face that shall smile no more upon us; to look into those eyes once full of life and power, and see nothing but cold inanimation; to press those lips together which have so often parted with words of love and lines of song; to stand by the cold side of him, all motionless, who but an hour before was the music of the household, and feel that he will no more come among us; to see the narrow house, and then the hearse with its low, rumbling wheels, appear to carry off the darling; to follow him with slow and measured step to the cold opening made in the earth, so deep, and dark, and awful; to return to the home all desolate and find a blank is there akin to that existing in one region of the soul, which never shall again be filled till Jesus comes: this is the bitterness of grief, the wormwood and the gall.

Thus has it been with many; thus has it been with me. Only two weeks have passed away since Charlie, the youngest of my father's family, went out from life and home. He was but twenty-three, fair, manly, and all we wanted in a son and brother. Beneath the heavy stroke his fall has made, our aged parents bow and tremble, and we all so miss him that 'tis hard to be consoled.

But the good man who came to comfort us, said we should see him yet again, our own loved Charlie, that he would live as real in that bright world which is to be as when he went out from us.

And so I wait, and others wait, heart-stricken now, and sad, but thinking that the time is near when all our bitter grief shall be assuaged by meeting those we've lost, and having them forever.

And we have buried him beneath the snow;
But when the spring appears and flowerets blow,
Some shall be planted o'er his grave,
Foretokening
That in after years, when Christ shall come in power,
What we have sown in dust, an earthly seed,
Shall rise a heavenly flower.

THE VICE OF LYING.

To warn us from lying, we should do well to consider the folly, the meanness, and the wickedness of it.

The folly of lying consists in its defeating its own purpose. A habit of lying is generally detected in the end; and after detection, the liar, instead of deceiving, will not be believed even when he happens to speak the truth. Nay, every single lie is attended with such a variety of circumstances, which lead to a detection, that it is often discovered. The use generally made of a lie is to cover a fault, or to injure some one in the eyes of the world, and by so doing bring them on a level with their own wicked self; but as this end is seldom answered, we only aggravate what we wish to conceal. In point even of prudence, an honest confession would serve us better.

The meanness of lying arises from the cowardice which it implies. We dare not boldly and nobly speak the truth, but have recourse to some subterfuge, which always shows a sordid and disingenuous mind; hence it is that, in the fashionable world, the word liar is always considered as a term of peculiar reproach.

The wickedness of lying consists in its perverting one of the greatest blessings of God—the use of speech; in making that a mischief to mankind which was intended for a benefit. Truth is the greatest bond of society. If one man lies, why may not another? and if there is no mutual truth, there is an end of all intercourse.

An equivocation is nearly related to a lie. It is an intention to deceive under words of a double meaning, or words which, literally speaking, are true; and is equally criminal with the most downright breach of truth. A word or sign may convey a lie as effectually as the most deceitful language.

Under the head of lying may be mentioned a breach of promise. Every engagement, though of the slightest kind, should be punctually observed; and he who does not think himself bound by such an obligation has little pretensions to the character of an honest and upright man. Therefore beware, all you that have taken upon yourselves the guardianship of Father's Book.

LETTER FROM A FREEDMAN.

Bro. Grant:—It is with pleasure that I take my pen in hand to write you a few lines, hoping you will give them a place in the World's Crisis, in order that the brethren and sisters in your city and country may know how we, the Freedmen of the South, receive the word preached by your Advent Mission brethren. Although we are known by different names and titles, our aims are one, to wit, the salvation of the whole human family.

On the 14th of December, Elds. Flagg and Himes came to this city, and have preached to us the cross of Christ. We indeed received the words with joy; because the Bible had never been explained in a clear light to the Freedmen of the South, as it has been explained by Bro. Flagg. We have had ministers of all professions to preach for us, yet they held out like Dr. Palmer that slavery was a divine institution; taking their texts generally from Philemon 1: 10, to prove that Onesimus was a runaway slave, and that he was arrested by the apostle Paul. But now they have heard the truth as it has been explained by our Bro. Flagg. The church is greatly revived. [illegible] have come forward for prayer at a time. Numbers have been converted and added to the church; I trust such as will be saved.

We are now taking leave of Bro. Flagg. He leaves for Memphis this day. Many eyes are filled with tears. I wish he could stay with us; he would do a great deal of good. I hope, however, he will come back and remain with us.

I must close by telling you that I have been a slave all my life, until 1863. I am a licensed preacher. I have been eight times sold like beeves to market; the lowest price that I sold for was $600; the highest $1500. I was carried to Mississippi, where the whip never ceased to fall. I could tell you a great many things concerning the cruelty of the South, but my hand trembles while I write the word cruelty. Please excuse me from writing any thing on the subject at this time.

I am glad that my brethren are free from the bondage of slavery. I am glad to see and hear of so many being made free from the bondage of sin. Yours truly,

Reuben Warner.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The following article is from an English minister, who is a close observer of the signs of the times. The Lord is stirring up men on both continents to sound the note of alarm relative to the close of the present dispensation, and the second coming of Christ, which is close at hand, as all things indicate.—Ed.

The minister says:—

"To speak in the plainest terms—the present almost unnatural calm seems only to be a preparation for a series of storms. We need only look before us, or where we please, and we shall see that nothing is at rest, though all is still. The progress of Russia may first occupy your attention. Now, as far as Europe is concerned, Russia is perfectly still—but is she really at rest? Certainly not. Look beyond ourselves, and we shall find her not only dangerously, but prophetically, in full career. Russia has conquered Circassia, and has established her fleets and armies on and along the shores of the Caspian. She has fully penetrated Central Asia. She is advancing with unswerving step towards Affghanistan first, and India next. Our public journals have conspired together to deceive the nation. Some pretend to ridicule the bugbear of a Russian invasion of India. Others, more benevolent, pretend to rejoice in the progress of civilization. These journals are either scandalously ignorant, or wilfully corrupt! Russia is advancing—not for civilization, but for conquest, and her grandest object is the destruction of British India. It is to India that her whole line of march is directed, and we may hear at any time that she is confronting the British outposts on the confines of Hindostan. We have been thoroughly deceived by our public journals.

There is one point of such importance that it demands a special paragraph for itself. We mean the penetrability of India. This is one of the most momentous questions of our "foreign policy." Third-rate newspapers, like the "Standard" or "Daily Telegraph," rejoice in betraying their ignorance upon these subjects. One told us repeatedly that the Holstein affair was only a jest, and would end in nothing, yet we now see to what it has come, and the "Standard," which told us that it was all a jest, is now raving at it in bitter earnest. In the same manner, these third-rates of journalism are attempting to laugh at the progress of Russia, and point in triumph to the impenetrability of India. "Look at the Himalaya barriers," they say, "who can penetrate them while all the passes of the mountains are occupied by our troops?" But the Himalayas cover India only to the north. The western frontier is accessible, more or less, through Affghanistan and Persia. Persia is not only the ally, but almost the slave of Russia, and Affghanistan will soon be occupied by Russian troops, so that our Indian frontier will prove by no means impenetrable, and we are trusting to a security that does not exist.

It has just been announced that Russia has occupied Samarcand, the renowned capital of Western Tartary and of Timur. This famous city is regarded as the metropolis of the Tartar race, and it is a favorite saying "that when once the Russians have occupied Samarcand the whole Tartar race will re-unite, and spread their victorious bands over all Southern Asia." Samarcand has been taken, and the fulfillment of the prophecy has more than begun. We may be assured that the boastings of our public journals are the result either of ignorance or of shame. We are ashamed of our supineness in permitting the advance of Russia. We are not strong enough to oppose her single-handed, as we found in the Crimea. We know that France will never join us again in an anti-Russian war. We are unable to procure a single ally, and we are ashamed to acknowledge that without an ally we dare not engage in a Russian war; and so our journals, with an indignant heart, put on a face—sometimes of laughter, sometimes of smiles, sometimes pretending to laugh at the idea of a Russian conquest of India—sometimes benignantly smiling at the advance of Russian civilization into the heart of Asia! Do not believe one word, nor be deluded even by the most benignant smile. Russia is advancing to India, and the people of India most justly abhor our name, for we have cheated them—insulted them—treated them like beasts of burden—called them by every opprobrious name—blown them to pieces from our guns by forty at a time—killed them by tens of thousands, and, all the while, we pretended to act from christian love, while our only motives were avarice and ambition. That India will be lost seems a matter of absolute certainty, and in no long time. . . .

This advance of Russian arms to the very centre of Asia, and this progress from Central Asia to the south, is a most marvelous sight. It is marvelous in politics, but far more marvelous in prophecy. Russia is the Gog of the land of Magog, so famous in the prophecy of Ezekiel—and in the last of all the scenes of this blood-stained world, before the earth and all its works shall be burned up. (Rev. ch. 10.) Russia has a mighty part to act in the world's last scene of war. For this mighty part she is now most earnestly preparing, and in equally unconscious of her prophetic position, and of her end. Our efforts in the Crimean war were but like the touch of a spur, which first makes the horse swerve for a moment to one side, and then move on more swiftly in advance. The Crimean war, which we conceitedly thought was to extinguish Russia, has only rendered her more formidable than ever, for it has turned her aside from Turkey for a moment that she might throw all her Asiatic power directly upon our own Indian empire.

The seizure of Samarcand is peculiarly important. It concentrates all the Tartar tribes, and brings them together under the standard of the great Tartar head—the Russian emperor, the successor of Timur and Genghis Khan. Those fierce and warlike shepherds have in all ages been the terror of mankind, both in Europe and Asia, and they are still to act their part once more—on the last and greatest scene of the world's dread history. For this future task they are now unconsciously assembling, and all our anger and affectation will not turn back one squadron of their wild and hideous cavalry. . . .

It is truly surprising to observe the progress of Russia, and compare it with prophecy. We thought, in the Crimean war, that we should have the proud gratification of destroying Russia because she had been guilty of invading Turkey. But we forgot that while we were raging against Russia, we were ourselves far more guilty than Russia, and that we ourselves had set the example, both of perfidy and aggression, by our most unprincipled violence in Hindostan. Well! with blood-stained hands we undertook to teach Russia a lesson of christian meekness, and we prospered as we deserved. After all our efforts, Russia is more powerful than ever—she is still threatening Constantinople as much as before—and, since the Crimean war, she has conquered the whole Circassian race, and has made herself mistress of Central Asia. With immense military material accumulated on the shores of the Caspian and the Sea of Aral, and with war steamers afloat upon those seas, she has fixed her centre of action within the walls of Samarcand, and is calling around her the innumerable hosts of Tartary and Turkistan. She is collecting the original Turkish tribes to destroy Turkey itself, and is advancing rapidly towards India, to punish us as we deserve for our unblushing hypocrisy—for daring to find fault with her aggressions in Turkey, while we had far exceeded her ourselves by our aggressions in the East. The scene of our hypocrisy will be the scene of its punishment, for we shall soon find Russia joined with others against Turkey; and as for India, its loss appears to be inevitable. Our wretched public press dares not tell us the truth—it dares not risk its popularity—and we stand still, with a smile of affected scorn, while Russia is moving on with unaffected jubilation! But all this is a preparation for our impending ruin.

The prophetic advance of Russian arms, is, as we have said, truly surprising. Many persons have fallen into the mistake of confounding Gog with Antichrist. Others have fallen into the greater mistake of imagining that both Antichrist and Gog (as two distinct personages) are to appear, one as well as the other, before the millennial reign has begun. Such opinions lead on to endless confusion, and tend to deface altogether all the "Signs of the Times." But these mistakes will be suppressed if we carefully observe the present achievements of Russia. It is evident at once that Russia has chosen a field of action completely distinct from that of Antichrist. The two grand chiefs of the Apostasy have set up their standards on points diametrically opposite. The place of antichrist is, of course, the Roman empire, and, no doubt, Babylon and other provinces lying a little beyond the Roman frontier. Whereas Russia is advancing to Central Asia, descending southwards towards India, and spreading out her arms "as he that swimmeth," from Central Asia to China. Russia has taken a line of country quite remote from that of Antichrist, and is exhausting all her energies so profusely in one direction that she has no resources left for the conquest of the Roman world. She cannot have both the Roman and the Trans-Euphrates world; the resources of no nation have ever been adequate to both. Even ancient Rome never ventured beyond the Euphrates. Russia, unequal to conquer both, has left the Roman world to Antichrist, and chosen for herself the Trans-Euphrates empire. Therefore, the "Prince of Rosh" and the Last Head of the Roman world must be two distinct persons. Such a conclusion is morally certain from the simple observation of the field of Russian enterprize. Russia does not interfere with the Antichrist either in time or in place, but continues patiently to extend her arms—to build up her empire—and to wait her hour, as she thinks, for universal dominion, but, as prophecy has announced, for universal destruction.

TOBACCO.

Most who use tobacco admit it is a practice unnecessary, and wish they never had learned to use it. No candid man ever told me to use it, but just the reverse. 'Tis too bad to inhale its fumes on most of the public conveyances and in our streets. Fumes of smoke that make one cough, pools of saliva that make one almost sick, meet us all around. Strange that otherwise civil persons forget this breach of civility.

Take a piece of clean white paper, hold it over the bowl of a pipe a while, and enough poison will adhere which, if put on a cat's tongue, will throw her into convulsions and kill her in a few minutes. Of course what will kill cats will not prolong human life.

Some soldiers in the East Indies bound tobacco under their arm-pits, making themselves severely ill, in order to shirk duty. A woman, wishing to cure a child's cold, put a plaster of snuff and lard on its chest; but it died in a short time in consequence. A sensitively organized French poet was made seriously ill by inhaling the flavor [?] of a tobacco field which he passed.

Thoughtless fathers smoke in the room where little children are, often weakening their eyes by so doing. Most loafers, rowdies, thieves and blackguards use it, and for decent sensible men to use it is too bad. Why do you do it? It is no good, never was, and never will be.

I have intimated it was poison. The following is from an excellent medical work, viz., "New England Popular Medicine":—"The active property of tobacco consists of an essential oil, a few drops of which cause instant death. . . . But notwithstanding its poisonous effects, it is in daily use as a sedative and anodyne. Does the human race need such an incessant carminative? Do the vital powers require this constant stimulant? Must the flame of life be daily extinguished, to a certain extent, to support existence? Is not human life supportable without it? Must a stream of smoke and of nauseous saliva from the mouth be continually kept up to get through the day with comfort?"

Prof. O. S. Fowler says in his own most earnest language:—

"Tobacco is a powerful, pungent irritant, a rank, narcotic poison; it inflames the organism, vulgarizes the passions, and deadens the moral tone. To chew or smoke at all, proportionally sensualizes, begets spitfire irritability, unclean amatory, and other morbid desires, blunts intellect, and deteriorates offspring. Why the discharge of so much saliva manufactured right out of red blood, but because so obnoxious? Besides, how utterly vile and loathsome! What would hire you to retake into your mouth one of these vile pools you discharge! Yet are they really more nauseating and utterly filthy after than before their discharge? Just those very same arguments in kind, though less in degree, you apply to alcoholic intemperance, apply also to tobacco intemperance. Does not this often cause that by throwing the whole being into a fevered, hankering, half-crazed state? What are your horrible morning tremors but nervous reaction consequent on its ravages? Does it not, like alcohol, produce actual delirium tremens? and, by precisely the same means, racking the nervous system and brain? And the more you must have it, the greater damage is it doing your body, intellect, and morals. And this you know, admit, yet chew on! Are you, then, so very worthless, even in your own eyes, that you thus wantonly deprave your own spirit-life itself? Why will you thus, your own self, cripple your noble capabilities, your godlike attributes? Be entreated, for example's sake, for family's sake, especially for your-own sake, to abandon a practice so vile, so self-destructive; nor ever allow any thing to pass the threshold of your lips except what may harmlessly permeate your entire system."—Phrenological Journal, Vol. xix. No. 3.

Its use tends to insanity, in a greater or less degree, as the following extract from a speech before the French Academy of Science shows:—

"It has been proved that the increase of lunacy in France has kept pace with the augmentation of the revenue from tobacco. From the years 1812 to 1832, that tax produced 28,000,000, and the lunatic asylums of the country contained 8,000 patients. The tobacco revenue has now reached the sum of 180,000,000, and there are no less than 44,000 paralytic and lunatic patients in the various hospitals devoted to their accommodation. This parallel has been drawn by M. Jolly, and laid before the Academy of Science. The last words of his speech on that occasion are worth recording, in this age of universal smoking; and young boys, to whom this pernicious practice has not yet become second nature, would do well to reflect, ere it be too late, on the frightful warning the above statistics contain, as well as on M. Jolly's words. He says:—'The immoderate use of tobacco, and more especially of the pipe, produces a weakness in the brain, and in the spinal marrow, which causes madness.'"

It is expensive. Millions of dollars are thrown away on this poison every year. It is outrageously wicked! I might give the details of its cost, with the figures, but it is unnecessary. I know an old gent who chews over 25 cents' worth per week, and he "can't afford" to take a weekly newspaper at $2.50 per year!

Boys use tobacco because they see older persons using it generally, thinking it manly to ape this habit of their elders. It is more monkey-like to imitate the traits of others. Sometimes when hunters wish to catch monkies, they go where they are to be found, and wash their faces in view of the monkies; then leave a pan of warm glue, and go off. Soon the monkies come down from the trees, and wash their faces in this glue; consequently their eyes get stuck together, when they fall an easy prey. So youngsters who imitate older persons in using tobacco become blind to its deadly effects, and fall a prey to its power at last.

I read of a man who shaved himself before a monkey, against which he had a spite. When he finished he drew the back of the razor across his throat, and went out. The monkey thought he would shave himself too, and when he finished drew the razor across his throat, but the edge not being turned where the back was, his throat got cut. Now you, youngsters, if you imitate men in tobacco using, perhaps it may turn with you as it did with the monkey above named. Do not, for pity's sake, use it. In the name of all that is decent, right, and noble, flee from it.

I might say more of its deadly effects, its filthiness and uselessness; but I have said enough, perhaps, here. So it remains for you to do what is right about it. J. N. Berry.

CATARRH AGAIN.

J. Nelson Babb, from western New York, writes wishing me to give through the Crisis information relative to the kind of hemlock I had reference to in my remedy for Catarrh. I would say I did not mean the poison hemlock, or sciuta, which Socrates drank; but the common forest hemlock.

Dry the leaves, smoke them in a common clay pipe three times a day. It has cured, will cure, when every thing else fails.

PASSING AWAY.

We are passing away:
Away from a season of smiles and of tears;
Away from a season of hopes and of fears;
Away from a season of sorrow and sin;
Away from a season of strivings within;
Away from all seasons of toil and of care;
From anger and turmoil, from grief and despair.

We are almost home:
Home to the birthplace of love and of light;
Home to the harbor of endless delight;
Home to a sure, endless season of rest;
Home to the land of the pure and the blest;
Where the song of rejoicing never shall cease,
In the land of purity, blessedness, peace.

We are passing away:
Away, yes away from the loved ones on earth;
Away from the long endeared family hearth;
Away from the clustering joys of yours;
Away from the mingling of smiles and of tears;
Away from the graves where our loved ones lie low;
Away from much that we cherish below.

We are almost home:
Home to that home where our Father will greet us;
Home to that home where the ransomed will meet us;
Home to that home where partings are never,
Holy communings and fellowship ever;
Where treasures, enduring and rare, lie in store;
Home of the faithful! Home evermore!

We are passing away:
Away from the moment which seems to be ours;
Away from the moments, away from the hours;
Away from all that we have been and are;
Away, swift away to the judgment bar;
Away and away to eternity's shore;
From now and from then to the great Evermore.

We are almost home:
O rapturous thought! O blissful desire!
We have almost attained that to which we aspire;
Such fullness of joy! such fullness of love!
Perfection of peace to that city above!
Filled with the glorious presence of God,
The Spirit divine, and Jesus our Lord.

GLORYING IN INFIRMITIES AND TRIBULATIONS.

Paul did what it takes a christian to do,—he gladly gloried in infirmities. Why? That the power of Christ might rest upon him. Others might rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, the glory that shall be revealed.—Bright prospects make bright hopes, and bright hopes make cheerful hearts. No wonder that Paul, or any other one, could rejoice in hope; but to "glory in tribulations," and "in infirmities," and such trying things,—that is hard work, and quite another question, for any but a Christian.

Paul gives us one of the best reasons for glorying in these things. He wanted the advantages of a good discipline. Here is his synopsis of the process of discipline: Tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed. Now Paul wanted the hope of the glory of God, the hope that maketh not ashamed, a hope which supposes that the love of God is shed abroad in the heart.

This hope he loved to rejoice in, and he knew it would not be a good one unless he had an experience to support it. He could not get the experience without patience; he must have either patience or impatience; one would be a good foundation on which to build a perfect experience; the other nothing good.

Experience is knowledge gained by practice; and patience is necessary to get knowledge; for an impatient, fretting, uneasy, chafing disposition never can learn or know any thing good. It cannot wait long enough to learn. One must have patience, and "patience" must "have her perfect work" in working experience; so there must be a place to put patience, and the tribulations which occur furnish the place to put the patience in. In other words, furnish an opportunity to use it.

Oh! what precious lessons have been learned by patiently holding "still" in the fiery furnace. It does certainly give patience a trial. Some sometimes say that impatience gets tired, but impatience cannot bear trial; that is its great fault. Nothing but true patience can bear the "furnace heat" when it makes the heart quiver in anguish. But it is so good to have the gracious power (for the most patient man in the world could not patiently hold still in tribulation unless God helped him) to be able to get all the good out of the seeming evil of tribulations and infirmities, and so treasure up an experience like tried gold, enriching its possessor, so that he can have as a glorious final result a "hope which maketh not ashamed."

David prayed, "Let me not be ashamed of my hope." But many are so ashamed of "the little hope" they have they scarcely dare "indulge" it; they are obliged to pet it, and sometimes fear that it is not good for any thing. The great reason is they are afraid of the fiery trial of "tribulation." Tribulation means "threshing," and they cannot bear to have the good grain threshed out of the straw and separated from the chaff; or to have their hearts taken upon God's great anvil and beaten and moulded into a proper spirit and temper, that they may be able to see clearly with a good hope, through grace, into the promised land.

There is an admirable old poem which expresses the idea forcibly. It makes one seem to feel the heat of the fire and the weight of the blows, to wit:

"Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flame doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers,
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I answer, 'As God will,'
And, trusting in his name, hold still.

He comes and takes my heart all heated,
On his hard anvil, minded so,
And turns it o'er and o'er, and beats it,
And lets it cool, and lets it glow;
And yet I whisper, 'As God will,'
And in his mighty hand hold still." *

Tribulation and infirmities are closely related. By one comes a good hope; by the other a blessed experience of "the power of Christ." Paul did not at first glory in infirmities as much as he did in tribulation. He desired to have the "infirmity," the "thorn in the flesh," taken away. He prayed three times, Lord, take the "thorn" away, remove this "infirmity," send away this messenger of Satan;" and the answer came,—"My grace shall be sufficient for thee." Paul took that promise as a "note" in full to cover all his "liabilities," "damages," etc. He knew God's "bank of grace" was sustained by a full capital; so as soon as the promise came he ceased praying. He had received in answer to prayer, not what he asked for, but what he most needed. So he exultingly cries out,—"Most gladly will I glory in infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

Here is something paradoxical. I should call it by the anomalous title of paradoxical parallel, to wit:

Tribulation—a hope which maketh not ashamed.

Infirmities—the power of Christ resting on you. Oh! how blessed it is to know that while Father finds us in a world of sin and evil, he can bring us up out of the tribulation with our robes all washed in the blood of the Lamb, all the fiery trials purifying us.

There is a great truth in this fact, which want of time and a dread of long articles will not permit me to notice. It is sufficient to say that it contains the full solution of the reason why God lets sin and Satan hold their sway for six thousand years. Thank God, their reign is almost over. Soon the day of deliverance will come, and the purified ones will be sufficiently disciplined to ensure their safety in the kingdom.

* The remainder of the poem is not at hand, and I have not room to give it. It is so expressive and beautiful that at some future time, when convenient, I will send it to the Crisis for publication.

GOD'S CONVERTS.

There is no cause so absurd but that it may gain adherents. A live church will have conversions; but additions by no means prove that a church is holy. Every thing depends upon the character of the converts; not what they were before, but what they are after their conversion. The old Pharisees were extremely zealous; they compassed sea and land to make one proselyte; but he was no better, but rather the worse, for his conversion. Is it not so with many converts at the present time? Is there, as far as human observation extends, any reformation? Is not their piety, so called, in reality bigotry? Do they cease loving the world?

In a new country, the first thing to be done to clear off the forests is to cut down the trees. After they have laid sufficiently long, if fire is applied at the right period, much of the labor in clearing off the land is obviated. But a poor burn is worse than nothing. The kindling wood—the leaves, and smaller twigs, are consumed, while the large brush remains to be removed piece by piece. So a superficial revival burns over the ground and renders it almost impossible to promote a thorough work of grace. The consciousness of guilt, and the apprehension of the wrath to come, which irreligious persons generally feel, render them accessible to the arrows of divine truth.

But a profession of religion—no matter how poor the kind, or how poorly sustained—operates as an armor through which the sword of the Spirit with difficulty penetrates. For conversions to be a blessing, and not a curse, the church must be in a state of salvation. The Bible standard of religion must be held up in the testimony and in the lives of professing christians. If they are proud and covetous—if the women are fond of fashion and display, adorning themselves in gold, and pearls, and costly array—if the men love the world and are bent on making money, as will always be the case when extravagance is to be maintained—then the converts will partake of the same general character.

Some months since, we saw at the altar a young lady seeking pardon. She seemed deeply in earnest and professed a willingness to "come out from the world and be separate." She was taken to another altar where the Bible requirements concerning dress were not insisted on. She put on extra jewelry after going to that altar. She was taught to believe in Jesus, professed faith in him, and went away to lead as vain and fashionable a life as before. But conviction was silenced, and the heart was hardened.

"Cursed be he that doeth the work of God deceitfully." Do not suffer souls under your influence to be deceived, if you can help it. Let them know what it is to be a christian. Tell them plainly and kindly what are the fruits of the true christian character. Let the Bible standard of religion be held up so plainly that there can be no doubt as to what is meant by becoming religious. Every person engaged in promoting the salvation of souls—and every follower of Jesus engaged in this work—should have, in their experience, the prayer of the Psalmist answered; and the result which he mentions will be sure to follow: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit. THEN will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."—Earnest Christian.

DONATE? HOW CAN YOU?

What have you left to donate for purposes of charity and mercy, truth and salvation, after the expenditures of the day, consuming on pride, lust, and fashion? What have you to donate for objects benevolent, after building popish temples, popishly adorned—after counting the cost of opera-choirs, high salaries, idolatry in dress and equipage, the money expended in feastings, at pleasure-parties, in things luxurious, extravagant, and positively injurious—novels, wine, and tobacco?—what is there left for Bibles, tracts, missions; for the poor, the oppressed, and the perishing? Friends, are you aware that you are stewards? that, by and by, God will call you to account for every farthing consumed on lust, pride, fashion and folly? Do you ever think on Him who went about doing good, healing all manner of disease, and had not where to lay his head?

Give? what have they to give for any benevolent enterprise, after deducting bills for dress, equipage, pastimes, luxurious feastings? Give? what have they to give when all is on the back or in the wardrobe? The great mass of the people are living above their income. Who can doubt this wicked expenditure of God's bounty to gratify pride, ostentation, fashionable etiquette, is one special cause of the late awful visitation, the fearful judgments of the Almighty? Look here—

A fashionable dry goods dealer advertises a lace scarf, worth fifteen hundred dollars. Another has a bridal dress, for which he asks twelve hundred. Bonnets at two hundred dollars are not unfrequently sold. Cashmeres, from three hundred dollars upward, are seen by dozens in a walk along Broadway. A hundred dollars is quite a common price for a silk gown. In a word, extravagance in dress has reached a height which would have frightened our prudent grandmothers and appalled their husbands. A fashionable lady spends, annually, on her milliner, mantua-maker, and lace dealer, a sum that would have supported an entire household, even in her own rank in life, in the days of Mrs. Washington. A thousand dollars a year is considered, we are told, quite a narrow income for such purposes, among those pretending to be "in society" in some of our cities. Add to this the expenditure for opera tickets, for a summer trip to the Springs, and for a score of little inevitable et ceteras, and the reader gets some idea of the comparatively wanton waste of money, carried on year after year, by thousands, if not tens of thousands, of American women.

And for what end? Do these human butterflies improve their intellect, enlarge their culture, or elevate their characters, by this spendthrift system? On the contrary, they deteriorate all. Do they bestow additional happiness on their husbands and fathers? The very reverse; for to sustain these extravagances, the father or husband, as the case may be, toils late and early, consumes his health, and often is driven into wild speculations that end in utter ruin.

Do they win the approval of the other sex? Never was the esteem of any worthy man secured by a costly, reckless style of dress. All that this perilous extravagance effects, is to gratify miserable, personal vanity. The fostering of one of the most petty of human vices, is the only result of these spendthrift habits. Mrs. Potiphar plumes herself on having outshone her rival in laces, at some grand soiree, or in having worn more jewels; and that is the single, barren harvest which she reaps by the expenditure of thousands. Can the pampering of such vanity benefit her or others? Alas! the women who live for such triumphs as these, whose whole souls are given to diamonds and dress, are little fitted to be wives or mothers, to be companions for men or educators of children. When the Roman matrons sunk to a similar condition, Rome began from that hour to decline.

Stop and think, friend. Think twice, three times, before you purchase. Do you really need the article? It is probably a pretty trifle in dress, in furniture; but what solid benefit will it be to you? Or is it some luxury for the table that you can as well do without? Think, therefore, before you spend your money. Or, you need a new carpet, new sofa, new chairs, new bedstead, or a new dress; you are tempted to buy something a little handsomer than you had intended; and while you hesitate, the dealer will say to you, "It's only a trifle more, and see how far prettier it is." But, before you purchase, stop and think. Will you be the better a year hence, much less in old age, for having squandered your money? Is it not wiser to "lay by something for a rainy day," and for doing good? All these luxuries gratify you only for the moment; you soon tire of them; and their only permanent effect is to consume your means, and debar you from deeds of mercy. It is by such little extravagances, not much separately, but ruinous in the aggregate, that the great majority of families are kept comparatively poor. The first lesson to learn is to deny yourself useless expenses; and the first step towards learning this lesson, is to think before you spend, and not only think, but ask God. Our stewardship comes into requisition. Have we any right whatever to squander God's money on things trifling, useless, or merely to gratify fancy, the lust of pride, ambition or extravagance?

Think of the poor,—the ten thousand objects of charity. Think, will it not be more pleasing to my heavenly Father to deny myself this gratification, and devote the amount to cause the widow's heart to sing for joy? What we presume to call ours, is not ours, but God's. By and by, "Give account of thy stewardship."—Home Thrusts.

LAST CRISIS.

That we are living in the last crisis, or last generation, is now a fixed fact, proved by every fulfillment of prophecy, and believed in by all classes, skeptics as well as believers. It is evidenced by the thousand and one reports we are having continually from every kind of source, all going to show that we are living in an unparalleled age in the commission of crime, without we except the days of Noah and Lot, as the following extracts will show:

The Portland Advertiser of Jan. 4th, 1866, says in an article headed, "Murders and Executions," quoting from the Philadelphian Age: "The highest of all crimes is frightfully on the increase. . . . It is startling to compare the number of murders and executions during the past year, and to see with what ease the criminal is permitted to escape. . . . In 1864 there were in the United States 682 murders—not accidental killing—but real murders. And how many executions followed? Just 98. . . . And things have naturally been growing worse and worse every year since."

Says the Independent, "The present times bid fair to be distinguished pre-eminently as a period of crime. . . . The progress of the grosser forms of wickedness are facts frightful to observe, and more frightful to ponder. Every newspaper is laden with the records of such. They make the staple news of the day. They load and darken the columns of all journals, till one trembles to take up the morning paper, is afraid to have it read in the family, and lays it down with a sense of heart sickness, . . . a keen apprehension of what is to be expected in the future. It is not those who are avowedly worldly and godless in their lives. . . . Teachers, physicians, lawyers, ministers, the young not only, but the aged, in well nigh equal measure. All seem to be smitten with the foul contagion."

The Portland Enquirer states that at a murder trial in San Francisco, the district attorney stated that 1200 murders had taken place within four years.

Says the World, of New York, in a late issue: "The dark deeds of murders, etc., daily blacken the pages of our journals." The same paper, speaking of the coming of the cholera, calls it an Atilla in its ravages. "This, to-day, incomprehensible scourge of God."

Says the Christian Press, of Cincinnati, Ohio: "Brethren, the crisis of the world is come. Are we prepared for it? Can we resign all the interests of an earthly life, and identify ourselves with the will of God and spiritual excellence? Can we stand in the whirlwind, talk with the thunder, and look calmly on heaven when God looks forth in indignation on a guilty world? Are we prepared with serene joy and holy confidence to unite in the song of Moses and the Lamb, when the plagues of heaven shall fall on the wicked, and the earth shall be filled with wailing and blasphemy?"

Before me lies the programme of the concert given at the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, and judging from the name of the institution, we should judge that the programme might have been filled with selections from the Oratorios of The Messiah—David—The Creation, etc., but true to the description given by Paul of the form of godliness, the programme stood thus: "Part first. 1. Overture, Caliph of Bagdad. 2. Polka. 3. Declamation. 4. Berlin Waltz. 5. Polka. 6. Polka. 7. Lily White Quadrille. 8. Polka.

Part second. 1. Waltz. 2. Duet. 3. Wedding March. 4. Irish Polka. 5. Johnny Schmaucker. 6. Hanover Waltz. 7. Gallop. 8. Quadrille Polka."

I wonder if John Wesley were alive now, if he would know his followers? I do not think you would find him listening to Irish Polkas. It fulfills Scripture,—"Departing from the faith."

Rev. T. L. Cuyler, in the Independent of Sept. 7, 1865, says of lukewarm christians, "I would not exchange the prayers and power of a single servant girl, that I have in my Brooklyn church, for five hundred of these petrified professors sitting around the communion table in meaningless mockery of a crucified Master. . . . Put a score of lukewarm professors into a prayer meeting, and it becomes an ice house. . . . . Terrible to contemplate the mischief which these lukewarm professors make in the church, and in society. Over such as these sinners stumble into perdition. . . . To avoid such a state, go back to your secret closet again; ask the Spirit to help you. To-morrow you may be in your shroud."

The following is taken from an English paper, showing how a man attempted to get immortality through the wrong way, or door (the devil): "A butler in Herefordshire, England, recently stabbed himself four times in the stomach, with a carving-knife. He, however, recovered from his injuries, and upon being asked for what reason he committed the act, said, 'I was cleaning the plate, and a carving-knife was lying before me; the devil came up and tapped me on the shoulder, and after some conversation (hold no parley with him, for 'tis then that he takes the advantage), he told me I must put the knife into my stomach, and then I should become immortal. I then put the shaft of the knife up against the wall, and thrust myself against the point. I am sorry now I took his advice, and I shan't try it on again.'"

Let us give heed to the words of Christ, and then we can keep clear of the devil.

For the World's Crisis.

BEREAVEMENT.

This is the bitterest cup of all earth's sorrow: To love tenderly, and then to part, saying that hard, hard word, farewell; to see the stupor of death fast creeping on, and have all efforts to rouse the loved one fail. You may call, but he does not answer. You may even seek for a pressure of the hand, but he does not give it. This is the reality of sorrow.

And then to gaze on that face that shall smile no more upon us; to look into those eyes once full of life and power, and see nothing but cold inanimation; to press those lips together which have so often parted with words of love and lines of song; to stand by the cold side of him, all motionless, who but an hour before was the music of the household, and feel that he will no more come among us; to see the narrow house, and then the hearse with its low, rumbling wheels, appear to carry off the darling; to follow him with slow and measured step to the cold opening made in the earth, so deep, and dark, and awful; to return to the home all desolate and find a blank is there akin to that existing in one region of the soul, which never shall again be filled till Jesus comes: this is the bitterness of grief, the wormwood and the gall.

Thus has it been with many; thus has it been with me. Only two weeks have passed away since Charlie, the youngest of my father's family, went out from life and home. He was but twenty-three, fair, manly, and all we wanted in a son and brother. Beneath the heavy stroke his fall has made, our aged parents bow and tremble, and we all so miss him that 'tis hard to be consoled.

But the good man who came to comfort us, said we should see him yet again, our own loved Charlie, that he would live as real in that bright world which is to be as when he went out from us.

And so I wait, and others wait, heart-stricken now, and sad, but thinking that the time is near when all our bitter grief shall be assuaged by meeting those we've lost, and having them forever.

And we have buried him beneath the snow;
But when the spring appears and flowerets blow,
Some shall be planted o'er his grave,
Foretokening
That in after years, when Christ shall come in power,
What we have sown in dust, an earthly seed,
Shall rise a heavenly flower.

THE VICE OF LYING.

To warn us from lying, we should do well to consider the folly, the meanness, and the wickedness of it.

The folly of lying consists in its defeating its own purpose. A habit of lying is generally detected in the end; and after detection, the liar, instead of deceiving, will not be believed even when he happens to speak the truth. Nay, every single lie is attended with such a variety of circumstances, which lead to a detection, that it is often discovered. The use generally made of a lie is to cover a fault, or to injure some one in the eyes of the world, and by so doing bring them on a level with their own wicked self; but as this end is seldom answered, we only aggravate what we wish to conceal. In point even of prudence, an honest confession would serve us better.

The meanness of lying arises from the cowardice which it implies. We dare not boldly and nobly speak the truth, but have recourse to some subterfuge, which always shows a sordid and disingenuous mind; hence it is that, in the fashionable world, the word liar is always considered as a term of peculiar reproach.

The wickedness of lying consists in its perverting one of the greatest blessings of God—the use of speech; in making that a mischief to mankind which was intended for a benefit. Truth is the greatest bond of society. If one man lies, why may not another? and if there is no mutual truth, there is an end of all intercourse.

An equivocation is nearly related to a lie. It is an intention to deceive under words of a double meaning, or words which, literally speaking, are true; and is equally criminal with the most downright breach of truth. A word or sign may convey a lie as effectually as the most deceitful language.

Under the head of lying may be mentioned a breach of promise. Every engagement, though of the slightest kind, should be punctually observed; and he who does not think himself bound by such an obligation has little pretensions to the character of an honest and upright man. Therefore beware, all you that have taken upon yourselves the guardianship of Father's flock. SARAH H. DUNN.

LETTER FROM A FREEDMAN.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with pleasure that I take my pen in hand to write you a few lines, hoping you will give them a place in the World's Crisis, in order that the brethren and sisters in your city and country may know how we, the Freedmen of the South, receive the word preached by your Advent Mission brethren. Although we are known by different names and titles, our aims are one, to wit, the salvation of the whole human family.

On the 14th of December, Elds. Flagg and Himes came to this city, and have preached to us the cross of Christ. We indeed received the words with joy; because the Bible had never been explained in a clear light to the Freedmen of the South, as it has been explained by Bro. Flagg. We have had ministers of all professions to preach for us, yet they held out like Dr. Palmer that slavery was a divine institution; taking their texts generally from Philemon 1: 10, to prove that Onesimus was a runaway slave, and that he was arrested by the apostle Paul. But now they have heard the truth as it has been explained by our Bro. Flagg. The church is greatly revived. [illegible] have come forward for prayer at a time. Numbers have been converted and added to the church; I trust such as will be saved.

We are now taking leave of Bro. Flagg. He leaves for Memphis this day. Many eyes are filled with tears. I wish he could stay with us; he would do a great deal of good. I hope, however, he will come back and remain with us.

I must close by telling you that I have been a slave all my life, until 1863. I am a licensed preacher. I have been eight times sold like beeves to market; the lowest price that I sold for was $600; the highest $1500. I was carried to Mississippi, where the whip never ceased to fall. I could tell you a great many things concerning the cruelty of the South, but my hand trembles while I write the word cruelty. Please excuse me from writing any thing on the subject at this time.

I am glad that my brethren are free from the bondage of slavery. I am glad to see and hear of so many being made free from the bondage of sin. Yours truly,

REUBEN WARNER.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The following article is from an English minister, who is a close observer of the signs of the times. The Lord is stirring up men on both continents to sound the note of alarm relative to the close of the present dispensation, and the second coming of Christ, which is close at hand, as all things indicate.—ED.

The minister says:—

"To speak in the plainest terms—the present almost unnatural calm seems only to be a preparation for a series of storms. We need only look before us, or where we please, and we shall see that nothing is at rest, though all is still. The progress of Russia may first occupy your attention. Now, as far as Europe is concerned, Russia is perfectly still—but is she really at rest? Certainly not. Look beyond ourselves, and we shall find her not only dangerously, but prophetically, in full career. Russia has conquered Circassia, and has established her fleets and armies on and along the shores of the Caspian. She has fully penetrated Central Asia. She is advancing with unswerving step towards Affghanistan first, and India next. Our public journals have conspired together to deceive the nation. Some pretend to ridicule the bugbear of a Russian invasion of India. Others, more benevolent, pretend to rejoice in the progress of civilization. These journals are either scandalously ignorant, or wilfully corrupt! Russia is advancing—not for civilization, but for conquest, and her grandest object is the destruction of British India. It is to India that her whole line of march is directed, and we may hear at any time that she is confronting the British outposts on the confines of Hindostan. We have been thoroughly deceived by our public journals.

There is one point of such importance that it demands a special paragraph for itself. We mean the penetrability of India. This is one of the most momentous questions of our "foreign policy." Third-rate newspapers, like the "Standard" or "Daily Telegraph," rejoice in betraying their ignorance upon these subjects. One told us repeatedly that the Holstein affair was only a jest, and would end in nothing, yet we now see to what it has come, and the "Standard," which told us that it was all a jest, is now raving at it in bitter earnest. In the same manner, these third-rates of journalism are attempting to laugh at the progress of Russia, and point in triumph to the impenetrability of India. "Look at the Himalaya barriers," they say, "who can penetrate them while all the passes of the mountains are occupied by our troops?" But the Himalayas cover India only to the north. The western frontier is accessible, more or less, through Affghanistan and Persia. Persia is not only the ally, but almost the slave of Russia, and Affghanistan will soon be occupied by Russian troops, so that our Indian frontier will prove by no means impenetrable, and we are trusting to a security that does not exist.

It has just been announced that Russia has occupied Samarcand, the renowned capital of Western Tartary and of Timur. This famous city is regarded as the metropolis of the Tartar race, and it is a favorite saying "that when once the Russians have occupied Samarcand the whole Tartar race will re-unite, and spread their victorious bands over all Southern Asia." Samarcand has been taken, and the fulfillment of the prophecy has more than begun. We may be assured that the boastings of our public journals are the result either of ignorance or of shame. We are ashamed of our supineness in permitting the advance of Russia. We are not strong enough to oppose her single-handed, as we found in the Crimea. We know that France will never join us again in an anti-Russian war. We are unable to procure a single ally, and we are ashamed to acknowledge that without an ally we dare not engage in a Russian war; and so our journals, with an indignant heart, put on a face—sometimes of laughter, sometimes of smiles, sometimes pretending to laugh at the idea of a Russian conquest of India—sometimes benignantly smiling at the advance of Russian civilization into the heart of Asia! Do not believe one word, nor be deluded even by the most benignant smile. Russia is advancing to India, and the people of India most justly abhor our name, for we have cheated them—insulted them—treated them like beasts of burden—called them by every opprobrious name—blown them to pieces from our guns by forty at a time—killed them by tens of thousands, and, all the while, we pretended to act from christian love, while our only motives were avarice and ambition. That India will be lost seems a matter of absolute certainty, and in no long time. . . .

This advance of Russian arms to the very centre of Asia, and this progress from Central Asia to the south, is a most marvelous sight. It is marvelous in politics, but far more marvelous in prophecy. Russia is the Gog of the land of Magog, so famous in the prophecy of Ezekiel—and in the last of all the scenes of this blood-stained world, before the earth and all its works shall be burned up. (Rev. ch. 10.) Russia has a mighty part to act in the world's last scene of war. For this mighty part she is now most earnestly preparing, and is equally unconscious of her prophetic position, and of her end. Our efforts in the Crimean war were but like the touch of a spur, which first makes the horse swerve for a moment to one side, and then move on more swiftly in advance. The Crimean war, which we conceitedly thought was to extinguish Russia, has only rendered her more formidable than ever, for it has turned her aside from Turkey for a moment that she might throw all her Asiatic power directly upon our own Indian empire.

The seizure of Samarcand is peculiarly important. It concentrates all the Tartar tribes, and brings them together under the standard of the great Tartar head—the Russian emperor, the successor of Timur and Genghis Khan. Those fierce and warlike shepherds have in all ages been the terror of mankind, both in Europe and Asia, and they are still to act their part once more—on the last and greatest scene of the world's dread history. For this future task they are now unconsciously assembling, and all our anger and affectation will not turn back one squadron of their wild and hideous cavalry. . . .

It is truly surprising to observe the progress of Russia, and compare it with prophecy. We thought, in the Crimean war, that we should have the proud gratification of destroying Russia because she had been guilty of invading Turkey. But we forgot that while we were raging against Russia, we were ourselves far more guilty than Russia, and that we ourselves had set the example, both of perfidy and aggression, by our most unprincipled violence in Hindostan. Well! with blood-stained hands we undertook to teach Russia a lesson of christian meekness, and we prospered as we deserved. After all our efforts, Russia is more powerful than ever—she is still threatening Constantinople as much as before—and, since the Crimean war, she has conquered the whole Circassian race, and has made herself mistress of Central Asia. With immense military material accumulated on the shores of the Caspian and the Sea of Aral, and with war steamers afloat upon those seas, she has fixed her centre of action within the walls of Samarcand, and is calling around her the innumerable hosts of Tartary and Turkistan. She is collecting the original Turkish tribes to destroy Turkey itself, and is advancing rapidly towards India, to punish us as we deserve for our unblushing hypocrisy—for daring to find fault with her aggressions in Turkey, while we had far exceeded her ourselves by our aggressions in the East. The scene of our hypocrisy will be the scene of its punishment, for we shall soon find Russia joined with others against Turkey; and as for India, its loss appears to be inevitable. Our wretched public press dares not tell us the truth—it dares not risk its popularity—and we stand still, with a smile of affected scorn, while Russia is moving on with unaffected jubilation! But all this is a preparation for our impending ruin.

The prophetic advance of Russian arms, is, as we have said, truly surprising. Many persons have fallen into the mistake of confounding Gog with Antichrist. Others have fallen into the greater mistake of imagining that both Antichrist and Gog (as two distinct personages) are to appear, one as well as the other, before the millennial reign has begun. Such opinions lead on to endless confusion, and tend to deface altogether all the "Signs of the Times." But these mistakes will be suppressed if we carefully observe the present achievements of Russia. It is evident at once that Russia has chosen a field of action completely distinct from that of Antichrist. The two grand chiefs of the Apostasy have set up their standards on points diametrically opposite. The place of antichrist is, of course, the Roman empire, and, no doubt, Babylon and other provinces lying a little beyond the Roman frontier. Whereas Russia is advancing to Central Asia, descending southwards towards India, and spreading out her arms "as he that swimmeth," from Central Asia to China. Russia has taken a line of country quite remote from that of Antichrist, and is exhausting all her energies so profusely in one direction that she has no resources left for the conquest of the Roman world. She cannot have both the Roman and the Trans-Euphrates world; the resources of no nation have ever been adequate to both. Even ancient Rome never ventured beyond the Euphrates. Russia, unequal to conquer both, has left the Roman world to Antichrist, and chosen for herself the Trans-Euphrates empire. Therefore, the "Prince of Rosh" and the Last Head of the Roman world must be two distinct persons. Such a conclusion is morally certain from the simple observation of the field of Russian enterprize. Russia does not interfere with the Antichrist either in time or in place, but continues patiently to extend her arms—to build up her empire—and to wait her hour, as she thinks, for universal dominion, but, as prophecy has announced, for universal destruction.

TOBACCO.

Most who use tobacco admit it is a practice unnecessary, and wish they never had learned to use it. No candid man ever told me to use it, but just the reverse. 'Tis too bad to inhale its fumes on most of the public conveyances and in our streets. Fumes of smoke that make one cough, pools of saliva that make one almost sick, meet us all around. Strange that otherwise civil persons forget this breach of civility.

Take a piece of clean white paper, hold it over the bowl of a pipe a while, and enough poison will adhere which, if put on a cat's tongue, will throw her into convulsions and kill her in a few minutes. Of course what will kill cats will not prolong human life.

Some soldiers in the East Indies bound tobacco under their arm-pits, making themselves severely ill, in order to shirk duty. A woman, wishing to cure a child's cold, put a plaster of snuff and lard on its chest; but it died in a short time in consequence. A sensitively organized French poet was made seriously ill by inhaling the flavor [?] of a tobacco field which he passed.

Thoughtless fathers smoke in the room where little children are, often weakening their eyes by so doing. Most loafers, rowdies, thieves and blackguards use it, and for decent sensible men to use it is too bad. Why do you do it? It is no good, never was, and never will be.

I have intimated it was poison. The following is from an excellent medical work, viz., "New England Popular Medicine":—"The active property of tobacco consists of an essential oil, a few drops of which cause instant death. . . . But notwithstanding its poisonous effects, it is in daily use as a sedative and anodyne. Does the human race need such an incessant carminative? Do the vital powers require this constant stimulant? Must the flame of life be daily extinguished, to a certain extent, to support existence? Is not human life supportable without it? Must a stream of smoke and of nauseous saliva from the mouth be continually kept up to get through the day with comfort?"

Prof. O. S. Fowler says in his own most earnest language:—

"Tobacco is a powerful, pungent irritant, a rank, narcotic poison; it inflames the organism, vulgarizes the passions, and deadens the moral tone. To chew or smoke at all, proportionally sensualizes, begets spitfire irritability, unclean amatory, and other morbid desires, blunts intellect, and deteriorates offspring. Why the discharge of so much saliva manufactured right out of red blood, but because so obnoxious? Besides, how utterly vile and loathsome! What would hire you to retake into your mouth one of these vile pools you discharge! Yet are they really more nauseating and utterly filthy after than before their discharge? Just those very same arguments in kind, though less in degree, you apply to alcoholic intemperance, apply also to tobacco intemperance. Does not this often cause that by throwing the whole being into a fevered, hankering, half-crazed state? What are your horrible morning tremors but nervous reaction consequent on its ravages? Does it not, like alcohol, produce actual delirium tremens? and, by precisely the same means, racking the nervous system and brain? And the more you must have it, the greater damage is it doing your body, intellect, and morals. And this you know, admit, yet chew on! Are you, then, so very worthless, even in your own eyes, that you thus wantonly deprave your own spirit-life itself? Why will you thus, your own self, cripple your noble capabilities, your godlike attributes? Be entreated, for example's sake, for family's sake, especially for your own sake, to abandon a practice so vile, so self-destructive; nor ever allow any thing to pass the threshold of your lips except what may harmlessly permeate your entire system."—Phrenological Journal, Vol. xix. No. 3.

Its use tends to insanity, in a greater or less degree, as the following extract from a speech before the French Academy of Science shows:—

"It has been proved that the increase of lunacy in France has kept pace with the augmentation of the revenue from tobacco. From the years 1812 to 1832, that tax produced 28,000,000, and the lunatic asylums of the country contained 8,000 patients. The tobacco revenue has now reached the sum of 180,000,000, and there are no less than 44,000 paralytic and lunatic patients in the various hospitals devoted to their accommodation. This parallel has been drawn by M. Jolly, and laid before the Academy of Science. The last words of his speech on that occasion are worth recording, in this age of universal smoking; and young boys, to whom this pernicious practice has not yet become second nature, would do well to reflect, ere it be too late, on the frightful warning the above statistics contain, as well as on M. Jolly's words. He says:—'The immoderate use of tobacco, and more especially of the pipe, produces a weakness in the brain, and in the spinal marrow, which causes madness.'"

It is expensive. Millions of dollars are thrown away on this poison every year. It is outrageously wicked! I might give the details of its cost, with the figures, but it is unnecessary. I know an old gent who chews over 25 cents' worth per week, and he "can't afford" to take a weekly newspaper at $1.50 per year!

Boys use tobacco because they see older persons using it generally, thinking it manly to ape this habit of their elders. It is more monkey-like to imitate the traits of others. Sometimes when hunters wish to catch monkies, they go where they are to be found, and wash their faces in view of the monkies; then leave a pan of warm glue, and go off. Soon the monkies come down from the trees, and wash their faces in this glue; consequently their eyes get stuck together, when they fall an easy prey. So youngsters who imitate older persons in using tobacco become blind to its deadly effects, and fall a prey to its power at last.

I read of a man who shaved himself before a monkey, against which he had a spite. When he finished he drew the back of the razor across his throat, and went out. The monkey thought he would shave himself too, and when he finished drew the razor across his throat, but the edge not being turned where the back was, his throat got cut. Now you, youngsters, if you imitate men in tobacco using, perhaps it may turn with you as it did with the monkey above named. Do not, for pity's sake, use it. In the name of all that is decent, right, and noble, flee from it.

I might say more of its deadly effects, its filthiness and uselessness; but I have said enough, perhaps, here. So it remains for you to do what is right about it. J. N. BERRY.

CATARRH AGAIN.

J. Nelson Babb, from western New York, writes wishing me to give through the Crisis information relative to the kind of hemlock I had reference to in my remedy for Catarrh. I would say I did not mean the poison hemlock, or scicuta, which Socrates drank; but the common forest hemlock.

Dry the leaves, smoke them in a common clay pipe three times a day. It has cured, will cure, when every thing else fails.

CHRISTIAN MUSINGS.

A hymn found in an English cottage. Author unknown.

In the still silence of the voiceless night,
When, chased by airy dreams, the slumbers flee,
Whom, in the darkness, doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee?

And if there be a weight upon my heart
Some vague impression of the day foregone,
Scarce knowing what it is, I fly to Thee,
And lay it down.

Or if it be the heaviness that comes
In token of anticipated ill,
My bosom takes no heed of what it is,
Since 'tis Thy will.

For O, in spite of past and present care,
Or any thing beside, how joyfully
Passes that almost solitary hour,
My God, with thee!

More tranquil than the stillness of the night,
More peaceful than the silence of that hour,
More blest than any thing, my spirit lies
Beneath Thy power.

For what is there on earth that I desire,
Of all that it can give or take from me,
Or whom in heaven doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee!

For the World's Crisis.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

EDITOR OF THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

Dear Brother:—If it be inquired on what ground we aver the prominence of the year 1866 among prophetic periods or epochs, the reply is ready and simple. The whole compass of 1260 years takes an origin of computation from 606, as a point which derives its great prophetic value from the actual constitution of the Papacy into a system. Other eras had marked value and interest, as periods of sudden development, in which the growing and irrepressible papal element manifested the startling signs of its advancement toward perfection. In the fulness of time, after a steady growth of centuries, and periodical evolutions of accumulating energy, the monstrous consummation was reached. The stature of mystery, disengaged from every fetter and restraint, rose to its feet, and stood forth imperial as the head and form of the predicted apostasy.

The aggregate of elements so long actively following their affinities, and entering into a structure, was complete,—the fabric was finished. A line of Popes began, which has continued substantially without intermission until now. From Boniface III., we look along the proud and terrible array, ending in Pius IX., and observe with emotions which it would be strangely unnatural and singular for a christian not to feel, and which it might be difficult to describe,—indeed, what do we observe? We see, with a distinctness which cannot be obscured by any possible sophism, that the 1260 years are now ending. The long and formidable file of hierarchical potentates suddenly stops. The procession is arrested, not by some fortuity which the potent resources of the church or of Satan can remedy, but by the irreversible decree of the Almighty. Let us thoughtfully inquire if the hitherto seemingly endless length of antichrist's spiritual princes can be prolonged beyond the term defined in prophecy, and determined in the counsels of eternity.

This fixed and inevitable year of fate, this august epoch, this solemn crisis, then, we have surely reached. Is it hard for faith to realize the identity of the grand and critical year? Or is it not rather a sinful folly and fear of unbelief to surmise that the pomp and file of popes can go on a single hair's breadth beyond the line which the King of heaven has established? Long drawn as is the record from the first supreme ecclesiastic who derived his official eminence from the imperial tyrant at Constantinople, we see in the feeble incumbent who sits trembling at Rome the undoubted terminus of the line. Assailed with forebodings, and the prey of fears and doubts, which find no solution in any quarter of the political heavens, well may this last of Rome's thunderers, after a few vain fulminations of impotent wrath, anxiously look about for a place where he may, if possible, peaceably lie down and die. How sublime indeed is the era of our life, the passing year, the current tide of successive months and weeks! How intent must be the faithful watchman's eye! how responsible the watchman's post!

Only second to the interest with which the dissolution of the system of the Papacy is watched, is the scrutiny that follows the ambitious disposition of the French Emperor. How his executive ability shall direct the mighty elements in this impending crisis, and how he shall compel them to subserve his personal interest, is a study worthy of the observation of the wise. Who can contemplate the approaching exigency without the most lively emotions? And who can suppose that such a change in the religious system of vast populations, and innumerable votaries, will not involve vital political transformations, affecting society and government all over the world? And who does not know that the civil power, in the person of its imperial head and executive, must have audacity, alertness, profundity and persistence, to meet an issue, to survive and master it, like the actual and complete decadence of the Romish papal hierarchy?

Shall we suppose that this issue has not been calculated, in respect to inevitable perils and universal thunder-jars? Yet whatever earthquake may follow the fall of the headship of the Catholic church, it is altogether probable that the immediate issues and political incidents have been carefully and profoundly studied by the Gaelic master of political art and craft, and to the winds uncapped will the masts and canvass of the Napoleonic ship be so shaped as at first not only to outride the storm, but be borne by it to the coveted apex of European, if not universal, pre-eminence. In other words, it remains to be seen whether the Papacy is not speedily Napoleonized; whether the next Pope is expressly an adjunct to French imperialism; whether a Pope to come after Pius IX., will be a Satan's masterpiece in the form of a Spiritualist!—whether Napoleon himself will be an impersonation of papal and imperial power and dignity combined; or whether with a confederate he will in the crisis of a mighty transition move to take the front, and so subject the dangerous and unsettled elements as to secure the achievment of universal dominion; these, and other kindred inquiries rise rapidly to the mind on the survey of a future so indisputably portentous and imminent. And if ever prophecy, in the evolution of current and the prospect of impending events involving the coming and glory of Jesus,—if ever prophecy had attractions to entice inquiry; if it ever was imposing with the assurance of truth and reality; if it ever had power to move the soul by the majestic march and grand proportions of near and great events; have we not reached the time? Shall we ignobly lie down to a slumber of wicked unbelief, in the very presence of changes and agitations which must involve and envelope earth, while the Lord of glory, as it were, poised with his chariots and powers around him, in the heavenly zenith, seems at the instant of advance on his flaming journey to change the ready quick, and raise the sleeping dead? O, sight most incongruous! O, error most daring and wonderful and flagrant of incredulous apathy and slumber of christians, at the very hour of time's dread climacteric, at the crisis of earth's parturition and redemption! Rouse thee, sleeper, lest the Lord come suddenly like a thunderbolt upon thee, in thy guilty supineness and presumptuous repose!

Venturing to digress a little from the preceding line of remark, let us for a moment glance at one or two dangers that peculiarly menace our own American republic. First, should be remarked, an imminent financial peril. It has been truly said that the aggregate of all our obligations, state and national, incurred through the late war, surpasses that of any other nation on the globe. A well known citizen of this State (N. Y.), in a recent speech at Chicago, reckons the sum of all the debts and expenses, losses by fire and flood and gunpowder, and every agent for the depreciation of property, at not less than ten thousand millions of dollars! This estimate may possibly be too large, but we can not be ignorant of the rather prevalent disposition to under-estimate the total pecuniary liabilities and injuries resulting from the fearful strife. Dr. Hatfield, of Chicago, with great reason predicts a financial crash, as a legitimate consequence of the general extravagance and recklessness, itself the natural and merited penalty of criminal improvidence, and the vehicle and testimony of the Divine displeasure.

Let us suppose for example a rapid and universal reduction of values. What must be the result to such as have invested their available means in immense accumulations of merchandise? And this especially in connection with large outstanding and pressing liabilities. Let such a reduction extend to the manifold productions of husbandry, and the farmer who now pays his heavy taxes without great difficulty, will inevitably experience an embarrassment to which he has been hitherto an utter stranger. Let every allowance be made for the recuperative energy and the restless and fertile enterprise of the American people; yet with returning rates of revenue for agricultural labor current before the war, it must be a necessity almost insuperable to meet the steady and heavy drain of taxation. Well may the comptroller of the State of New York indulge in language of apprehension in face of an incubus of State debt exceeding fifty millions!

Add to this the astonishing mania for the construction of public works requiring large outlays; the imperative demands upon the public treasury for the relief and restoration of the almost ruined South; the immense losses which must be incurred by capitalists and insurance companies,—from the unparalleled prevalence of shipwrecks, fires, collisions and explosions, as well as enormous defalcations, robberies, and wicked misappropriations of wealth;—and when it is remembered and acknowledged that, with the most elaborate forethought, it is impossible to realize absolute security from financial disaster at certain periods in the history of nations; we may not be reckoned rash or irrational in pointing out a financial convulsion at hand far transcending in magnitude any that has preceded it.

Though such a prediction may ill accord with the worldly will or wisdom of men; though it may be scorned or scouted as mythical and preposterous; though it may be derided as a vagary or hypochondriasm; it is at least well to honestly appreciate the worst, and be prepared for it. It cannot be unprofitable knowledge to know the truth, and understand the meaning of that solemn and pregnant prophecy, "In the last days, perilous times shall come."

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

NUMBER ONE.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." "And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and her light was like unto a stone, most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel; on the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth four square, and the length is as large as the breadth; and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal."—Rev. 21: 1, 2, 9–16.

We understand that this measure of the city is its entire circumference; for the announcement is made when this city was measured that all sides are alike—length, breadth and height. The ancient custom of measuring cities was to begin at the corner and go entirely around, and not simply to measure one side. The measure of the city was twelve thousand furlongs. At eight furlongs to the mile, it would be fifteen hundred miles. This being the entire circumference of the city, one-fourth of it would give us the length of either side—three hundred and seventy-five miles. This is a great city. This is the Jerusalem which Paul says "is above" and "is free, which is the mother of us all."

This is the city that Abraham looked for, "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." This is the Father's house, in which Christ said "there are many mansions." It is the place he was going to prepare for his saints prior to his coming again to receive them to himself. "And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel." This we suppose to refer to the height of the wall, for he has already given us the length and the breadth. Eighteen inches to the cubit would give the height of the wall at two hundred and sixteen feet. "And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold like unto clear glass."

And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was "jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst." These twelve stones are the foundation of the wall, but the wall is of jasper, as we have already shown.

JASPER. "A precious stone of various colors, as purple, cerulean, green."—Greenfield. "Mostly green."—Robinson. "Of a beautiful bright green color, sometimes clouded with white, and spotted with red or yellow."—Clarke.

SAPPHIRE. "A precious stone of a blue color, in various shades."—Robinson. "A bright gem, properly, of pure blue."—Cobbin. "Perfectly transparent."—Clarke. "Of a beautiful azure or sky-blue color, almost as transparent and glittering as a diamond."—Stuart.

CHALCEDONY. "The name of a gem generally of a whitish, blueish, or smoky-green color, susceptible of a high and beautiful polish."—Greenfield. Some Greek MSS. read carbuncle instead of a chalcedony. Carbuncle "is a very elegant gem of a deep red color, with an admixture of scarlet. From its bright lively color, it had the name carbunculus, which signifies a little coal; because when held before the sun it appears like a bright burning charcoal."—Clarke.

EMERALD "is one of the most beautiful of all the gems, and is of a bright green color, without any other admixture."—Clarke.

SARDONYX. "A precious stone exhibiting a milk-white variety of the chalcedony, intermingled with shades or stripes of sardian or cornelian" (flesh color).—Robinson.

SARDIUS. "A precious stone of blood-red and sometimes flesh color."—Greenfield.

CHRYSOLITE "is of a beautiful yellow color, and is so called by the ancients from its looking like a golden stone."—Cobbin.

BERYL "is of a blueish green, and very brilliant."—Cobbin.

TOPAZ "of the present day seems to be reckoned as yellow, but that of the ancients appears to have been green."—Stuart.

CHRYSOPRASUS. "Its color is commonly apple-green, and often extremely beautiful."—Cleveland.

JACINTH. "A precious stone of deep red, with a mixture of yellow. It is the same as the hyacenet, or cinnamon stone."—Clarke.

AMETHYST "is a pure rock-crystal, of a purplish-violet color, and of great brilliancy." —Chambers.

Stuart says of these precious stones: "There is a classification, therefore, in the arrangement; a mixture not dissimilar to the rainbow, with the exception that it is more complex." This forms the foundation of the wall of the city. That wall is itself bright green, spotted with red and yellow. In addition to this, it is transparent, so it will admit the rays of different colors to pass through it which emanate from the stones, and emit light of themselves. Here is a scene of beauty, indeed; but when we contemplate still further, in addition to this, the glory of God, which will outshine the sun, we have a wall of such splendor as is far beyond the conception of mortals. "And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl. And the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass." "And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass." The wall will be clear as glass, pervious to the light, clear, open. The golden street will be clear and smooth; walk barefoot, and it will not hurt us.

"And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." The glory of God will outshine the sun that its rays will give no light in the city. The prophet Isaiah says: "The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold."—Isa. 30: 26. Again, speaking of this same time he says: "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 23. This refulgent light, shining on those most precious stones, will cause them to sparkle and glow and shine forth such as by human sight hath never yet been seen. "And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the (new) earth do bring their glory and honor into it."

This city will be the Capital city on the new earth, into which all the nations of them that are saved shall come to offer their tribute of praise to the Lord. "And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there. The glory of God and the Lamb," and the sun will shine seven-fold, and the moon will shine bright as the sun; with all together, it will be so bright that darkness will not be there. How beautiful it will be there! In chap. 22, we have the river of life, "clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life"; (or, the woods of life; each tree will yield her fruit according to its month; and the leaves of the woods will preserve the health of the nations.—Martin Luther.) "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life (or the woods), and may enter in through the gates into the city."

O brethren, do not be "overcharged with the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares"; if it does come upon you unawares, you will be shut out of that beautiful city. Watch and pray always, so when the Lord comes he will find you ready. The Lord is soon coming to gather together his children from off this earth, and to give them eternal life.

ELISHA SLAGER.

North Andover, Mass.

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX.

The common christian mind is not awake as it should be to the blessed hope of the Savior's return, to the nearness of that sublime event, to the object and intent of it, to the concentration of all our expectations as christians upon it. Many are dreaming of the conversion of the world, of a millennium of peace and blessedness to be brought about by human efforts, of transfer to the full fruition of glory by death, not understanding that Christ must first come, raise the saints that sleep, translate his waiting church, destroy Antichrist by the manifestation of his presence, and tread down Satan under his feet. These errors need to be combated, and the truth set forth.

The plain prophecies of God need to be brought out, and the notes of warning in them rehearsed, and our whereabouts in the calendar of time made plain. Most of the pulpits are silent on these themes. The religious denominational press has scarcely any thing to say about them. And the whole world is hastening to the judgment, and on the very margin of the great day of God Almighty, without the least consciousness of the fact. Here and there a few men are awake, and trying to awaken others. But the spirit and fashion of the day are against them. Many earnest minds are eager to hear them, but are discouraged by those in whose spiritual charge they have been placed.

Ecclesiastical authorities are impatient of the subject. Many ministers, whose hearts are burdened with the message God has given them to declare concerning it, are gagged by their congregations, and required to keep silence, or have the bread taken from their children's mouths. And the blessed truth of God, which the Almighty has given to make men wise unto salvation, is thrust aside, or overlaid with dreams of philosophy, or explained away by the subtleties of human invention. * * * * * *

The clock of time has just struck another hour. Who knows but it may be the last that shall find us in this sphere of toils and tears! The minds, and hearts, and passions, and hopes, and fears of men, have been surging to and fro. Events big with wondrous changes have been crowding on each other. The mightiest forces, conflicting, and flushed with unwonted activity, have been breaking away from their old restraints. And so trackless, complicated, strange and ominous is the whole scene of things about us and the world over, that it would seem as if nothing could now much longer delay the end.

We pause upon the margin of 1866, and feel, as the students of prophecy have been giving out for ages, that it must bring forth occurrences of unwonted significance and moment to the church and to the race! Nor need we be surprised if among them should be the resurrection of "the dead in Christ," and the catching away to the clouds of those who are looking for his coming. The prophetic dates are all rapidly converging to their close. Signs of various sorts are multiplying on every side.

False Christs are appearing. We have just received certain printed documents proposing the re-organization of society, from one who announces himself as "The Promised Son of Man." He propounds his scheme as "the world's desired, prayed for, and expected kingdom of and from heaven." He says, "Jesus, and the Christ in him, came the first time to preach about the kingdom spoken of by the prophets, which has been repeated unto this day; but now, having received the kingdom, and returned in the present Son of Man, I come not to preach about it, but to set it up, practically, without money, hire, or price, that the praying for it may be answered and ended."

Is not this in the direct line of the Savior's words, that, as the day draws near, "there shall arise false Christs, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." And if a man in this christian land can thus assume divine and Messianic prerogatives and honors, what is there unlikely in the idea that the successful and mighty democratic Emperor, who now stands at the head of this world's power, may presently be revealed in all the blasphemous characteristics of that Man of Sin who is to "sit in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God"?

Verily we are in the last days. What we do we must do quickly.—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

THE DECREE NOT ABOLISHED.

Some think that the decree of Cyrus was abolished by Artaxerxes; but the expression, "until," as used by Artaxerxes (Ezra 4: 21), declares that his instruction was not to put a stop to the work which his father had commanded the Jews to do, but only to adjourn it "UNTIL" a given time. Hence at the expiration of the time "until," to which they were to cease to build, the Jews, without asking the privilege of Darius, again resumed their work (Hag. 1: 14), and when asked a reason for this, they appealed to the decree of Cyrus (Ezra 5: 13), which would have been of no worth had that decree been abolished. And when the enemies of the Jews desired to put a stop to the work, "search was made in the house of the rolls" for the decree of Cyrus (Ezra 6: 1), which would not have been done had that decree been abolished.

So far from Artaxerxes having abolished the decree of his father, neither he nor any other king of Persia had the power to do this; "For the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse." (Esth. 8: 8.) Hence, when the decree of Cyrus was found, Darius knowing that he could not stop the work which Cyrus had commanded to be done, wrote, saying, "Let the work alone." "Let the . . . Jews . . . build this house of God in his place." (Ezra 6: 7.) Indeed, to say that Artaxerxes abolished the decree of Cyrus is to contradict the word of God, which saith, "They builded and finished it according to the commandment of Cyrus." (Ezra 6: 14.) But even if the decree of Cyrus had been abolished the next day, and Jerusalem had never been built, we would yet be restricted to the day on which Cyrus issued the commandment for the date from which the sixty-nine weeks were to be reckoned, for they date not from the building of Jerusalem, but "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

THE GIFT OF GIFTS.

"Rich dews of grace come o'er us
In many a gentle shower,
And brighter scenes before us
Are opening every hour."

The gift of all gifts, the gift of prayer, the spirit of prayer. What is it, what its value? can you tell, reader, how precious this gift is, the gift of prayer, the spirit of prayer—to have power with God, as Jacob had, to prevail with the Almighty? Such a gift cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, the precious onyx or the sapphire. Man knoweth not the price of it. Silver cannot purchase it, neither gold, millions on millions!

A man that prays well, prevailingly, preaches well, lives well. A man that prays in the Spirit, always, with all prayer and supplication, watching thereto, with all perseverance and supplication for all saints, is a holy man, a consecrated man, a very useful man. To have a spirit of prevailing prayer with God, we must live in the Spirit, walk in the Spirit, crucify the affections and lusts, live soberly, righteously, godly, "lift up holy hands everywhere, present the body a living, continual sacrifice." No one can pray this acceptable, prevailing prayer in the Spirit, while regarding iniquity in the heart, living in pride, lust, self-conceit, worldly conformity. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "He that turneth away from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination." "Whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." John 3: 22. To pray in the Holy Spirit prevailingly, our bodies must be temples of the Holy Spirit—every idol must be cast out. We must, as the apostle says, "have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, . . . drawing near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith; having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."

The only way to obtain this precious, inestimable gift of gifts, the spirit of prevailing prayer with God, that takes no denial, is to live wholly for God, consecratedly: abstaining, not merely from evil, but from the very appearance of it.

Who ever knew any one in the full enjoyment of this gift of gifts, the most precious of all gifts, a spirit of prevailing prayer, with a heart of lust, pride, covetousness, self-conceit, a sensualist, a slave to appetite and passion, a wine-bibber, an habitual chewer, snuffer, or smoker of the vile Indian weed—with one tipped off in gay, fashionable costume, in gewgaws, artificials, tinkling ornaments, gold, pearls, and costly array—with novel-readers, pleasure-seekers, or in those who grind the faces of the poor? As soon expect the Holy Spirit to take up his residence in the silver shrines of Demetrius, in gods of silver, gods of gold, wood, or of stone, the work of men's hands. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?"

David, the sweet singer of Israel, had this blessed gift, the spirit of prevailing prayer. How did he get it, retain it? Hark! "I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word." "I will wash my hands in innocency; so will I compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works." Psa. 26: 6, 7. Reader, will you have this gift of all gifts the most precious, this blessed, superlative, crowning gift of prevailing prayer with God? Live for God, wholly for God; come out, be separate, touch not the unclean thing; lay all upon God's altar, keep it there, forever. Then you will rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, prevailingly, and in everything give thanks.

"Nor prayer is made on earth alone;
The Holy Spirit pleads;
And Jesus, on th' eternal throne,
For sinners intercedes."

"O Thou, by whom we come to God!
The Life, the Truth, the Way,
The path of prayer thyself hast trod,
Lord, teach us how to pray!"

A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

In this number we are to give the scriptural meaning of the undying worm and unquenchable fire. We will now introduce a few passages of Scripture, and go into the investigation of them. Let us turn to Matt. 5: 29, 30: "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell," or gehenna. Shall we say that the words "whole body," mean the immortal soul? We have just as good a right to call it the immortal soul, as we should have to call death, the wages of sin, eternal life in misery. In both cases we should be charging inspiration with a falsehood, and changing the word of God into a lie. But what are the facts in the case? The facts are simply these: Mark 9: 43–48, and Matthew 5: 23–30, plainly show that the Savior meant the whole person, and not a part of the man; for the mention of cutting off the hand, or foot, shows very clearly that the whole being of the sinner is to be wholly and totally destroyed at the great judgment day.

But, says the objector, it is a figurative representation of the sufferings of an immortal soul in hell to all eternity. Then the immortal soul has hands and feet that can be cut off, and eyes that can be plucked out and cast away from the main part of the soul; and if the immortal soul is thus dismembered for the sake of salvation, of course it must go into heaven in that situation or condition, and in that case, only a part of the soul is saved at last; for the foot that is cut off is thrown away, and of course that part of the soul is thrown away and lost.

Says the objector, the worm never dies, and the fire never shall be quenched. Then, of course, the worm is immortal, if it is a literal worm. But we do not believe that any of the worms are made immortal in order to gnaw upon the immortal soul. But, says one, it means the conscience. Then, of course, it must be an immortal conscience that lives separate and outside of the immortal soul, in order to torment the soul by gnawing it, the same as worms gnaw wood, or dead carcases.

We think the unquenchable fire and the undying worm are the very strongest figures in the whole Bible to represent the entire destruction of the ungodly; and we think the whole person is meant when we are told that "the soul that sinneth it shall die;" for we find in Luke 9: 25, the question is asked, "What is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" Here the word "himself" is translated soul, in Matt. 8: 36, 37, when, in fact, it should have been translated life, or person.

Now we will see why the unquenchable fire and undying worm came to be made of use in the Savior's teachings. He often referred to the prophecies concerning himself, and of course was familiar with them. Isa. 66: 24, "And they shall go forth and look upon the carcases of the men who have transgressed against me: for their worm dieth not, (or shall not die); neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Now does it make those dead carcases immortal, because there was a fire kept burning in the valley of Tophet, near Jerusalem, to burn up the filth of the city, and the carcases of criminals, which were not wholly eaten up by worms?

Look at Isa. 34: 9, 10. Here the Lord, by the prophet, declares the judgment which should be executed upon the land of Idumea, and says, "The streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch; it shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever." All this did not make the land, or the inhabitants of that region, immortal. In Jer. 17: 27, the Lord said, "I will kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched." Here is unquenchable fire brought to view; but it did not make the city gates immortal.

In Jer. 7: 20, we have brought to view the anger of the Lord, as unquenchable fire, when he threatens the entire destruction of those of his people, the Jews, who would not obey his commands. But we cannot think that God's anger made any of those wicked Jews immortal. Look at Jer. 21: 12, where the prophet speaks of God's fury going forth like fire, and burning that none could quench it. But this was an unquenchable fire in reality, yet it did not make the house of David, or the disobedient people, immortal.

All those figures of unquenchable fire convey nothing less than entire destruction, or annihilation of every person or thing that was thrown into it.

THE GOOD MASTER.

A colored man was once laboring by the side of the road. A traveler came along and stopped to look at him. The black man was stout and well, and could do hard work.

The traveler, perhaps, thought he would like to have such a strong black man for a slave. So he began to talk with him; and their talk was much like this:

Traveler. "Will your master sell you?"

Laborer. "No, my master wont sell me."

L. "Are you sure your master wont sell you at any price?"

L. "Yes, I am sure he wont sell me at any price."

T. "Who is your master?"

L. "My master is Jesus Christ. He will never sell me,—he never sells any of his servants."

The traveler could say no more, for the black man was a free man, free by the law of the land, and free by the gospel of Christ. And he knew very well that when Jesus Christ had bought a servant he never would sell him again.

It is very sad to have a bad master; to be whipped, and cursed, and abused, and starved. It is better to have a good master, who is kind, and gentle, and tender-hearted.

But many kind masters have become poor, and sick, and have died; and then their servants have been parted, and sold where they would never meet in this world.

Jesus Christ is the best master. He is kind, he is gentle, he is loving, he is good. He never gets poor. He never grows old. He never is sick. He never will die. His servants never will be sold.

Jesus Christ is my master. He bought me with his own blood. I was a sinner, and must die. He came and died for me. He suffered for sins, the just for the unjust. He buys all his servants. He pays their debt, and then offers them free pardon, if they will trust in him. And so he makes us free. Is Jesus Christ your master?

A great many freedmen are slaves still. Many white men are slaves. They are slaves to the devil. They work hard; they get poor pay. Some are slaves to bad habits; to rum, to tobacco, to snuff, to sins, to many vile and wicked things.

They do things they did not mean to do. They are sorry for doing things, and then go and do the same again. They think they are free, but they are slaves to the devil, and their wicked old master hurries them round, and cuts them up, like a drunken overseer in cotton picking time. And they cannot get free if they try. The are "sold under sin." They have the Devil for a master, the Flesh for an overseer, Sin for work, and Death for pay. If you are the devil's slave I pity you.

But Jesus Christ can deliver you. Go to him and give yourself up to him, and he will take you, and make you free. And then he will help you to get free from all your bad habits and wicked ways, so you will be free in Christ.

I once heard of an Indian who drank rum till he found rum was a hard master. It made him crazy, and ugly, and sick, and poor. So he made up his mind he would drink no more.

He put his bottle of rum up on the shelf, and when he came into the house he would take it down and shake it, and say, "Ah! I am your master." And then he would put it back without tasting a drop of it. So he got free from it.

Rum is a bad master. Tobacco is a bad master. The devil is a bad master. Jesus is a GOOD MASTER. He never sells his servants. I have taken him to be my master; is he your master? He has died for you. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, and ye shall find rest to your souls; for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Though Christ is our Lord and Master, he has taken a servant's place. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many,—a ransom for all,—to be testified in due time.

He has died for you. He gave his life for you. Oh, have him to be you master. Serve him here, and live with him forever. God grant it, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

H. L. H.—The Christian.

☞ It is a suggestive fact that, while infidels have presumed to mock the Law-giver and Him who has redeemed us from the curse of the law, they have never touched the LAW itself. The perfection and glory of the Ten Commandments stand before the civilized world unimpeached as a perfect rule of right and wrong.

☞ The Bible, which contains the dealings of God with man, from the creation to the advent and ascension of Jesus Christ, is so wonderfully concise that it can be read through in the brief period of sixty hours!

THE PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We have received over five hundred new subscribers since the 1st of December, a large proportion of which are due to the offer of premiums. Many have received their premiums already, and others are still working for the larger ones, with a good prospect of success.

A prejudice seems to exist in the minds of some against this way of getting subscribers, though for what good reason it is difficult to conceive. The whole thing is simply an offer of due compensation for services rendered,—no more, and no less. Yes, it is more,—it is a work of benevolence; for it offers to the poor minister or Bible student an easy way of obtaining, by a little effort, and no expense, a valuable and indispensable book of reference for his library, or a sewing machine for his wife, or for some poor family whose scanty income is hardly adequate to meet their daily wants.

Yet a correspondent thinks "it looks worldly." We have done the same thing, only on a smaller scale, for years, and no one thought it worldly. Standing notices, under the heading, "A Liberal Offer," and under other headings, have appeared in the Crisis year after year, offering, in books and tracts, one third of the amount sent, and in some instances certain specified books, to every one who would send us three or more subscribers with the money for one year. Was that worldly, or wrong? If not, then it is not wrong to enlarge the offer, with greater liberality, to a Sewing Machine or a Dictionary. In principle, both are alike. They benefit all parties, without injuring either, or doing any hurt to public morals.

"But worldly papers use such means." Well, suppose they do. Worldly people wear clothes; but that don't make it wrong for Christians to wear them. The question is—Is the thing worldly or wrong in itself?

"But how can you afford to do this? and why don't you rather put the price of the Crisis down?"

The great cost of printing paper, and other expenses of publication, will not warrant any reduction of price at present. We can afford to offer these liberal premiums only in case that most of the subscribers thus obtained become permanent subscribers. If they do, we shall be gainers in the end, even though we were to suffer pecuniary loss at first.—But it is not pecuniary gain for the Crisis, either now or hereafter, that we seek. It is the enlargement of its usefulness, by the enlargement of its circulation, as a herald of the Lord's coming.

Our co-laborers in this good work, who are already doing what they can, will please bear in mind that the offer of premiums for new subscribers extends only to the 1st of June, and no longer.

THE SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

"A Webster's Dictionary is something that I very much want, and I should be glad if I could make up a list of ten subscribers, so as to obtain it. But those who sympathize with our views are so few here, that I shall be unable to get the number required. The five which I have sent are all I can get."

"With a large family to support, and no dependence but my needle, a Sewing Machine would be a great help to us; and if there were more of our faith in this place, or more who look upon it with favor, I should go to work with some hope of securing it. If the requisite number (32) were not so large, I think I could, as it is; but I must be content for the present, to go without what I so much need."

We have received a number of letters like the above, and to put the Sewing Machine and the Webster's Dictionary within the reach of all who are thus situated, we make the following offer:—

For every $5.00, with five new subscribers, and $2.50 from each for one year, one copy of WEBSTER'S ($12.00) UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

For every $20.00 with sixteen new subscribers, and $2.50 from each for one year, one of GROVER & BAKER'S ($55.00) SEWING MACHINES.

This offer, with the other, extends only till the 1st of June. All names for the Dictionaries or Machines must be sent in before that date.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

Valuable Premiums for New Subscribers! SEWING MACHINES AND DICTIONARIES.

To every one who shall, any time before the 1st of June, send us, with the money, THIRTY-TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for One Year, ($2.50 each), or Sixty-four for Six Months, ($1.25 each), we will send, by express or rail, a

Grover & Baker's ($55) SEWING MACHINE,

one of the simplest, most durable, completest and best, (in our opinion the very best), in the market. A great labor-saving machine and blessing, in the family and work room; and a gift of priceless value, which you can now, with a little effort, present to your thankful wife, sister, mother or daughter.

FOR TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Twenty for Six months, one copy of

Webster's ($12) UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY,

containing 10,000 words and meanings not found in other Dictionaries, over 3000 fine Engravings, and more matter than any other single volume in the world. Invaluable to every student, minister, or general reader.

FOR THREE NEW SUBSCRIBERS, with the money for One Year, or Six for Six Months, one copy, postpaid, of Cruden's Condensed Concordance.

or a Bible Dictionary; either and both of which are indispensable helps in the study of the Scriptures.

The names and monies can be sent in as fast as they are obtained, and when the full number is received, the Gift will be forwarded.

Come, brethren, a general rally from Maine to California! The Judge is at the door; and, with these gifts in view, and the greater reward yet to be given to all who do what they can to prepare a people for his coming, let every one see what he can do.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

WEST HAVEN.

On our way to New York we spent one night in New Haven, Ct., at Bro. Geo. W. Denny's, and held a meeting at West Haven, a pleasant village about two and a half miles out of the city. A good work is in progress there. It began in the prayer meetings held at the house of a colored brother, some ten weeks since. The interest has gradually increased till some twenty have been happily converted, and others are seeking the Lord. Some requested prayers the evening we were there, and we trust the work will not stop yet. They have had no preaching before. A great amount of good might be done if all would go to work as the brethren have done there, and not wait till they can get a preacher before they attempt to do any thing. The Lord's blessings are not confined to the labors of the minister. Let all turn missionaries, and we shall hear glad tidings from all quarters, like those from West Haven.

The word to all is, "Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatever is right, that shall ye receive." We have no time to waste. The harvest is at hand. Let all beware lest they be like the slothful servant who hid his talent.

Dear reader, what are you doing for the Lord? He has done great things for us, shall we not do willingly what we can for him? Come, begin this day, and let no opportunity be lost for doing good.

NEW YORK.

We spent Lord's day, Feb. 11th, in New York City, and had interesting meetings at the chapel in 24th Street, where Bro. Samuel Curry formerly preached as pastor. He is now laboring as an evangelist. We had a pleasant interview with him at Bro. J. T. Howland's. His heart is in the work of the Lord.

We found a healthy state of things in the church worshiping in 24th St. This was formerly a Methodist church, but Bro. Curry has succeeded in showing them the light on the soon coming of Jesus, the resurrection of the dead, the saints' inheritance, and the other great truths of the Bible; so that now they are rejoicing in the "blessed hope."

We had a large audience of very attentive listeners, and quite a number of excellent testimonies after the sermons. The people who came had ears to hear. We find in all directions an increasing interest among the people to know more about the reasons of our hope. There is a deep impression upon many minds that have had no interest in these things till quite recently, that the Lord is really coming soon, and they feel anxious to hear the evidence.

Brethren, it is time to let our light shine. It is a duty we owe to all around. It has been covered already quite too long. The trumpet to awaken the dead is about to sound. Shall we quietly sleep on, and make no effort to save our fellow men? Will Jesus say "Well done" to such?

The church in Twenty-fourth Street, New York, seem resolved to double their diligence in the work of the Lord. They decided to continue their meetings every evening during the following week. They also go out and aid in other places, and the Lord blesses their efforts.

We learned that the church which meets at Cooper Institute is pressing onward and having interesting meetings. They do not wait till the minister comes before they go to work. This is an encouraging feature. We hope an arrangement may be made for a good union effort in that great city. We were glad to find the subject was being agitated. Press it, brethren, to its consummation.

THE DORCAS MISSION.

"The Dorcas Colored Mission," under the care of Bro. F. H. Burbank, corner of Spring Garden and Seventh streets, Philadelphia, is an enterprise worthy of the patronage of all friends of humanity. If his field of labor could be visited by every reader of this article, as it was by the writer, we are sure there would be but one voice, the mission should have the most hearty co-operation of all good people; and more than this, we think every one would feel like doing something towards sustaining the good work in which our brother is engaged. But few, we think, have even a faint idea of the amount of suffering wretchedness there is among the poorest class of people in our large cities. Some have thought that Bro. B's accounts of the shocking condition of many whom he visited, were rather highly colored; but we know from personal observation, that the half has not been told. We never knew before that families in this boasted happy land of freedom, lived in such closets and cellars as we visited in Philadelphia. The buildings outside look bad enough, but oh, what sights within! Single rooms, in dark alleys, or damp cellars, only eight feet by ten, or even seven by five, constituted the parlor, dining room, bed-room, pantry, cellar, closet, etc., of whole families. Their beds consisted of a little worn-out straw, such as but few farmers would think fit to be used for the bed of their swine; and the bedding was but a little pile of filthy rags; all of which might be seen pushed up in the corner, like a mass of shavings and dirt in a carpenter's shop. For these miserable accommodations they have to pay a rent of seventy-five cents a week.

On some of these beds, composed of straw like that taken from a worn-out pig's bed, covered with a few rags, we found some wasting away with disease, hunger and cold, uncared for as the beasts of the field.

Into this sink of humanity, Bro. Burbank is throwing all his energies for the purpose of rescuing these miserable beings from their degraded condition. His labors are abundantly blessed. Some who were the very worst when he first went there, are now happy in the Lord. We have seldom met brighter christians than some whom we found in those hovels, that were hardly fit to shelter sheep and oxen. They are still very poor, but happy in Jesus. Their faith in the Lord, and love for him, would put to blush the lukewarm condition of the great mass of professing christians, in the popular churches.

In conclusion, we wish to say, if any are willing to give to a worthy missionary effort, then help forward the "Dorcas Mission" in Philadelphia. You may be assured that whatever is given will be disposed of in a judicious manner by Bro. Burbank. He is the right man in the right place. If any wish to know what to give, we would say any thing that is needed in a family of men, women and children. They are destitute of almost every thing except a very small, poor stove, a few broken dishes, perhaps one or two broken chairs, or stools, a few rags and a little old straw. They are in special want of children's clothing. We hope many barrels of the comforts of life will be forwarded at once. Direct to F. H. BURBANK, S. W. COR. OF SPRING GARDEN, AND 7th STREETS, PHILADELPHIA, PA. Send him money too. It will not be misapplied.

THE FENIANS.

From facts recently gathered from a private source, we are convinced but few are aware of the gigantic power of the "Fenian movement." While they report but about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in their treasury, for the sake of blinding the people, it is said by those who should know, that they have many millions of dollars, to be used when wanted. It is said they have bought a large proportion of the government ships, and a vast amount of government stores that have been sold by the American government since the war. It has also been ascertained that about one hundred officers, who served in the late war, are now in Ireland, where there are three hundred thousand men ready for action. It is also stated that a large number of the English army, not only in England, but in Canada, and other parts of the world, is composed of men who are in sympathy with the Fenians, and will betray the English in the decisive hour.

SPIRITUALISM.—NO. 8.

THE MORALS OF SPIRITUALISM.

We pass to notice some further facts relative to the moral tendency of Spiritualism. We have read its claims, and found them very high; but there is abundant proof to show that instead of its being "ancient christianity revived," it is the worst enemy christianity ever had to meet. We believe it to be Satan's last grand effort to substitute a false for the true christianity. His snares are laid most ingeniously; and, unless very watchful, ere people are aware of it, they will be caught in some of his traps. Thousands and millions are already his deluded victims, and, like a terrible tornado, he is sweeping with destruction on every side. Occasionally we hear a warning voice from one who has escaped from his power, like a mariner from the sinking wreck; but most, after they once get into the Spiritualist "circle," are like the boatman under the control of the terrible whirlpool on the coast of Norway,—destruction is sure.

The next witness we introduce is Mr. J. F. Whitney, Editor of the New York Pathfinder. He was formerly a warm advocate of Spiritualism, and published much in its favor. He says:—

"Now, after a long and constant watchfulness, seeing for months and years its progress and its practical workings upon its devotees, its believers, and its mediums, we are compelled to speak our honest conviction, which is, that the manifestations coming through the acknowledged mediums, who are designated as rapping, tipping, writing, and entranced mediums, have a baneful influence upon believers, and create discord and confusion; that the generality of these teachings inculcate false ideas, approve of selfish, individual acts, and endorse theories and principles which, when carried out, debase and make them little better than the brute."

Again he says:—"Seeing as we have the gradual progress it makes with its believers, particularly its mediums, from lives of morality to those of sensuality and immorality, gradually and cautiously undermining the foundations of good principles, we look back with amazement to the radical change which a few months will bring about in individuals."

He says in conclusion:—"We desire to send forth our warning voice; and if our humble position as the head of a public journal, our known advocacy of Spiritualism, our experience, and the conspicuous part we have played among its believers; the honesty and the fearlessness with which we have defended the subject, will weigh any thing in our favor, we desire that our opinions may be received, and those who are moving passively down the rushing rapids to destruction, should pause, ere it be too late, and save themselves from the blasting influence which those manifestations are causing."

"FORBIDDING TO MARRY."

Among other instruction of the spirits, the apostle Paul has assured us that they will be opposed to the marriage laws,—"forbidding to marry."—1 Tim. 4: 3.

At the Rutland (Vt.) Reform Spiritualist Convention, held in June 1858, the following resolution was presented and defended:—

Resolved, That the only true and natural marriage is an exclusive conjugal love between one man and one woman; and the only true home is the isolated home, based upon this exclusive love.

The careless reader may see nothing objectionable in the resolution; but please read it again, and observe what constitute marriage, according to the resolution,—"an exclusive conjugal LOVE between one man and one woman." The poison sentiment is covered up by the word "one." What constitutes marriage now, according to the laws of the land? Do we understand that when we see a notice of a marriage in a paper, which took place at a certain time and place, that then the parties began to love each other exclusively? Certainly not; but at that time their love was sanctioned by the proper authorities, and thus they became husband and wife. But the resolution states that the marriage should consist in the "exclusive conjugal love." Then it follows, when either party loves another exclusively, the first marriage is dissolved, and they are married again; and if the other one does not happen to find a spiritual "affinity," then there is no alternative left but to make the best of it, as many have been compelled to do. According to this resolution one is married as often as his love becomes "exclusive" for any particular individual. This is one item in the boasted "new social order," which the spirits propose to establish when the political power is in their hands. It is called by them the "Divorce Law of Marriage." A large number of Spiritualists are already carrying out this resolution practically, regardless of the laws of the land.

A similar resolution was presented at the National Spiritual Convention held in Chicago, from Aug. 9th to 14th, 1864. It was offered by Dr. A. G. Parker, of Boston, Chairman of the committee on social relations. This point is strongly urged by the spirits and Spiritualists.

At the Rutland Reform Convention, which closed June 27th, 1858, the resolution under consideration was earnestly advocated by able men and women. Said Mrs. Julia Branch of New York, as reported in the Banner of Light, July 10th, 1858, when speaking on the resolution:—

"I am aware that I have chosen almost a forbidden subject; forbidden from the fact that any one who can or dare look the marriage question in the face, candidly and openly denouncing the institution as the sole cause of woman's degradation and misery, are objects of suspicion, of scorn, and opprobrious epithets."

She further remarked in the defense of the resolution, and the rights of women,—"She must demand her freedom; her right to receive the equal wages of man in payment for her labor; her right to have children when she will, and by whom."

The Spiritualists established an institution at Berlin Heights, Ohio, adopting "free love" as the law of marriage. In the Age of Freedom, published there, we find an article denouncing marriage as an "odious monopoly of the opposite sex," and expressing a hope that the institution will be wholly abolished, and men and women be brought together according to the "passional attractions" of the moment. This means nothing, and can mean nothing, practically, but indiscriminate and debasing lust.

"The Detroit Free Press gives an account of a young married lady of that city, who, through the influence of a female relative, acting under the inspiration of the 'harmonial philosophy,' was induced to abandon her husband and go with her to the free love community at Berlin Heights, Ohio. Her husband did not ascertain for several weeks whither she had fled. When he learned where she had gone he was greatly distressed, but went at once for her, and found her perfectly willing to go home. She had seen quite enough of free love.

"When there, she found the marvelous 'love cure' but another name for all that is degrading and loathsome to a virtuous and high-minded woman. Low-bred familiarities with vulgar, fanatical men; companionship with women who deemed themselves elevated above humanity in becoming the victims of their own and their companions' lusts, and a close familiarity with a brutish, criminal enjoyment, which was the highest sphere aimed at in this delectable community, were what she was obliged to submit to."

Mrs. Annie Hunter, whose husband founded the institution at Berlin Heights, writes from Jefferson, Ashtabula Co., O., June 5th, 1858, as follows:—

"MR. EDITOR:—I saw an article in the Ashtabula Telegraph, a few days since, taken from your paper, giving an account of the rescue of a young and lovely woman by her husband from the den of infamy at Berlin. I do not know the name of this lady or her husband, but my earnest prayer to God is, that she may never be led into such a temptation again, or be brought to know the depths of sorrow and degradation which that same infamous creed has brought upon me. Let her thank a kind Providence that she is restored to the arms of a loving and kind-hearted husband, and is not this moment, as I am, a deserted and heart-stricken wife and mother, dependent upon my daily labor for the pittance which supports my little ones, and keeps starving from our door.
